Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Which party are you working for tonight?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I think that from where we stand now at this point, we are supposed to be intelligent people. I see by going—

Mr. Henderson: Let us hear this bit of business.

Mr. Sargent:—through this bill that there are any number of amendments that I think I would like to bring about if I wanted to filibuster.

Mr. Henderson: Go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: I do not see any intelligence in going on this way. I would like to move that we rise and report and adjourn the House and come in tomorrow and talk about it freshly.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if this is a motion before the House, I would like to ask the government why must this go through tonight? Why, when it has been sitting on the order paper for a week, is there suddenly the necessity for such haste? You know, a year—

Mr. Henderson: Why must the opposition stop it tonight?

Mr. MacDonald: Will the member listen for a moment? A year ago last December, this minister rose in the House and told us that we had to pass a piece of legislation because research was grinding to a halt in our universities because they did not have animals—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): They have not yet proclaimed the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Yet the minister has not proclaimed the Act 18 months later. The government's credibility is nil in terms of urgency for getting legislation proclaimed. The minister has been sitting on this bill for a week; now why are we being detained here extraordinarily behind—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): The members talk too much.

Mr. Pitman: There is a bright remark.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: He is worse at the front than at the back.

Mr. J. Renwick: Why does the member not go home to Chatham?

Mr. Chairman: I have a motion. I do have a motion; the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has moved that the committee rise and report. Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us vote on it. Why does the government want to waste time in such an assinine way? They have fumbled—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): John Robarts would never do that.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): That is not what the member told—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The question before the committee is Mr. Sargent's motion that the committee rise and report. Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

I should have called for the hon. members to rise. Those in favour of the motion will please rise. Those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 22, the "nays" 43.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost. We must now deal with Mr. Lawlor's motion that subsection 2 of section 1 of Bill 10 be deleted.

Those in favour of Mr. Lawlor's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Is it agreeable that we take the same vote as the previous vote?

I declare the motion lost.

Are there any further questions, amendments, or comments to any other section prior to section 6?

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I rise stripped of my armour, ready to throw in the towel, not because of the lateness of the hour albeit, but because I have been convinced during the recess by the former Attorney General of the rectitude of his ways. I had prepared to talk about being bull-headed and intransigent and what not—I had a list of adjectives here which were perfectly suitable to the last one which you rejected. One that I had before me on this count had to do with entry. It is paragraph (a) of subsection 4 of section 1, having to do with entry.

I felt that section should be subjected to the same scrutiny and the same regulation, as to having reasonable justification for making the entry, as a previous section with respect to search and seizure. Nevertheless, looking at it very carefully, I have come to the conclusion that it is done backwards as usual. It was poor drafting. Surely entry takes place before seizure; surely it has to? Even McRuer says it has to. And where the entry is not specifically looked after in terms of McRuer he says it should be embodied.

He uses the example of The Grain Elevator Storage Act at 410, and he says when you have got entry it should be subject to one of two conditions; either there should be a search warrant or there is a condition precedent requiring seizure.

You would have thought your legislation would have been set up that particular way, but no, you go to the point where entry already having been made, seizure takes place and then you make it subject to reasonable grounds. You pass the regulation before you make the entry, validating the seizure and ipso facto, I suppose, validating the entry.

With that, I will not move my amendment as I intended to do. I think the government, due to a logomachy, and in their own backward way, going out the back door frontward, are quite right and therefore, I sit down.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Proposal is nullus defunctus.

Mr. MacDonald: We are open to rational persuasion. I wish that could be said on both sides of the House.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore has dealt with sections up to and including clause 4.

Mr. Deans: Clause 3.

Mr. Chairman: Clause 3?

Mr. Deans: I wanted to say something, but he had already spoken about it. On clause 3, I want to ask a question.

Mr. Chairman: All right, ask the question.

Mr. J. Renwick: Quiet!

Mr. Deans: I want to ask a question under subclause 3. It says where any regulated product is seized and detained under the section, the local board shall forthwith notify the owner or person who had possession of the regulated product of the seizure and detention and of the release from detention and disposition of the regulated product.

Surely they must also have the responsibility and obligation to notify the person of the reason for the seizure and detention? Surely it is not enough to say, "We have seized and detained your product," without in law having to notify them why?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Deans: Or is that to be found out some day in the obscure future when The Regulations Act is changed? To tell me that you have arrested my wife but not tell me why is hardly of any value to me.

Mr. Breithaupt: They may dispose of her too.

Mr. Deans: They may. You do not think that this Act is poorly drafted?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What did we do to your wife? I was trying to do two things at once.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, this Act is so full of inadequacies and loopholes, and this particular section—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member said he had a question on clause 3.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Change the record.

Mr. Deans: I have asked the question.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member has asked the question. Will the hon. minister care to reply to the question?

Mr. Deans: The minister is not going to reply?

Mr. Chairman: We will then proceed to section 5.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, just one matter on clause 4. I notice that under subsection (a) there is certain power granted to enter any vessel, boat, car, truck and so forth, or any premises other than a dwelling. I am wondering whether the government has decided that it has no business in the store-rooms of the nation. Perhaps we have a problem here of some person who has 10,000 broilers, you know, in the front room of his house—who is to say?

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Give or take a couple of chicks.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe in the spare bedroom.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps the minister can tell me why the dwelling is exempt in this case?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): You are invoking The War Measures Act on the broilers, that is what you are doing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister wish to reply to that question? If not is there any comment, question or amendment to clause 5? We will then move to the amendment before the committee on clause 6, as moved by Mr. J. Renwick, the hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment briefly on the proposed amendment, now that we are resuming consideration of it.

The attention of the House has been focused both on second reading and clause-by-clause discussion of the bill on the broiler question. The government forgets that the ambit of the bill deals with any regulated product under any of the local boards in the Province of Ontario. It does not have any reference in the Act to products coming into the province from other provinces. It is not restricted in scope to that limitation at all. Therefore, what we are simply saying—and we are repeating it and I want to repeat it again—is that an elected board, in which there may very well be a genuine adverse business interest in operation, is here given the power by unpublished regulation—a regulation which is not available to anyone in any formal sense—so that it is known in advance that they can go in and seize and detain a product.

At any point, there does not have to be any suggestion that there has been non-compliance. It would have to have reasonable grounds but it could only be released if the local board is then satisfied that it complies. It should have reasonable grounds in the first instance. We repeat the very same point that we have made before: that whatever the nature of the amendment which is required, it can be done through this bill. It can be done now. It can be done tomorrow morning to provide for the publication of the regulations made by the local board which are then subject to approval by the board.

Mr. Sargent: Question!

Mr. J. Renwick: And then the question of publication comes up. Obviously the government have dug their heels in and are not prepared to accept any amendment. I want to say to the government that this party thinks that it is a serious breach of the principles under which this Legislature is operated. It is a serious breach of the principles of the McRuer report. It is an undemocratic, unauthorized method by which this can be done.

Therefore, we are insisting that the government, before this bill is given Royal assent, will make whatever change is required to satisfy us that publication will be made to the people who may very well be adversely affected by this detention and seizure.

Mr. MacDonald: The last cabinet minister who tried this kind of police state legislation—

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. J. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it. Will it be agreeable to accept the previous vote?

I declare the amendment lost.

Is there any comment, question or amendment to sections 2 or 3 of this bill?

If not, shall the bill be reported?

Bill 10 reported.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House begs to report one bill without amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on the third reading of the bill I want to very briefly reiterate the opposition of this party to the bill, both in the substance of the bill and the points that were made in the course of the second reading earlier today, and in the specific provisions to which we have drawn attention during the course of the clause-by-clause discussion of the bill.

Those are recent events, since the government precipitously decided that this was going to be the way in which they would deal with the bill. I am going, as a last resort, to urge the government again to give some consideration, before royal assent, to their stubborn attitude which has been determined in this bill, in such a way that they will under no circumstances alter a single word in the bill. I want to say to the government that it is losing the confidence of the very gut community on which its life as a government depends. It is losing it and it is going to lose it on this bill. The erosion set in long ago and this government is not able in any way to staunch the flow because of its total incapacity to be anything but rigid, formal and obstinate about this kind of legislation.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Who is obstinate?

Mr. J. Renwick: We are unalterably opposed to the bill and to the manner in which the government has put this bill through this assembly. I say this in the light of the recent debate which took place about it.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with my colleague on this. The government has couched this legislation in the broadest possible terms, not only with respect to interstate or interprovincial commerce but internal, too, with respect to the widest possible range of agricultural products. It does not really mean to do that because its mind throughout this debate has been directed to certain products coming in—namely, broilers from Quebec. When they say that they will take the thing—store the thing—at the expense or the risk of an owner, they really do not mean to do that internally with respect to peaches, or any other number of things that may be operative within the province. They simply do not want to pay for storage of broilers coming in from the outside.

But you do not couch legislation in the present terms when you are directing your stiletto on to a particular product and they should have said so in the beginning—equally with respect to the publication matters that were brought before the House. It is unheard of in British law that you do not have immediate availabilities to publication of the law. They have to be promulgated and known to the public, otherwise there is an abrogation of civil liberties.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Stewart moves third reading of Bill 10.

As many as are in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

As many as are opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

Some hon. members: Same vote.

Mr. Speaker: Same vote? Same vote as which?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I may say that the other votes were taken in committee.

Mr. Speaker: In committee? That is what I was going to inquire about. I thought the votes that were referred to were in committee.

The House divided on third reading of Bill 10, which was approved on the following vote:

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 16, 1971

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning as guests we have, in the east gallery, students from York Memorial Collegiate Institute, Toronto, and St. Norbert Separate School, Downsview; in the west gallery now or later, from Burlington Central High School, Burlington, and members of the Young Women's Christian Association from Lockport, New York; in both galleries, from Westmount Secondary School, Hamilton.

Later this morning, we will have in the galleries, students from St. Mary's Academy in Windsor; Annette Street School in Toronto; Annandale High School in Tillsonburg, and Haliburton Highlands Secondary School in Haliburton.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in recognizing the importance to the public and the persons effectively concerned with the passage of Bill 10, we have prepared, and we will endeavour, as a condition of any approval of the regulations made by the broiler board, to require that these regulations be published in the press.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is that not a great thing?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And we recognize of course—

Mr. Singer: The minister read the book last night; well, that is good.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: But the member did not read the section! Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview very conveniently missed the section of Mr. McRuer's report which says—

An hon. member: He missed the vote, too.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —that The Farm Products Marketing Act had been tried and proved in the Supreme Court of Canada with only one dissenting voice. He missed that point.

Mr. Singer: I said there were 37 points McRuer said the government should change and the minister did not change one of them yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We did!

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): The member for Downsview should have been here last night.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, had he been here last night—he conveniently absented himself from the House last night—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I went with the minister's leader to the baseball game in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He would have heard me refer to the fact that we will undertake, and did undertake last night, not only to review The Farm Products Marketing Act but The Regulations Act which also requires revision as a result of Mr. McRuer's report.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Nobody has missed more of the main points of the McRuer report—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He would also have heard me say, Mr. Speaker, that I had no knowledge that Mr. McRuer's report had even been filed with the government.

Mr. MacDonald: If the minister had asked the law officer of the Crown, he could have told him.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There was no need to ask the law officer of the Crown anything about what was in the report or what was in the legislation because it was a known fact that we had the same requirement in the legislation in Bill 10 as we have in most other Acts that are operated by our department and many other departments of this government. It was there already. And it was simply a situation—

Mr. Singer: Just carrying on the debate.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am carrying it on, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the hon. member for Downsview who felt it was not necessary to be here last night when he was so involved in—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister would make his statement and not indulge in cross-fire.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I made the statement and we will undertake to do that. The Broiler Board is quite willing to publish these, but I want to point out, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: It takes a long time for anything to get through to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—that there is really nothing official about the publication of these in the normal press. It has to go in the Gazette and unfortunately, there is nothing in The Regulations Act to permit us to do that at the present time. We will amend it.

Mr. Speaker: Any further statements by the ministry?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): On a question of privilege, sir: Yesterday, sir, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and myself asked the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs if he would release the report to this House of the hearings that were being held by the Ontario Securities Commission in the matter of Hevenor and Company and Messrs. Feeley and McDermott, and the minister at that time refused. I quote his words: "I do not for a moment say that the full conduct of the investigations is a matter that I would, at this moment, say should be made public."

Sir, within 15 minutes of his refusing to give the House this report, a member of his department phoned three reporters in this city and said, if they would send a taxi, he would give them a copy of the report. Sir, I think this is an abuse of the privileges of the hon. members of this House.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like to read all my remarks, even those he read indicated that I did not refuse to release the report. I said standing here, at that moment, I could not say that it was a report that would be released, but I did go on. If he reads the rest of my remarks in Hansard he will see that I said there may be a great deal of information here which the public should have and, on examination, it would certainly be released to the fullest extent.

Those were my words; the member will find them in Hansard. The report, having been examined, has been fully released.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): It was released without the minister's authority.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It was released with my knowledge, but I did not have a chance to examine it.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The minister did not examine the report?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It would appear to me that the proper mode to deal with these matters would be that the hon. members of this House should have first knowledge of these matters. I would respectfully suggest to the ministry that in the future this course be followed.

Oral questions.

Mr. Lewis: Very uncharacteristic of the minister.

ROYAL ASSENT TO BILL 10

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, further to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, has he arranged with the leader of the government to request his Honour the Lieutenant Governor to give royal assent to this bill today?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: I would ask further if he intends to amend the legislation in the immediate future, calling for the registration of the regulations and their publication within the Ontario Gazette, or is he going to do it in an informal way?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I tried to explain this morning, Mr. Speaker—maybe not with sufficient clarity—that we will have these regulations published in the press.

Mr. Nixon: In the Gazette?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, not the Gazette, because there is no provision of The Regulations Act for the publication of these regulations in the Gazette. We will endeavour to have them published so that people may be aware.

Mr. Singer: Very generous of the minister—on-going.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We certainly will—as I undertook last night—review The Regulations Act. This pertains to many other departments than ours. We will review The Farm Products Marketing Act in the light of McRuer. There will be, obviously, a great many changes to be made, if we are to implement all of Mr. McRuer's report.

I would point out, however, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, that The Farm Products Marketing Act in this province has served the farm people of this province extremely well. To my knowledge, there has never been a case where the abuse of powers has been used by anyone, either on the government side or on the farm products marketing side or by anyone else. This would lead one to believe that it has been a very successful Act in its application to problems it was intended to deal with.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question without regard to the last part of the minister's statement, which I think is probably accepted by most people. I take it he now feels, however, that the regulations both by the board and the local boards as well as the Farm Products Marketing Board should all be in the public domain and it is the minister's responsibility to see that they are?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to do that. I feel, frankly, that it is quite right.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the members of the House that under The Milk Act all regulations of the milk board, which in this case is the local board, are filed under The Regulations Act. The reason they are filed is because the milk board was first of all appointed by this government. It was not an elected body; it was an appointed body. Therefore, their regulations were required to be filed in the Gazette. Since the board is now an elected board they still ask us to approve their appointment by order-in-council—in other words, approve their election by order-in-council—so that their regulations are required to be filed in the Gazette.

The other farm products marketing boards operating under The Farm Products Marketing Act are dissimilar to that situation. We will attempt to bring them in line with that. I am sure no one will object to this at all.

WIRETAPPING BY POLICE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. Has the government got a specific policy requiring the Attorney General to be informed of the decision taken by any police commission regarding wiretapping?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this but I shall check with the Attorney General and get the information for the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ONTARIO HYDRO BOND ISSUE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. Can he give further details to the House on the negotiations with American financial interests to borrow $100 million on behalf of Ontario Hydro? What are the rates of this loan? Why was the decision made that all of the $100 million will be, and in fact must be, spent in the United States?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I cannot give the details as to what the rates will be. What happened last Friday, which is the normal occurrence, was that the loan itself was registered in New York, which is the first formality.

Presumably sometime—and I am not sure of this date—Hydro officials and our own officials meet with our New York managers and determine the rate—it is a matter of negotiation. Then, at that point, the bonds will be offered to the public in the United States or to the lending institutions. This is a process which, I think, takes about a month from start to finish.

The very simple reason why we and why Hydro chose to borrow this money in the United States at this time is that, in our view, that market is receptive to such an offering, perhaps more receptive than our own market.

I think that what is perhaps concerning the Leader of the Opposition is the impact which this might have, or in fact did have, on what is a very sensitive issue now—the value of the Canadian dollar.

We looked at this matter rather closely, which of course is a matter of concern to the Bank of Canada and the government of Canada rather than a specific concern of this government, although we are always glad to co-operate. But we had to point out to the federal government that three provinces have gone to New York within the last two or three months.

And it so happens that this $100 million, when it is received in New York to the credit of Ontario, will never leave New York. It so happens that there is a refunding issue in New York, I believe in the amount of about $400 million; the money which we borrow in May will refund that issue, and then Ontario Hydro will leave the rest of the money there for coal purchases, which will take place within the next few months.

In actual fact, I discussed this with the chairman of Hydro a few days ago, and between refundings, coal and equipment, which it is necessary to purchase in the United States, Ontario Hydro is probably spending something in the neighbourhood of over $200 million in the United States in this year at any rate, and in any given year. So where we borrow the money really does not matter. The money is not going to leave the United States.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Is the Treasurer aware that the last time Ontario Hydro went to the American market it paid for, I believe a $100 million loan at that time, an interest rate of 9.68 per cent, an investment available to the Americans that was far more lucrative than was ever offered by Ontario Hydro, or in fact the government of Ontario, in the home market? Would it not be part of his consideration that at least a part of the loans at these substantially higher rates than are available to investors here might in fact be split off and offered on Canadian markets, because certainly our investors would like to have a piece of that kind of action.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It so happens that particular loan was at the peak of the market.

Mr. Nixon: It so happens that we did not have a chance to get into it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member certainly did. There is nothing to prevent the hon. member from purchasing a bond in the United States.

Mr. Nixon: Why could it not be offered on the Toronto market?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Because at that particular point in time—

Mr. Nixon: You could have got the money cheaper.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —it was deemed advantageous to borrow on the American market.

Mr. Nixon: It was deemed advantageous.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This happens to be on the advice of the people who give advice to this province and to Ontario Hydro as to where, when and how we borrow money. I am not equipped to debate—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister would not debate it at this time in any event, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition, if he has further supplementaries, will rise and place them in the proper order.

Mr. Nixon: I have one further supplementary. Will the minister table a prospectus associated with this particular negotiation as soon as it is available?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I can see no reason why we would not.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce has a supplementary?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, to the provincial Treasurer: In view of the fact that over 40 per cent of all federal funds come from the Province of Ontario, and—

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): A late admission.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, it is very important right now. In view of the fact that on page 3026 of the House of Commons Hansard it shows that the federal government made a $200 million loan to India for 50 years at zero interest last February, it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister of this province and the Treasurer should go to Ottawa—

Mr. Speaker: The member will ask the question.

Mr. Sargent: Why do they not go down there and sit on their doorstep and say, "Why in the hell, if you can give it to India, do you not give Ontario the same deal?"

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Why does the member not come over here?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not strictly supplementary, but if the hon. minister wishes to reply he may.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer is that the supplementary is not necessarily supplementary to the original question, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, I do not think it should go unanswered. Whether this particular loan of the federal government should have been made at a particular point in time perhaps should be debated in another place, in the House of Commons, but I do not think we on this side of the House would want, by not answering that question, to indicate in any way that this government does not support some of the work that this country is doing in all parts of the world.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary: In view of the fact that there are 600,000 people who cannot get jobs in this country, why should $40 billion of our money go to India?

Mr. Speaker: This has nothing to do with the original question. It is out of order. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is ridiculous.

An hon. member: Mr. Speaker is embarrassing his leaders.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor. Order!

LAYOFF OF TEACHERS

Mr. Nixon: In the absence of the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a further question to the Premier on a matter that does involve his responsibility to negotiate with the government of Canada and, in a very real sense, involves his previous responsibility as Minister of Education. What steps are being taken to see that the layoff of qualified teachers in the manpower retraining programmes associated with community colleges is going to be, let us say, either kept to a minimum or stopped?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure just what the most recent step has been as it relates to the responsibilities of this government. I can only say to the Leader of the Opposition that it is one that is giving us very real concern and one which both the Minister of Education and I personally intend to pursue with the federal authorities.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: I think it might be useful if we knew just what the present agreement is with the government of Canada on the payment of the salaries of teachers retained specifically for Manpower retraining purposes? Can the minister tell me if this is a 100 per cent responsibility of the federal Treasury or is the money transferred in block grants to The Department of Education for the support of this educational programme?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it really matters as it relates to this problem. The terms of the agreement are how it is financed. The financing is basically done by the federal government. It is done under the agreement by way of contract. We provide, in many instances, the services at the direction of the Manpower offices and the decision is made by the federal government to restrict or alter the programmes, of course. We are the service part of it and I do not think it really matters how the funds flow through.

The point that has to be made is that we would like to see the programme maintained at its present level. We think, at this precise moment, with unemployment as it exists, it seems a bit of a contradiction to have these programmes restricted. We are taking this up with the federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: Can the minister then tell the House specifically, do provincial authorities hire and fire these teachers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it varies from one programme to another because we have our own Manpower training programme. Sometimes the services are shared, but basically, the responsibility relates to the federal government.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: Since the Premier has stated his views on this, and I would say that I agree with them, we should not be cutting back these services at the present time—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister undertake at least to review the possibility of maintaining the teaching staffs at their present level, or as they were until three weeks ago?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is already under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has a supplementary?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, sir, a supplementary question: In addition to undertaking the review of the teaching situation, would the minister investigate the claim by Canada Manpower that there is inadequate seating capacity—inadequate seats in actual fact—in the retraining programme at Manpower that is keeping people who have been on the waiting list for some time from getting into the programme; would he try to make the facilities available?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will be quite delighted to look into this suggestion from the Manpower officials. This suggestion is in some contradiction, of course, with what is the present policy, and that is, cutting back on the programme. I find it difficult to reconcile the two and certainly will look into it.

Mr. Deans: They are making excuses.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that at the Brantford campus at Mohawk College some of the instructors received only three hours' notice before they were fired, while other instructors were hired only three days before they were fired, can the minister ensure that while he is investigating this thing, he will find out that there is some planning or foresight in the development going on in this area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we, of course, are endeavouring to do so. I do not want to be facetious but it is not always easy for this particular government to determine the planning and the foresight of the federal administration.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, the—

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fact, some days it is impossible.

Mr. Lewis: —the 18, I think it was, the 18—

Mr. Nixon: It is going to run a little thin about the time you go to the polls.

Mr. Lewis: —retraining instructors at Mohawk College who were released, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Those were the Minister of Agriculture and Food's arguments yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: Were they released on the authority of the federal government or were they released on the decision of the community college?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: That is inconsequential.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition any further questions? The member for Scarborough West.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT PURCHASES

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Lands and Forests initially: I wonder if he has been able to get for me the information I requested of him yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has passed me a note that he has that reply, and if this is a new question he may answer it now.

Mr. Lewis: A perfectly appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker: The minister might answer that.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the member yesterday, I have an answer concerning the Niagara Escarpment area.

Since the inception of the land acquisition programme in 1962 we have acquired approximately 16,330 acres within the escarpment. From May to August, 1969, Caledon Mountain Estates acquired four parcels at an average price of $726.75. The 500 acres acquired by the government early in 1971 at $1,450 per acre included the most valuable valley and river land of their substantially larger holdings which had been acquired for development purposes in this area.

As you can see we have actively been acquiring lands for many years along the escarpment and the timing of purchases is a matter of setting priority within the funds available. At that time we were acquiring lands which in our judgement had a much higher priority.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a number of supplementaries Mr. Speaker, the first that strikes me is that surely the minister is not attempting to imply to the House that there was a difference of $700 an acre on the basis of the choice land from those various parcels?

I understand, Mr. Speaker, the minister to say that the difference in effect between $760 and $1,450 is the choice land in those parcels. I have it on authority from a member of the staff of one of the related departments, that we are discussing the same land.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few observations. One is that, with respect to the Gertler report and the recommendations to us, this does not necessarily mean that we have to accept all the recommendations and all the lands that were proposed. We are purchasing those lands that we feel have a very high recreational area.

The lands in question are exceedingly good recreational land for all-year-round purposes. Two or three years ago—we have a limited budget for land acquisition—at that time we had land that had a much higher priority than those lands.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, would the minister indicate where the purchases took place of the land which had the higher priority? Would the minister then indicate to the House what has happened to the 55,000 acres which Gertler placed in priority A, at the time of his report which the minister had in June, 1968—a full year ahead of the private acquisition which we are now discussing!

Would the minister then tell the House further, why it is necessary for the people of the province of Ontario to pay an additional $300,000, almost three years after the event, because of the neglect and the delay of the government in following the Gertler proposals? Can he answer any of those questions now?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we can find instances in land acquisition in many areas in the province where the land has substantially increased over a period of a few years.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, right.

Mr. Deans: Yes, 50.4 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: But you knew that was required.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Again I must repeat, we have a very limited budget and it is impossible to buy all the land that we would like to acquire.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): That is false economy!

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would like to make available to the member as much information as we can. But at the same time there is certain information that should not be released because it has an effect of upgrading, accelerating the price of lands.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, but you knew all the details at the time. Mr. Speaker, does the minister recognize that in the Gertler report there was set out in the Mount Nemo-Caledon Mountain area the acquisition of 7,455 acres of land which would have cost at that time $3.6 million? May I ask the minister why now he has purchased 6.5 per cent of that total land and spent 20 per cent of the money then indicated? How much more inflation will he tolerate by way of land acquisition before the government acts on the Gertler report?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In respect to this whole question of land acquisition, Mr. Speaker, we recommend lands and we have a very limited budget. A lot of the land is purchased by another department and I cannot—

Mr. Lewis: It is really false economy.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Also this land in question is—

Mr. Lewis: We are losing the escarpment in the process.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We could have bought land at a much cheaper price; however, it did not have the high recreational value this land had. This land in question was to be used for subdivision purposes, which commands a very high price, but we felt that this land was most desirable for park purposes.

Mr. Sargent: What does the minister mean “we felt”? His civil servants told him what to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of a final supplementary, since the minister knew about this 505-acre parcel back in 1968, and since he knew he wanted it for park purposes then, would it not have made sense to put certain restrictions on the transfer of land in that area so that the people of Ontario did not end up paying an additional $300,000 or more? And what about the rest of the land which Gertler has advised the minister to purchase?

All right, Mr. Speaker, I shall come back to this on Monday with further particulars. May I ask a question of the Premier, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management not being present?

EXPORT OF ELECTRIC POWER

Has the Premier available the governmental submission to the National Energy Board on the export of power in north-western Ontario? I think the hearings begin on Monday and we hope to have it in the House in advance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the hearing perhaps is to commence on the Tuesday. I do not have the submission here.

ODC DIRECTORS' INTERESTS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development: Are there any procedures governing the board of the Ontario Development Corporation, the six- or seven-man board, to identify any interests or associations members of the board may have either by way of professional or corporate relationships with those companies which do receive and have received forgivable loans?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this is the case, based on conversations I have held in the past few meetings I have had with some of the ODC officials. I think the answer to that would be yes, but I will get the information and make sure that is the answer.

Mr. Lewis: Am I to understand then that the minister is suggesting that if there were, for instance, accountants or auditors on the board of ODC doing business with one or more of the companies seeking loans, that they would declare an interest at the point at which the loan is discussed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, I guess I did not understand the hon. member's original question. He is then referring to the possibility of a possible conflict of interest on the part of a member of the board?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I am asking if there are procedures governing these situations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know that, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to get the information.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce has a supplementary?

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary to that, Mr. Speaker, there was a $23 million loan made to Cadillac Development—Mr. Goodman is their legal counsel—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not a supplementary.

Mr. Sargent: It is along the same line, I think.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member and all hon. members, of course, object when the Speaker cuts a question off before the full question has been asked whether it is in order or out of order because they have very good systems of converting them into a proper supplementary question if they warrant; therefore I have taken the attitude that I will always hear the question.

That being so, if it is a question which has certain political or other overtones, I think then it is only fair that the government should have the opportunity to comment or answer the question as asked.

The hon. member's question, of course, is not a supplementary in this case.

Mr. Lewis: I have a final supplementary I wish to ask of the minister: whether he would then table for the House what disclosure proceedings there are amongst the members of the board of the ODC, should they have associations—I am not asking in conspiratorial terms; I am asking in simple business terms—if they have investment, economic, professional or other associations with the various companies to whom loans have been or are being granted; and if the procedures are there, what they are.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why that information cannot be divulged.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker: Any supplementaries? No. The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: No, I will leave it at that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Simcoe East.

NON-LEADED GASOLINE

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. In order to encourage the sale of non-leaded gasoline in the Province of Ontario and thus help reduce the air pollutants, would the Minister of Revenue consider reducing the gas tax on non-leaded gasoline?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member will recognize the financial implications inherent in his question that do not permit me to answer him directly, but because of the merit of the suggestion I will be pleased to take it under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Public Works has the answer to questions asked by the member for Parkdale.

SALE OF FORMER SITE OF MERCER REFORMATORY

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parkdale asked me the other day what was happening about the disposal of the old Mercer Reformatory property.

At the time, I misunderstood him and thought he was talking about Mimico. The department has been attempting to dispose of the reformatory property for a couple of years. It has been advertised for sale twice; the first time the tenders closed December 1, 1970, and the second time March 12, 1971. At that time no bids high enough, in our opinion, were received. Subsequently the Ontario Housing Corporation has expressed an interest in the property and we are waiting to hear from them, hopefully before June 1 as to whether they propose to use any part or all of this. There apparently is some zoning question that they have to sort out with the city. I am not aware of the details of that.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: On the first occasion when you made a tender of this property did you not receive some bids, one at least being for $1.2 million?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that after the tenders were closed we had a verbal submission for $1 million and something. I do not have the figures in front of me but it seems to me my people told me that the highest written bid that came in in accordance with the tender called was something under $1 million.

Then there was a verbal suggestion from somebody after this time that they would offer $1.2 million or $1,250,000, but by this time the Housing Corporation had evinced an interest. Our own assessment of the value of the property indicated that perhaps $1.5 million would be a reasonable offer, but proceedings have stopped at the moment until we can find out what Ontario Housing wants to do.

Mr. Trotter: When this property is put up for sale and you ask for tenders, do you put a reserve bid on the property?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In effect we do, Mr. Speaker, because we simply say that the highest or any tender is not necessarily acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? Then the member for Scarborough East has the floor.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education, who has just left his seat for a moment.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Middlesex South.

FIRING OF WAITRESSES

Mr. K. C. Bolton (Middlesex South): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour. Is he aware of the circumstances surrounding the firing of two waitresses recently in London by the Country Fair restaurant and tavern on Dundas Street, on the sole ground they refused to work braless, wearing see-through blouses? Is he—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bolton: I expected some laughter, Mr. Speaker, and it is precisely because of that kind of laughter that the question is asked. These people have their personal dignity—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question. He will now allow the minister to answer it. He will not make a statement of his own opinions.

Mr. Bolton: Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps I had the right to rebuke the member who—

Mr. Speaker: No, the hon. member does not have the right to rebuke anyone. He has the right to ask the question and to state the facts upon which it is based.

Mr. Bolton: May I then proceed with my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If it is a question, the member may proceed. If it is not, he may not.

Mr. Bolton: May I ask the minister if he is aware of these circumstances? Is he satisfied that the dignity of the workers is adequately protected in view of the fact that these two workers both gave satisfactory employment, one of them for a period of five years, and that this condition was not existent when they were employed?

Mr. Stokes: I think he was asked before and he said he would take a peek at the situation.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I would advise him I also had a letter from the hon. Minister of Agriculture with respect to this matter in London, and because of the delicate situation involved, the minister himself did take a personal look. I would point out that, as I see this situation with see-through blouses in this particular matter, there are two points involved. Firstly—

Mr. Singer: Can he afford the time away from the House to do that?

Hon. Mr. Carton: —with respect to the particular—

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is labouring—

Hon. Mr. Carton: —with respect to the particular matter, in fact, I did attend at the restaurant and can honestly vouch that there were no see-through blouses in attendance. They wore, in fact, sweatshirts. What in fact was underneath I am not concerned about, but I do compliment the particular tavern for having a good advertising campaign, because it was doing a very good business that night.

On a very serious note, I agree with the member completely and discussed this with my legal staff and we are looking into the matter. As a matter of fact, we have a draft clause that could possibly be inserted in The Human Rights Code for this particular purpose. The thing that is giving us some concern presently is the administrative problems that may be involved, but we are looking into it. It is in the hands of our legal department presently.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

HOUSING PROGRAMME

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A question of the Minister of Trade and Development: Does the new programme to create additional housing provide for a major expansion by the province in the provision of wholesale water and sewage facilities to eliminate the crippling shortage of serviced lots and, in fact, create a surplus of serviced lots?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will take that question under advisement and advise the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South—you have a question? The member for York South was on his feet some time ago and is the next in line for questions.

ODC LOAN PROGRAMME REVIEW

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development. With reference to the announcement that was carried in the Globe and Mail on Tuesday of his review of the subsidy and loan programme of the Ontario Development Corporation, will the minister indicate whether this programme was reviewed last year by the comprehensive government-wide review of loans and subsidies that was carried out by the Treasury Board?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that statement in the press report, as quoted by the hon. member, is taken out of context. If the hon. member will read the balance of it, he will find that I said I was reviewing all branches of my department. Naturally, as a new minister, I would review some aspects of all branches of the department or many of them with which I am not acquainted. Some I am not too sure I agree with. It is a general review. Now, as to the previous question, I have no information on that. I would be glad to get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: By way of supplementary question, might I ask the minister then if the report that he is reviewing—the circumstances surrounding the Selkirk-Metalbestos-H. G. Wright situation—is also inaccurate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is also what?

Mr. Deans: Inaccurate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member asking me whether my review of this is inaccurate?

Mr. Deans: No. I said is the report that minister is investigating—the situation surrounding the the Selkirk-Metalbestos-H. G. Wright situation—also inaccurate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it is not inaccurate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister indicate if he is finished reviewing the conditions under which ODC loans are granted to commercial fishermen?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will have a statement or an answer to that question for the hon. member early next week.

Mr. Lewis: Quite a department the minister inherited!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It sure is.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

ETV CHANNEL 19 EXPANSION

Mr. T. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Education. In view of the statement by Douglas Marshall in the Globe Magazine of March 27, 1971, that The Department of Education will spend an additional $20 million expanding day-long ETV throughout the five main regions of Ontario, how does the minister justify such an expansion, in light of the results of the survey taken last fall by the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement that only six per cent of the audience within range of the ETV channel 19 tune to the station at least once a week?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

COMPULSORY OVERTIME IN AUTOMOBILE PLANTS

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Has the minister reviewed the matter of compulsory overtime in auto plants from the point of view both of the health of the workers and of the need to share the work with those who would otherwise be unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I am presently making a review of this. The hon. member is aware that there is an onus on both employer and employee under The Employment Standards Act, and this having been brought to my attention a day or two ago, I am looking into the matter and will report back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale.

QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Mr. Trotter: I have a question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier plan any improved system whereby the questions on the notice paper are answered more promptly than they have in the past?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, like all activities of the House, we are endeavouring to expedite them and I anticipate we will have answers to some of the questions on the order paper very shortly.

Mr. Trotter: By way of supplementary question, does the Premier think it is fair or efficient that I have had to put questions again on the order paper that I put on the order paper last June? I have been waiting for answers since last June and they are back on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on whether it is proper. Obviously the hon. member wants this information. If I were in his position, I would put it on the order paper again and I assure him he will get an answer to it.

Mr. Trotter: Waiting since June!

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park.

DRUG USAGE IN HIGH SCHOOLS

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the use of LSD and opiates has more than doubled in our high schools in the past two years? How does he equate this great increase in the use of these dangerous drugs with the cutback of funds for drug education in the high schools?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, On the first part of the question, yes, I have read some surveys and some studies with respect to the use of drugs by young people of school age; and secondly, I do not know what the hon. member means by a cutback in drug education programmes within the schools.

Mr. Shulman: Is the minister aware that in Toronto the board has cut back funds for this purpose?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, this minister is not aware of that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Which department is the minister in?

Mr. Lewis: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary, if I may. What does the minister intend to do about it now that he is aware of it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This minister intends to look into the matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Essex-Kent a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Related to that question, Mr. Speaker, is the minister considering revision of the junior and intermediate health curriculums for the schools so they become much more relevant to this question?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the entire curriculum programme in this division of our elementary schools is under review now.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last—

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister give us a date within reason of when such a report will be made public in this place?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex-Kent.

LOANS TO SERVICE INDUSTRIES

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Has the minister processed or is he ready to grant loans now to other forms of industry or service industries in place of just manufacturing industries as stated, I believe, in the Throne debate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I expected to have a statement on that outlining the details of the new programmes this week. I am sorry I have not had it ready. I expect I shall have it sometime next week. Of course, we cannot put the programme into effect until the Legislature has been advised first of its details.

DEMOLITION OF ORCHARD HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister indicate the demolition of Orchard House, and what is happening in regard to the fact that the Apex Construction Company is indeed doing the demolition?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to give the hon. member that answer yesterday but I guess we did not have time. The lowest bidder on the project was C. S. Wark and that firm was awarded the contract—

Mr. Deans: What was the bid?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Deans: How much?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It was $83,000 I think. I gave the hon. member the figure the other day. There were two other people who also bid who were under that figure, as I explained to him, and two others who were higher. But the two who bid less did not bid on the whole job and consequently their tenders were not accepted.

The contract permits the contractor to sub-contract part or all of it. The information I have is that Wark has subcontracted a substantial portion—I am not aware of how much—to Apex who was not an original bidder.

Mr. Deans: It was not an original bidder? I would like to ask, by way of supplementary question, if the minister would reinvestigate that because my information tells me that Apex bid $50,000 in the initial bid.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned the firm which bid and was successful had complete authority to subcontract the work to one, two or three or four other firms, if it so wished.

Mr. Shulman: Who were the five bidders?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The two highest bidders, as I recall, were Teperman at $117,869 and Greenspoon Brothers at $119,840.

Mr. Shulman: Who was the lowest bidder?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Welland South!

Hon. Mr. Auld: The lowest bidder who bid on the entire job, according to the tender call, was the firm that got the job.

Mr. Lewis: According to the tender call.

Mr. Speaker: If the members wish further information, they can address it either to the order paper or by letter to the minister.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No, there will be no more supplementaries. The member for Welland South has the floor.

FORT ERIE REPRESENTATIVES ON PARKS COMMISSION

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Has the Premier given any consideration to the request of the town of Fort Erie to petition the provincial government to amend The Niagara Parks Commission Act to make provision for representatives on the Niagara Parks Commission from the municipality of the town of Fort Erie?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this request or suggestion has been made. Like all requests and suggestions that are made, it is being considered. I would not want to lead the hon. member astray by suggesting to him that their suggestion will necessarily be agreed to by the government, but it is being considered.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. E. A. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the fourth report of the select committee on election law. In addition to the copies which are being placed on members' desks, copies will also be placed in their mailboxes. This report has mainly to do with municipal elections, and arrangements have been made to furnish copies to municipalities and municipal associations.

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: For clarification, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the minister intend, at any point, to bring in any clarification of election procedures with reference to provincial elections?

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: As chairman of the committee I brought in, I think, three reports on that matter; this is the fourth.

Mr. MacDonald: A further supplementary: If the minister is devoting his full time as a minister of the cabinet, is there any possibility that some of those recommendations will be implemented this year?

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: That is a matter of government policy.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what I thought. Government policy is to procrastinate.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the Legislature's committee on human resources be asked to examine the costs of education as they are reflected in the estimates of The Department of Education and for which the Minister of Education is directly accountable for to this House, including the funds provided for the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, the Teachers' Superannuation Commission and the Province of Ontario Council for the Arts, and that the committee be encouraged to invite officials of The Department of Education and representatives of the bodies named and other interested representatives to appear before the committee as the committee may decide.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The most progressive government in North America.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The members opposite should not have been so suspicious yesterday.

An hon. member: Ask and it shall be given.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the ministry would allow this motion to be put. Is there any debate on this motion?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I have a number of brief comments to make on this. First of all, of course, we welcome the move by the Minister of Education to back up the motion made in committee the other day.

I would like to ask the minister whether he will also make available, or help to make available to that committee, the necessary research staff, hopefully including accountants and management people, and the funds necessary to have this adequate research staff?

I remember reading through the debates when the committees of this House were established, and either in the Premier's remarks or in the remarks of the member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers) it was stated that the committees could have research staff and research personnel.

I would urge and request on behalf of the Liberal party, as its education spokesman, that if that standing committee is to do its job of looking at the priorities in education, at the costs in education, even within the fairly narrow definition that the minister has placed before us today, it must have this staff.

We also feel, sir—the minister could clarify this if I am incorrect—that many of the problems in terms of costing and what we consider to be wastage and unnecessary duplication in the total education system are a result of the fragmentation of authority over various aspects of the education system.

By way of example, sir: For over a year now our position in this party has been that we have evidence—albeit it very scattered evidence—that there is duplication of programmes, facilities and teaching personnel between the 20 colleges of applied arts and technology in this province and at least the 100 secondary schools nearest to them.

If I understood the minister's motion today, sir, he specifically said, "The Department of Education"—his department—and we have heard in the Throne Speech that the authority over the community colleges has been transferred to another minister, the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White).

I would like some clarification on this if at all possible. I suspect that, in terms of the minister's motion referring this matter to committee, it is not broad enough to allow us to look into such areas of duplication.

It is also not broad enough to allow us to look into the areas of duplication between the schools of nursing and the community colleges, because the schools of nursing fall under yet another minister.

It will not allow us to look into the duplication, if you like, between the community colleges and the universities, or Ryerson, because the terms of reference of the minister's motion are not broad enough.

If I understand correctly, sir, the minister's motion is not broad enough to examine the duplication of programmes and teaching personnel between the Ontario College of Art, Sheridan College of Applied Arts and Technology, for example, and, at least five secondary schools in Metropolitan Toronto.

Finally, sir, again another example of the fragmentation, if you like, of responsibility over educational programmes in the province: The terms of reference that the minister has laid before us are not broad enough to include an examination of the duplication between the various institutes and colleges of agriculture which lie under The Department of Agriculture and their relationship with the community colleges.

We feel disappointed that the minister's terms of reference are not all-inclusive, that we will not be able to look at what could be the single most important area of unnecessary duplication and wastage—that is the duplication among the various bodies that receive government grants which are concerned with education or manpower training.

I noted further in the minister's statement—and he will correct me if I am wrong in this interpretation—that his terms of reference are not broad enough to call in for questioning the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And other interested representatives—

Mr. T. Reid: Is that right? Unfortunately, I did not receive a copy of the minister's motion. It would be very nice if that courtesy was extended to hon. members of the House, particularly the opposition spokesmen.

Mr. Singer: Come on, it is only common courtesy and it makes the progress of the House efficient.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When did the member know anything about common courtesy?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Certainly I did not learn anything from the minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I make two concluding comments. The first is, if I understand the motion establishing the committees of this House—and I do not have my copy in front of me but the government whip will correct me, I am sure, if I am wrong—the import of the statement on the standing committee on human resources, and perhaps the other committees, was that the House "may" refer to the committees, matters that it deems to be important.

I would ask you, sir, in terms of the discussion made here yesterday, to examine the importance of that word "may". The word was not "shall"; the word "may" did not restrict the terms of reference of the committee, in our opinion on this side of the House. The hon. minister has his chance to reply, I am sure, and comment on this. The point I am making, sir, is that the committee, in our opinion, is not restricted to examine only those things referred to it in effect by the relevant ministers or by the ministry. It still has the power to call before it people it wishes to interview if there is a majority vote in that committee—which necessitates, of course, either the absence of government members or their abstention or their voting with such motions.

I would like to ask the minister this, sir, but perhaps it is a question which must be reserved for your ruling on this. Our understanding still is that in spite of the minister's motion today the standing committee on human resources, with respect to education as an example, still has the power to call in people it wishes to hear. It has the power to do things that the minister does not refer to it.

I say, sir, that we still consider the motion that I made in the standing committee on Wednesday last to be intra vires, to be correct, to be proper. We feel that it is much broader and allows a much broader examination of the costs of education, particularly duplication, than the minister's motion.

In concluding, sir, I think I can say on behalf of this party that we are pleased that the minister has acted to clarify the situation to the extent that he has, but we stress the committees, we feel, still have the right to initiate. We think it is a necessary cross-check on ministerial power that is not incompatible with the democratic processes of a parliamentary system.

Finally, sir, we stress the need for all members of that committee, regardless of their political affiliation, to have adequate research staff, particularly accountancy staff, so we can go over the books of various institutes and various school boards and so that we can have a way in which we can ask relevant questions. Right now, sir, for the House's information, I am trying to have volunteers do research on the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education because I would like to have relevant questions to ask, but it is very difficult to have a hard-headed analysis of educational costs on behalf of the people and the taxpayers of this province if we are acting in isolation.

With that, sir, I conclude my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just to reply to the one point made by the hon. member for Scarborough East. I hope that the resolution or the motion here this morning indicates precisely what was said yesterday afternoon and perhaps allays the fears expressed by some of the members opposite—it is the intent of this government to make the standing committees meaningful. I will not get into a debate this morning.

Mr. Trotter: Why interfere with their motion then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will not get into a debate this morning on the matter that has been referred to the Speaker as to the proper procedures that should be used. I say, with respect, Mr. Speaker, that the procedures we are presently using are those that are set down in the original motions that were passed—

Mr. Nixon: Will the hon. minister permit a question in that connection?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes. But as I say I am not going to debate it this morning because the Speaker has been asked to make a ruling on it and he will be doing so. I will say to the hon. members of the House, Mr. Speaker, it is the intent to have other resolutions of this kind introduced by other ministers, including the Minister of University Affairs. There will be no problem with this.

I should point out one other aspect of it, Mr. Speaker. When this is done—and while I know the hon. member for Scarborough East is particularly interested in the educational aspect—one point that has to be made is related to all of these standing committees. The human resources committee also must involve itself with matters of health, social and family services, correctional services, and boards and commissions that relate to those. This must be part of the House's right to determine, with all members, myself as an individual member, if there are items that we want referred to the standing committee. We have to be very careful not to single out just one particular area of interest.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask a question? Will the Premier answer a question, Mr. Speaker? Does he intend to have a similar resolution brought forward at this session—I mean today—by the Minister of Agriculture to complement the resolution that was passed by the committee on physical and natural resources, which calls before the committee next Wednesday the Ontario Food Council in order to determine their role and the role of farm prices in the price war in the grocery business?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. Leader of the Opposition will read the resolutions that have been passed already, he will find that that is automatically included within the resolution that presently exists.

Mr. Nixon: What resolution has been passed already?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The one setting up the committees. Read it.

Mr. Nixon: Clarification is surely essential because the motion that was put before the committee dealing with agricultural matters calls for a review. It calls for the appearance of certain special groups before the committee and is very similar, if not identical, to the special resolution that you are putting forward.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for the Minister of Agriculture to introduce a similar resolution in my view, and I am subject to the ruling of the Speaker. It will be necessary for the Minister of University Affairs, which he shall do, although I think the committee will have ample scope on Wednesday—

Mr. MacDonald: Why are you so frightened about investigating education?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to introduce a resolution as it relates to, say, the community colleges and what have you.

Mr. Nixon: You mean it is all right to investigate farm prices on the behest of the committee, but you have to get authority to investigate school costs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am saying it is automatically within that resolution. Ask the Speaker.

Mr. Singer: A difference without a distinction. Ludicrous.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the whole proposition is really a silly one. It is almost a childish one. You are not as ept as one would have thought in the legislative process at this point.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Ept?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, ept as opposed to inept. Because it has a funny flavour about it, this 11th-hour repentance. You walked in at 11 o'clock on a Friday morning with a resolution in order to retrieve the shambles of yesterday or yesteryear.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all; you were told yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: That is precisely what you have done. We were told yesterday, as the Premier fished frantically in the recesses of his mind for a way in which to explain what he was doing. And suddenly there occurred to him from on high that he would provide a resolution which would encompass it the next day.

Mr. Singer: The Minister of Trade and Development gave another speech about his—

Mr. Lewis: That is quite a way in which to govern. When the Leader of the Opposition stands and says "What about the Minister of Agriculture bringing in a resolution to govern the Ontario Food Council?"—an absolutely parallel situation—the Clerk whispers to the Premier "It is automatic."

The Premier stands on his feet and says "It is automatic." Remarkable puppetry in this Legislature. I did not know all the authority vested in the centre of the floor, although I understand and have regard for the Clerk.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member for York South was asking questions of the Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, you are engaged in a sort of ad hoc retrieval operation. It will not work. You cannot have every single minister—University Affairs on Monday, Correctional Services on Tuesday, Health on Thursday, and then Social and Family Services on Friday—this little school-boy litany of ministers standing up and saying, "We permit the Legislature," or "We move that the Legislature investigate such and such or so and so."

Hon. Mr. Davis: We knew that in standing committee.

Mr. Lewis: The direction is clear. The government intends to maintain the control of the committee system.

Mr. Trotter: That is it exactly.

Mr. Lewis: That absolutely underscores everything that was said yesterday and indeed it underscores it today, however generous the minister's resolution may have been. The instructions go out—one can feel it—by osmosis through the House and all of the Tory backbenchers sense that. "The Premier is irritated. He is calling us into line. He makes it sound generous, but"—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am never irritated.

Mr. Lewis: —"we will know how to vote next time that committee meets."

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member is too suspicious.

Mr. Lewis: The Provincial Secretary did not carry quite the same authority last Wednesday morning.

An hon. member: He was flim-flamming; he knows how to flim-flam.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I was not flim-flamming.

Mr. Lewis: Right, right. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: Why did you unleash that?

Mr. Lewis: I thought the minister had left and it was safe. I apologize to him.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that I really do believe many of us on this side believe that one can hardly disagree with this resolution on the face of it, can one?

Mr. Singer: Yes, one can.

Mr. Lewis: But one can judge it on the basis of what occurred yesterday in this House when the Premier, in an unprecedented moment in this Legislature, ruled a committee out of order the day before, exercising an arbitrary authority—

Mr. Speaker: A point of order?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I have no power to rule any committee out of order. I passed a personal point of order and it was the intent of the government to regularize this, as we are doing by this resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: The Premier said it was out of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, and on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This has now been referred to the Speaker for his ruling, which I am more than prepared to accept. But in that his ruling may or may not come today, we are presenting this resolution so the committee can function effectively on Wednesday next.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is completely consistent and completely logical.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Prime Minister finished? I just want to deal with this one point of order. Our Speaker has indicated that we make our own rules, the majority of our House rules; when the Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Davis: But the member asked him for a ruling yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: When the Prime Minister gets up and gives a personal view that ultimately is going to be the Speaker's ruling—if that does not happen it will be unprecedented; we will look forward to hear what the Speaker's ruling is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all. The member gives personal points of view every day of the week.

Mr. Lewis: With that bashful reticence which attaches to the ordinary member from Peel North, who entered the debate yesterday to share with the House his private view of the matter, we will see whether the Speaker's view will coincide with his private view which he so gently introduced into the debate yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Quite different from the arrogance of the member for Scarborough West.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was, very.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the message was clear. The Prime Minister is concerned about the costs of education—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly.

Mr. Lewis: He knows it is the Achilles heel of his government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, it is not.

Mr. Lewis: It is causing trouble all over the province for them and they are determined to maintain constraints on the committee system. However generous this sudden resolution may sound, it was clear in the words and authority which the Premier conveyed to the House yesterday how tightly he intends to hold reins.

It was particularly clear because, of course, it is absurd that a resolution should be introduced this morning dealing with education costs, and the entire post-secondary area is not even mentioned. And when the Premier suddenly twigged to that after the event, moving with that unerring facility, he says the Minister of University Affairs will introduce another resolution to encompass it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Quite. Sure.

Mr. Lewis: Falderal! He could have had it in a resolution this morning. Had he been thinking about it, it would have been there.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought it was covered.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They want to deal with the ODE.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, it is not for the Premier to decide that which the committee deals with.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was the House.

Mr. Lewis: The committee may decide at its whim that it wishes to examine community colleges, technical schools or universities, and if the Premier was serious about the resolution he would have instinctively incorporated all of that this morning. Even then, it is this careful measuring out of what it is the committees will be entitled to deal with.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The community colleges are still in the estimates of The Department of Education.

Mr. Lewis: Right, and that is another aspect, Mr. Speaker—the careful phrasing about the areas to which the minister is “directly accountable to the House.” What about the school boards across the province and our capacity as a Legislature—not out of interest in inquisitorial terms, but out of interest to ask them to appear—to take a look at some of the municipal and various county school boards and what is involved.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Read the resolution.

Mr. Lewis: We will see if the resolution permits that. What about the extension of aid to the separate school system, which is not now in the budget of the minister? Will that be an entitlement of the committee, that we should have an actuarial analysis of costs, that we should bring representatives before the committee? Not on the basis of this resolution carefully phrased to exclude those areas within which the minister is not directly accountable to the House.

The resolution is not even presented in good faith, in terms of its present wording—thrown together somewhere between yesterday afternoon and this morning, huddled over quietly with Dr. McCarthy under the railings, while the member for Scarborough East looked frantically for the Minister of Education some three-quarters of an hour ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Under what railings?

Mr. Lewis: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it was all done in a hurried last-minute fashion, that it does not smack of the good faith which the Premier should be willing to give the committee system. It is actually a mistake in political judgement, if I may be so bold, Mr. Speaker, because in fact the committee system, if it operated well, need not be an embarrassment.

But the Premier is so fragile about his own policies, he is so defensive, so self-conscious about the errors of government and the problems it poses for all of this province, that he cannot even allow a system to operate as it should. Indeed, he has got to marshal Tory troops for a committee, as though he were whipping them into line for the House. I do not know how many should have been there—maybe nine or 10—but there were only five or so—

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Six.

Mr. Lewis: Five or six, and the word must go out even to the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's whips marshal his troops. His whips were looking for the member last night.

Mr. Lewis: That is right. Some of us, as it happened, were elsewhere.

Mr. MacDonald: We were looking for the minister when he was in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, the members were not. There was no vote Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Singer: Did the minister not get to the ball game?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Downsview and the leader of the NDP were at the hockey game during the very important debate.

Mr. Singer: The Premier was at the ball game. I am very jealous of that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that it would serve any useful purpose—other than for the purpose of debating and dividing the House, so why engage in that—to put an amendment simply to bring in all the post-secondary educational studies before the committee in similar or broader terms since the Premier is going to apparently bring it in himself on Monday after the phone call is made to the Minister of University Affairs over the weekend to urge him to draft it and get it in preparation. The government is planning well in advance all the stages of this committee procedure!

We are not happy and pleased about the resolution, Mr. Speaker. One cannot very well afford to object to it. But we will press those committee proceedings to the limit, and on every single occasion they will have to arbitrarily overrule the committee in certain areas where even Tory backbenchers will agree with the opposition.

Mr. Trotter: Right.

Mr. Lewis: As to the proceedings of that committee in fields beyond the delimiting nature of this particular resolution, it is a very frustrating business. The new Premier feels so insecure about the operations of his own group that he has to set out this kind of limits on the committee system and the Legislature cannot operate as it has operated in the past, and not as effectively as it could.

But given a different kind of atmosphere, we could collectively do a first-rate job in that committee. By the absence of research, by the delimiting nature of the resolution, by the 11th-hour way in which this has been approached, they are obviously viewing it in bad faith. So we will have to go through the absurdity of fighting every committee session through again to establish the kind of position where we can do the investigation which we in this House think we are entitled to in that particular committee and with the costs of education significantly in mind.

Mr Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is terribly unfortunate, as the leader of the NDP says, that we have to approach this with all the threats and the warnings that have come from him. The statement has been made that the only reason that the Premier is undertaking this rather tortuous approach is simply to protect his position as former Minister of Education. I think it is simply ineptitude. I am quite convinced, and the Premier opposite certainly should be as well, that with representatives of all three parties forming these committees all of us should have the confidence in our representation on those committees to take action that is in the best interests of this House and, certainly, in the best interests of the community of Ontario.

I feel that the Premier has been badly advised in his attempts to take over the control of the committees by means of these hastily worded resolutions, copies of which are not available.

Mr. Speaker, we could argue here a long time about the parallel between the motion that was put forward in the committee dealing with education by the member for Scarborough East and the motion put forward in the committee on natural resources by the member for Huron-Bruce. Both of them called for the appearance of specific bodies responsible to government or established by the action of this Legislature. Both of them called for investigation into specific areas of widespread public complaint, the one on the cost of education and the one on the costs of the production of agricultural produce.

For the Premier, wherever his advice comes from, to say that they are essentially different, when the one requires the imprimatur of the Minister of Education and the other one is at the behest only of that particular committee, means simply that he regards the one as more delicate, more dangerous than the other. I would say to him, if he is going to proceed with this method of having the committees being led by resolutions put forward by the various ministers, that the committee system will not be adequate. It will not be effective and, in fact, it will break down.

I think we should settle it in this House, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the ruling that will come from your chair, in regard to this important matter. We have to emphasize the independence of these committees. If we stick on the wording of that resolution, where the committees refer, and deal only with those matters specifically referred to them, then of course, its effectiveness will be practically null.

I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we are supporting the resolution, as my colleague has said, simply because it enables the Premier to allow his supporters to continue with the work that they themselves voted for independently in the committees. All he has done in this particular situation is show that he has no confidence in an independent committee system and, certainly, I would hope that he would review his own position even before Mr. Speaker's ruling is available to the members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must point out, I believe on a motion, each member may speak only once. Then the mover of the motion may wind up. I had permitted the Leader of the Opposition to ask questions previously.

Mr. Nixon: This is not the second reading.

Mr. Speaker: No, this is a motion. I think each member can speak only once on this motion. Has the hon. member for York South spoken previously?

Mr. MacDonald: I was on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is quite right. It was a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right. It was a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the basic case on behalf of this party has been well made by our leader. I just want to add one ramification.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Which leader?

Mr. MacDonald: The leader of the party, and if the minister does not know, he is as slow in this as he is many other things in catching onto the facts of life.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): The member learned yesterday when he was asked to sit down.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is this. I am now increasingly puzzled as to what is the point of the careful interparty consultations with regard to rules of this House. I voice a quiet protest that is going to become less quiet as time goes on.

I was one of the members from this group that met at great length last spring and last fall with regard to new rules for the House and new approaches for the committees. Sometimes we had differences of opinion and we argued out the detail of coming to some sort of a consensus. We came to a consensus. Then after we came to a consensus, Mr. Speaker, the government, unilaterally, does as it damn well pleases.

Somebody, over the head of the man who was chairman of the committee, who presided over the arrival of this committee, decided there could not be flexibility and interchange, which was one of the basic approaches between these committees. I do not know who did it. I would be curious to find out who did it because the chairman of the committee who created it is opposed to it. Now whether it was a dictate from the Prime Minister, or whether it emerged from one of the backroom boys in the Tory caucus, I do not know.

Now we have a new development, Mr. Speaker. Because of the sensitivity of the government in the controversial area of education costs—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The right one.

Mr. MacDonald: —the Prime Minister is in the process of imposing a straitjacket in the operation of the committee for the consideration of this issue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member could not get a broader resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: Look.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well?

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): The member has not read it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Yakabuski: The member would like to have it both ways, would he not?

Mr. MacDonald: Have I got the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine, thank you. If the Prime Minister says we cannot get a broader resolution, why did he need to bring in the resolution at all?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because the rules say so.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, the rules say so because the government has framed the rules that are creating a straitjacket to deal with those issues which are embarrassing to the government.

I am speaking to the Prime Minister, if he would not be so rude as to go and talk to somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member passed the resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: I am speaking to the Prime Minister, through the Speaker, because it is just possible that he can get the germ of the idea I am trying to transmit. This is not a completely new development, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government was profoundly embarrassed when one of its own chairmen decided that the committees would act in an effective way, namely the health committee. Now, this Prime Minister is going to try to contain the independence of the hon. member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) by putting him in the cabinet, albeit as a Minister without Portfolio. Surely that is the cheapest kind of an effort to try to silence a member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will speak to the motion before us, please.

Mr. MacDonald: On this issue, he is now bringing in rules, and interestingly enough he is revealing that his rules are only going to apply to this committee and to deal with this situation because he argues that the other resolutions with regard to the other committees are all-inclusive. For example, on the natural resources committee, they can call in the food council; they do not need a directive. In short, any time the government is on the defensive politically—

Hon. Mr. Davis: But it is one of the boards. The hon. member should read the resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have made my basic point, and what I want to say to the Prime Minister is this: He is in the process of violating the consensus that was arrived at by representatives of all parties. He is adding, as he arbitrarily chooses, new regulations. He is in the process of destroying the experiment with regard to committee work at the very outset. If that is what the Prime Minister wants to do, go ahead and do it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, if we are to take the wording of the motion that is now before the House, the best we can say about it is that it is a smart political dodge. In effect, the wording of that motion is broad enough to include a number of things that could be done.

What in fact is happening is that the administration is throttling anything the committees want to do on their own. If the committee system is to work in this Legislature, then certainly the members have some responsibility to their constituents, and certainly this government has some responsibility to the members, to let them think and do as they wish in this House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They will.

Mr. Trotter: The Premier shouts across the House that they will. Well, if the minister has any confidence in the members, why is it necessary to bring in this motion in the first place? There is no question in my mind that despite the fact that this motion is well-worded from a political point of view, in truth the minister is using all the dexterity of a surgeon who uses a meat cleaver to remove somebody's tonsils.

An hon. member: It is like taking a sledgehammer to a fly.

Mr. Trotter: It is about time that this government got away from its autocratic manner that it has carried on in the administration of this government over a long period of time. When these committees were set up, and when the original motion setting up the committees was brought in, I had some hope that the government would give our committees a broad enough scope that we could do some investigating on our own.

Why should we, Mr. Speaker, be dependent upon what the minister of a particular department wants us to do? If we are going to be forced to follow the motion that is before this House, it is in effect that we are being told we must investigate and look into only those matters that a minister of a department wants us to examine. So obviously the government is going to avoid every controversial issue, every embarrassing issue it possibly can.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That one resolution would take me five years to cover. Five years! I might not even do it in five years.

Mr. Trotter: We have had experience in this Legislature within the last two years of this government removing a chairman of a standing committee who attempted to investigate and to look into real problems that were, in effect, embarrassing to the administration in power.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is not true.

Mr. Trotter: This, in effect, is just one more example where we, as members, are going to have even less opportunity to speak up and use the power of the standing committee that we should be able to use. The situation is such, Mr. Speaker, that the way the voting system is in this House, there is little we can do to make the change.

Except, I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this House—and in particular the administration through you—that I will use every opportunity in the committees, or in the particular committee which I am on, to investigate many of the issues that this government tries to ignore. I had the opportunity to be in from the very beginning in the human resources committee, discussing the motion on education. There is no doubt, having seen the original motion as introduced in that committee and the motion that is before this House—

Hon. Mr. Davis: On natural resources?

Mr. Trotter: —that the government is trying to cover up. The government is trying to throttle the committee system.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is not true.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Parkdale knows better. He knows better.

Mr. Trotter: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it is a disgraceful situation when an administration can exist in the Province of Ontario in this day and age and carry on in the manner in which it is now doing.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, I understand from what the Premier has said that the rules require that a resolution be brought forward to this House, by this House, with instructions to the committees. But I disagree with the way the Premier is handling this situation, because if he does it by having each of his ministers bring in a resolution—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You agree with the first part though?

Mr. Deacon: —he is confining too greatly the scope of the committees. The committees are now set up by the House in such a way that they do deal with natural resources or human resources. They basically deal in the programmes and it is a very fine way that we have now of preventing overlap. I suggest that if the Premier himself would bring in the resolutions and word them in such a way that they allow the committees full freedom to investigate within those programmes we can eliminate the problem we are now faced with by this resolution now before us.

For example, the Premier has mentioned that he has to have a resolution or he intends to have the Minister of University Affairs bring in a resolution in due course, perhaps Monday, that will enable the committee to look at not just the primary and secondary but the post-secondary aspects of education as well. I suggest there are many other areas of human resource studies where education of a sort is involved. Our colleague from Scarborough East has already mentioned health and agriculture, for two. In addition, the committee might want to look into the area of correctional services, which has an educational aspect that is very important.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hope it would.

Mr. Deacon: The educational aspects through the community activities under The Department of the Provincial Secretary, Social and Family Services—these are all different departments. Under the present system, the Premier would have to have each of these ministers permit the committee and give the committee instructions so it could call for these other resources.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is the House.

Mr. Deacon: The House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Right.

Mr. Deacon: Right, the House will be doing this, but surely the way to deal with this is to have the Premier himself bring forward these resolutions, giving the clear delineation of opportunity to the committees to study, within the scope of their particular field, the human resources or the natural resources. This system that we are now using is a patchwork and I am disappointed that the Premier has not seen the necessity to make it possible for the committees to deal in a comprehensive fashion with their responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen! His own members' resolution was completely restrictive and it would not have permitted that at all.

Mr. T. Reid: No, it was wide open.

Mr. Trotter: Why change it then?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I can find no complaint whatsoever with the resolution brought in this morning by the Minister of Education. I think it is quite wide enough to allow the committee to look into this problem quite freely. They certainly will not have enough time to look into it and could go no further. I can understand some of the alarm which you have heard voiced here, but it is a theoretical alarm because the resolution certainly is quite wide enough.

What I would like to ask the Prime Minister, through you, sir—

Mr. Nixon: He does not speak for us. He speaks for them.

Mr. Singer: He speaks for the leader of the NDP.

Mr. Shulman: I think we are all allowed to speak our own minds in this party and I should hope it will always continue to be like that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I think the Prime Minister could allay the alarm—

Hon. Mr. White: It is not obvious.

Mr. Shulman: —felt by members of my party, and by the flutterers to my right as well, if he would give assurance that when a committee—any committee—brings forth the resolution that it wishes to investigate such a matter, he and his government will bring in the necessary motion which would solve all the problems.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is just what we have done.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two observations in view of the discussion we have had this morning. I would agree that the wording of this motion does provide a very broad term of reference for the discussion of a very important aspect of our provincial operation. We are responding to the wording of the resolution itself setting up the standing committee on human resources which quite clearly says "Other matters relating to the department may be referred in the discretion of the House."

"In the discretion of the House," that is a resolution asking the standing committee to go into these matters in some detail. I welcome—I want it quite clearly understood—I welcome the study by the standing committee.

Mr. T. Reid: Do we get an independent research staff?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member has had his go. I will go through this in an orderly way. I will come to that. That happens to be number one on my list.

Mr. Singer: Temper, temper!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How about some common courtesy? Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Scarborough East would not understand.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What I am getting at is I want it clearly understood that I think, in view of the tremendous interest in the question of the cost of education throughout this province, this is a very welcome study on the part of the standing committee.

I would hope that committee members would take cognizance of the fact that they are to be encouraged to invite officials from the departments and other interested representatives to come and to share with them their views.

Mr. Sargent: It is a monster the minister has created. He will rue the day.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the organization of the standing committee itself and the staff that it will require will have to be determined by the committee. Its members will have to see themselves what is the extent of this type of investigation. I say this; please keep in mind that there are very competent people on staff who can be of some assistance, if members would only bring them up to help to explain the operation. I can imagine that committee members would bring before them the head of the grant section to explain the grant system. I think they have to understand some of these things first and then once they get whatever facts they require, they can come to whatever decisions they like.

Mr. Nixon: Dr. McCarthy is quite busy. Everybody else is reviewing for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Singer: That fellow, Clare Westcott—do you let him in the committee? Very competent fellow.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think that having this resolution and having these terms of reference as broad as they are, the committee members naturally want to do an effective job in order to have as complete a study as possible.

Now I say that in the context of two or three other matters. First of all, members will recall that yesterday the Prime Minister himself made reference to the fact that the present Deputy Minister of Education, among other responsibilities, would be asked to organize an inquiry into the cost and effectiveness of the educational system of the province.

I think really, as the member for High Park said, there is a tremendous amount of work to be done. There is no sense duplicating the work of other boards and commissions and I would hope that this study by the standing committee, and the study to be done by the inquiry of the task force—about which I will have something to say in the early part of next week—should be complementary, so that we, in fact, are getting all the information out as quickly as possible. Members made some reference to the fragmentation of authority—

Mr. Lewis: Complementary is the word?

Hon. Mr. Welch: —I point out to you that there is already a commission on post-secondary education going into some aspects of that particular group.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister is an elected representative. Why not them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I know, but surely objectivity and the limitations of time would demand that wherever possible the committee would not duplicate, but utilize—

Mr. T. Reid: I am willing to work full-time.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —utilize the work that is going on in the studies that are already under way. I would hope that the standing committee, with whatever limitations it might have, in view of time and the fact that this is not the only department that comes within the purview of its interests—

Mr. Singer: Imposed upon us!

Mr. Trotter: And a Tory majority!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let us make it a Liberal majority.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The inquiry to which the Prime Minister made reference yesterday—about which I will have more to say in the first part of next week as to the areas to which I hope that they would go—and the fact that there is a post-secondary commission or, rather, a commission on post-secondary education—I would hope that all of this dialogue would be very helpful and indeed would provide us with the type of information we need to come to some valid conclusions with respect to our educational programme in this province and the priorities. So I welcome the unanimous acceptance of this. I wish the standing committee well and I give the committee the assurance that the officials of the department over which I now preside are anxious, willing to co-operate—

Mr. T. Reid: We want our independent researchers.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —and to attend before you to provide you with whatever information you need. My suggestion is—

Mr. T. Reid: Independent researchers—

Mr. Nixon: That is essential.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You might discuss in committee—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Welch: You might discuss within the committee itself what other procedures you might want to follow to assure yourselves of objectivity. I think you have some obligation to get the facts first and then the examination of those facts will remain with you as a member of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, may I conclude as I started, by saying that I am very pleased that the standing committee will have this particular priority before it. I hope to listen in myself on as many meetings as I can to help to understand many of these matters. I am very pleased as well that there is such interparty interest in this very important programme as far as our government is concerned.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: That was one of the minister's worst!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Before I put the motion I would like to say to the hon. members to my left who earlier in the debate raised certain questions, that so far as Mr. Speaker is concerned the motion before the House is quite in order. If the members of the House do not concur in the motion and do not like it then, of course, they can vote against it. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker is guided by the opinion of the members of this House as expressed in the chamber.

We are now voting on the motion by Hon. Mr. Welch with respect to the committee on human resources. As many as are in favour of the motion—

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if you would read the motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: May I read the motion again?

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the Legislature's committee on human resources be asked to examine the costs of education as they are reflected in the estimates of The Department of Education, and for which the Minister of Education is directly accountable to this House, including the funds provided for the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, the Teachers' Superannuation Commission, and the Province of Ontario Council for the Arts, and that the committee be encouraged to invite officials of The Department of Education and representatives of the bodies named and other interested representatives, to appear before the committee as the committee may decide.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

SOCIETY OF INDUSTRIAL ACCOUNTANTS OF ONTARIO

Mr. J. R. Smith moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the Society of Industrial Accountants of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CONTROL OF EAVESDROPPING

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the Control of Eavesdropping.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to control wiretapping and all other forms of electronic overhearing of conversations except in cases involving national security or organized crime, and then only for periods of time not exceeding 48 hours. No person may engage in eavesdropping without a court order.

The bill provides that a court order may only be granted on the application of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General or a Crown attorney and specifies the information that must be given to the court on such an application.

FINANCIAL ACCOUNTS OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. T. Reid moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act respecting the Financial Accounts of Universities.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this bill will require each provincially assisted university in Ontario to file detailed financial statements of revenues and expenditures with the Minister of University Affairs each year, and it requires the minister to table these statements unedited in the Legislature immediately thereafter.

The bill also enables the Provincial Auditor to prescribe the exact form and content of the financial statements of the universities in order to allow the public to know where exactly their tax money is going.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, the health care situation in Ontario is unsatisfactory. It is unsatisfactory for patients; it is unsatisfactory for doctors; it is unsatisfactory for paramedical workers and hospital workers. It is, surely, with an election bulging over the horizon, unsatisfactory for the government.

Nobody needed the 15 volumes of the report of the committee on the healing arts and its special studies to make this apparent. "The system is excessively confused, unco-ordinated, complicated and wasteful. It just grew with all the difficulties which lack of planning inevitably introduced." Such is the beginning of an excellent series of articles by Jean Howarth in The Globe and Mail about our health care system in Ontario. These articles contrast our system in Ontario, which has been largely unplanned, with Alberta's system, which has been thoroughly planned.

Again and again, Ontario was found wanting. Our system is unco-ordinated, costly, with certain areas being oversupplied and other areas very much undersupplied. We have depended too much on the very costly active-treatment-bed hospitals treating the seriously ill, rather than developing the less costly but equally efficient convalescent, rehabilitative and chronic care facilities. We have not stressed sufficiently the home care programme, and again another cost-saving form of care is underdeveloped. We have left the construction and operation of nursing homes to private enterprise, with the result that a great deal of variation exists as to the type of facility, standard of care and distribution of nursing homes in the province, so that a number of key areas are completely without this facility.

While one must give credit to the nursing home operators for the need they are meeting and the way they are meeting it, nevertheless one cannot help but wonder why the provincial government has not been a great deal more active in the construction and operation of government-owned nursing homes to ensure a more uniform standard of facility and of care, plus a much better distribution of such throughout the province.

With the need for profit removed, it might even be possible to cut the per diem rate, should the government enter the nursing home field.

There is no doubt about it, the health care delivery system in this province is too costly, has too many gaps in it and needs a thorough-going overhaul. To quote further from one of Jean Howarth's articles:

It is amazing how many individuals in positions to know can list an almost identical catalogue of problems in the Ontario health care system. It is even more amazing, when such unanimity exists, to discover how little has been done to correct the problems.

Since the problems, along with solutions to them, are readily identifiable, why has there not been action taken in this regard?

Jean Howarth presents several reasons which are a pretty accurate assessment of the inaction by government and its bureaucracy.

One reason is that the government which preceded that of Premier William Davis was not enthusiastic about providing convalescent, rehabilitative and chronic beds, especially in separate institutions. It is argued that because a very high percentage of general hospital patients require only very brief hospital convalescence, the beds needed for this purpose are part of the active treatment hospital beds in Ontario.

According to former Minister of Health Tom Wells, patients stay longer in Ontario active treatment hospitals—the average 1970 stay was 10 days—than they do in the active treatment hospitals of any other jurisdiction or country in the western world. What is more, that stay costs from $34 to $89 a day whereas convalescent beds in Alberta cost $14 to $20 a day.

In other words, former Conservative governments have deliberately opted for the more costly active-treatment bed programme, thus ensuring that our hospital system is one of the most costly there is.

Secondly, Jean Howarth contends that the empires in the health field frustrate change.

"We have bad hangups in Ontario, on an empire basis," said a doctor who had spent some years trying with others to co-ordinate the efforts of the University of Toronto and Metro Toronto core hospitals and quit in frustration.

"The hospital commission, the health department, the welfare department and its old nursing homes; OHSIP, HIRB, the hospitals, the university—they are all empires and everyone is spawning dozens of internal empires.

"Toronto talked regions for five years. The province cut off resource funds to stimulate togetherness, but we are still talking regions. You just could not get the university to provide any leadership or even get into the act."

The government must give leadership on a no-nonsense basis and shake up these empires in a dramatic fashion so that they do not frustrate and impede the badly needed changes. Since so many of these empires are the creatures of successive Tory governments, I suggest that really if we are going to get sufficient reform and change in the health care system, another government other than the one opposite is an absolute necessity.

Consider this statement by Jean Howarth:

An opinion expressed by many of those who worked for change in the Ontario health care system was that senior civil servants make too many policy decisions that ought to be made by the cabinet and that the sheer bulk of the civil service stands in the way of change.

Need I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the Ontario consumers of health care and the taxpayers who suffer because the government refuses to accept the responsibility for making the necessary policy decisions for the health care system and leaves them too much to the senior bureaucrats. Only a change of government can curtail the undue influence in policy of senior bureaucrats and can rightfully restore leadership in policy to the cabinet where it belongs. This an NDP government will do.

The Tory party has formed the government in this province for more than 27 years. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that they are directly responsible for the present unsatisfactory state of affairs because of their refusal to believe in or practise planning. The people of Ontario are fed up with the costly unco-ordinated under-differentiated health care system in this province. They know where the blame lies and they will vent their anger yet again for the government's failure in health when election day comes along.

On January 25, 1971, the then Minister of Health (Mr. Wells) said in a press statement:

At the next sitting of the Legislature it is my intention to present a detailed statement outlining the guidelines and principles for the development of a comprehensive health services programme for the people of Ontario.

I looked for some statements in the Speech from the Throne, but all we received were, "New policies designed to promote a more efficient, economical and comprehensive system of delivery of health services will be brought forward during this session."

That statement could mean a great deal or it could be some more of the pious platitudes this government so regularly dishes out. Will we get action or will we get more words?

While we were debating the estimates last year on matter after matter where change and reform are long overdue and the methods are generally accepted by everyone, in response to our prodding all the minister would say was, "We are studying it. We are taking a look at it. We need more time to look at it further."

That was the only response we could get. We could get no commitments. That kind of response was unsatisfactory, then, and it is unsatisfactory now. We want action and we expect action now. Anything else will be a further insult to our intelligence and will perpetuate a long-standing crisis that demands well-known solutions.

We in the New Democratic Party are committed to a real overhaul of our health care system so that it will provide a comprehensive programme of care to all citizens, regardless of their financial resources. One of the things that seems most pressing is the establishment of regional health councils throughout the province so that the facilities, needs and resources could be assessed in a given area. Then steps can be taken to make sure that a full programme is developed and put into force in these regions.

At present, there are chronic patients, convalescent patients, and rehabilitative patients in active-treatment hospitals, but its costs too much to maintain them where often they do not receive the therapeutic services they need. There are patients in nursing homes who do not need nursing home care and should be in homes for the aged. There are patients who could be cared for just as adequately and much more cheaply and often more happily at home under a home care programme.

A regional medical director should be appointed with authority to move a patient promptly into the institution that meets his need, regardless of the preferences and conveniences of doctors, administrators, boards or patients, or patients' families. As Jean Howarth says, "Ontario can have first-class health care at a price it can afford only if patients are moved rationally through a system that is devised to meet their needs."

We, therefore, must move to provide throughout the province chronic, convalescent and rehabilitative care in hospitals specifically designed and built for these purposes. Potential savings are to be derived from emphasizing then, auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes. Studies have conclusively shown that patients can be served in auxiliary hospitals at about half cost of treatment as in active-treatment hospitals. Here in Ontario this means a saving of $25 per patient-day. Nursing homes provide care at one-quarter the cost of active-treatment hospitals. These facilities must be evenly distributed throughout the province, particularly in areas of northern Ontario where nursing homes do not exist. And—of course—care in these institutions must be covered under the public insurance programme.

The present Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) told us a week or so ago that he puts the highest priority on having nursing home care covered by insurance. The former Minister of Health, true to form, told us that nursing home costs in our medical insurance were under active consideration. In all this time people are using up their assets waiting for this government to act. More and more people are being hurt every day.

Because OHSIP and OHSC are financed by both Queen's Park and Ottawa, the minister plans to meet his counterpart in Ottawa, the hon. John Munro, to discuss this question. Whenever he gets around to seeing the federal minister he will give the matter the highest priority. When that will be we do not know.

In the meantime the same insensitivity to an urgent human and social problem persists among the minister and his colleagues in cabinet. I asked the minister that if the federal government refused to make the necessary changes was this provincial government prepared to act on its own. The minister responded by saying: "My position would not be improved by answering that question."

If this government really cares for people—and I now have serious reservations that it does—then I submit that this government should act immediately to cover the cost of nursing home care and negotiate later with the federal government. Such a course of action would conclusively prove that the minister and his colleagues are acting in good faith to meet a long-standing and urgent need of a great many of our citizens.

Further potential savings in the health care field are to be derived from an extension of the home care system. The Ontario programme is very good and is established in 18 communities in the province at the present time.

A home care programme takes hospital services to the patient. Nurses, laboratory technicians, physiotherapists, speech therapists attend the patient in his home. Hospital equipment is taken to him. His family is taught to provide necessary services. Homemakers are made available. Taxis or ambulances take him to hospital for treatment that cannot be given elsewhere, and take him home.

The service costs $8 to $9 a day whereas the cheapest active treatment hospital service costs $34 a day. It is better suited to many patients, such as mothers who are anxious away from home. Thus if more use were made of home care throughout the province, the savings would be anywhere from $25 a day to about $45 a day for each user.

Last year, home care programmes covered 10,952 patients for 353,812 patient-days. If we could just double the home care programme, the savings would amount to about $9 million.

In actual fact the programme could be increased many times. While the programme is good, it is not growing very fast.

Jean Howarth says of this programme:

"The difficulty seems to be that Queen's Park has not taken strong initiatives. The municipalities know the money is there for home care programmes, but they have not been urged to use it. When a municipality does show interest it takes the civil servants a long time to get the programme functioning. The patient's doctor must co-operate. Only he can admit the patient to home care.

As one official said succinctly, "Doctors do not care for home care programmes." Their income is generated more quickly moving swiftly down hospital corridors.

Again some toes have to be stepped upon, for it is evident in their general attitude to this programme that neither the government nor the medical profession is seriously interested in saving the health consumers and taxpayers of Ontario very much money, or else their attitude would be different in this particular instance.

Further potential savings in health costs can be derived from a public, centralized drug purchasing agency, particularly one which emphasizes the purchase of generic drugs. The Ontario Pharmacists' Association, appearing before an October, 1969, meeting of the Legislature standing committee on health, estimated the 1968 costs for drug coverage under a public health care plan at $143.4 million, including five per cent for administration. If we accept their figure and project to 1970, we can estimate the cost in 1970 at $150 million.

The 1970 federal task force report on the cost of health in Canada recommended that group purchasing techniques be introduced province-wide for core drugs immediately. It stated drug prices would then be reduced at least to the level of the hospital which pays the lowest price and that consolidated purchasing for a number of drugs could yield a saving of 30 per cent or more.

Premier Ed Schreyer of Manitoba, when announcing his intentions to set up a central drug purchasing and distribution agency to resell drugs, presumably at cost, to hospitals, clinics and retail drug stores, suggested that such an agency would produce savings to the consumer of 25 to 30 per cent. Let us, for the sake of argument, take the lower figure. Apply it to the $150 million and it produces an estimated saving of $37.5 million.

The Ontario Pharmacists' Association also told the standing committee on health that Ontario consumers in 1968 were paying $90.6 million a year for prescriptions. If we project this to 1970 at $96 million, then without a Medicare plan which included the cost of prescriptions, a centralized drug purchasing plan would produce savings within the present system of about $24 million a year.

I want to emphasize that Premier Schreyer's figures are realistic in that they are based on a study undertaken by the Manitoba Department of Industry and Commerce and Department of Health and Social Services.

Oh you may say that the Ontario government has introduced its Parcost programme to cut the cost of prescription drugs. According to C. A. Palmer, co-ordinator of the Parcost programme, the average cost of a prescription in Ontario has dropped about 10 per cent since October 1, when the first Parcost index was published.

Good; but the programme has one serious roadblock that keeps it from working as effectively as it should to lower prescription costs. An amendment should be made to The Pharmacy Act to permit pharmacists to substitute a lower-priced generic drug in place of a higher-priced brand name provided such is listed on the comparative drug index.

If this were to be done, along with centralized purchasing and distribution by a government agency, much greater savings could be realized by the drug consumers in this province. I can assure you that when we come to power, these programmes to cut drug expenses will be given high priority with us.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Hear, hear!

Mr. Ferrier: Another area where great potential savings can be realized is in the widespread implementation of group practice community health clinics throughout the province.

As far back as 1964, the royal commission on health services headed by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall declared that the advantages of group practice far outweigh the disadvantages and that inducements should be created to encourage a larger proportion of doctors to provide their services through group practice clinics.

The federal task force on the cost of health services in Canada in 1970 reported that first priority should be given to establishing community health centres containing a full range of preventive, diagnostic and curative services.

Similarly, the committee on the healing arts in Ontario recommended that the province give priority to extending financial assistance to public and non-profit agencies for a range of ambulatory care facilities and services designed to promote health, to prevent disease and to deliver essential health care in the community.

The Economic Council of Canada in its seventh annual review declared:

We believe there is considerable scope for the development of more economical team approaches in various forms, involving various mixes of general practitioners, specialists, paramedical personnel, nurses, social workers, psychologists and other professionals.

Even the Canadian Medical Association in a 1967 report on group practice admitted:

Medicine is fast becoming too important a facet of our highly industrialized society to be considered solely in the light of the preferences of the individual doctor with respect to the degree of organization which he may or may not bring into the practice of his profession.

With all these eminent bodies favouring group practices and community clinics, we should expect any government desirous of cost-cutting to seize the initiative and encourage widespread implementation of this concept of the delivery of health care. The previous Minister of Health led us to believe in the estimates last year that we could look for some government initiative in this direction in the near future, but we are still looking.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): They are there.

Mr. Ferrier: We are still looking and we have not seen any of them.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member has not asked David Archer what is going on.

Mr. Ferrier: The Hall commission observed that advantages of such facilities far outweigh the disadvantages, especially in terms of cost savings to the taxpayer. Community clinic facilities greatly reduce the utilization of the hospitals by as much as 20 to 40 per cent. Doctors would no longer have to admit patients to hospitals to obtain diagnostic and other services available in the clinic, leaving hospital beds for those who need them. By stressing preventive medicine and annual checkups of members, some illnesses are avoided while others are caught in the early stages, and thus long stays in hospitals are sometimes avoided.

Even the Ontario Medical Association, in its report to be discussed at its annual meeting next month, states:

Claims that services rendered by the clinic are better and less expensive than services supplied elsewhere may sometimes be valid—if one considers American studies.

Even that begrudging acknowledgement by a body that is pretty strongly espoused to the fee-for-service principle is quite something.

A renowned model of the group practice concept financed on a capitation rather than a fee-for-service basis is the Kaiser Permanente experience. The Kaiser Permanente structure consists of three parts:

1. The Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, a non-profit organization that arranges medical care for paying members by contracting with individuals and groups;

2. The Kaiser Foundation Hospitals, a separate corporation that owns all the hospitals in the system and provides space and equipment for the medical group clinic;

3. The Permanente medical groups, independent partnerships of physicians that contract with the health plan to provide all professional services to the subscribers.

Hospital and clinic facilities are closely integrated, usually on the same property, so that physicians have easy access to their hospitalized patients while treating their outpatients.

For example, in northern California the Kaiser Permanente operations include more than 2,000 beds in 11 hospitals and 14 clinics including offices for 900 physicians, or which approximately 12 per cent are permanent full-time partners. This accounts for the care of approximately one million subscribers.

The results: In 1965 Kaiser required only 59 per cent as many hospital beds per person in the health care plan population as did the State of California, and Kaiser's per person cost for providing hospital care, after adjustments to make the Kaiser subscribers mirror the state population in age composition, was only 61 per cent of the state-wide cost.

The Kaiser operations were studied by the committee on manpower of the Ontario Council of Health, headed by Dr. Harry Botterell, former dean of medicine at Queen's. In its 1970 report, the committee was impressed.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would allow the Prime Minister to have the floor for a minute, as a courtesy.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): I regret interrupting the member for Cochrane South, but His Honour is waiting to give royal assent to a bill. If I might interrupt, I will go and escort him to the chamber.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the throne.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed a bill to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following is the title of the bill to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to this bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Mr. Speaker: May I thank the hon. member for Cochrane South for his courtesy. He now has the floor to continue his address.

Mr. Ferrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was talking about Dr. Botterell's comments on the Kaiser Permanente plan after having made a trip to California, and I am quoting from a Medical Post article. Dr. Botterell said:

It noted that under the Kaiser plan hospital days per 1,000 subscribers dropped from 650 in 1966 to 500 by 1968. If this figure were age-adjusted to compare to Ontario it would rise to 545 days per 1,000. But the Kaiser figures do not include convalescent, chronic, psychiatric or rehabilitative beds.

In order to get a direct comparison between the two systems, the committee adjusted the Kaiser figures to include, hypothetically, all these categories of patients, plus mental patients, according to standards of care prevalent in Ontario. It found that the adjusted total of days of hospital care per 1,000 subscribers under the Kaiser programme would be 1,722 compared to 1970 (OHSC) plus 888 mental patients—for a total of 2,858 hospital days per 1,000 people in the general population.

In effect, the total days of hospital care required in the Kaiser system are equal to only 60 per cent of 1967 Ontario figures. The manpower committee was so impressed with its findings that it recommended a technique of health care delivery management, utilizing economic incentives for efficient use of hospitals similar to the Kaiser system, be introduced on an experimental basis in Ontario.

At an OHSC conference on May 20, 1970, Dr. Harshman of the Ontario Medical Association provided my colleague from Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) with some OHSC operating cost figures. The OHSC budget for net allowable operating cost in 1970 was $701,598,771. This represents a per diem rate of $49.94 and a per bed rate of $14,539.

If these figures could be reduced to the Kaiser level they would be, respectively, $422,713,260, $30.09 and $8,760. In other words, the savings to Ontario if the Kaiser experience had been duplicated here in 1970 would have been $278,885,510 in total—$19.85 per diem rate and $5,779 per bed. That is, a Kaiser system in Ontario would save us $250 million to $300 million annually for comparable levels of service, according to figures supplied by the government's own Ontario Council of Health and the OMA.

Dr. T. H. Tulchinsky, the executive director of the Ottawa and district community group health plan presented a brief to the former Minister of Health and the government of Ontario in January of this year in which he outlined the following proposals which represent steps by which the government of Ontario could encourage the development of community health centres:

1. A combined medical-hospitalization capitation system of payment for enrolled members of consumer-sponsored community health centres be further developed, similar to the present agreement with the Sault Ste. Marie and St. Catharines community health centres. Such capitation should be available to new community health centres and should be negotiable, based upon the range of services (medical and ancillary) provided, and cost comparisons with closely equivalent population groups.

2. Community health centres be defined as public ambulatory hospital facilities.

3. A community health centre grant-in-aid programme be developed to provide a portion of the capital and startup costs of such programmes, in a formula similar to that used in the past for general hospital construction, provided that the sponsoring consumer group undertakes to provide a portion of the costs to qualify for this grant-in-aid.

4. Representations be made to the government of Canada:

(a) That the above grant-in-aid programme be developed in conjunction with The Department of National Health and Welfare to share equally with the province the costs of the community health centre grant-in-aid programme;

(b) That community health foundations be granted tax exempt status for the purposes of receiving charitable donations;

(c) That The National Housing Act be amended to provide for mortgages under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of Canada to such foundations for the purposes of constructing health centre facilities, or alternatively other low-cost, deferred interest mortgages or loans be made available.

5. Bona fide community groups sponsoring community health centres should be assisted by the community health centre grant-in-aid programme where such groups show evidence of:

(a) Incorporation as a non-profit foundation under The Corporations Act of Ontario;

(b) An established development fund of not less than $25,000;

(c) A board of directors of not less than 10 and not more than 30 persons representing the consumer groups sponsoring the project, and when not less than one-third of the members of the board of directors include persons associated with a number of the following: regional and/or municipal government; university administration and/or faculty; medical school faculty; social planning council or like body; welfare recipient representatives; university student organizations; urban renewal groups, tenants, associations, and the like; business community, employers and other service professions;

(d) A professional advisory committee to assist the board of directors in selection of an executive director and to advise and assist the executive director in development of the programme. The professional advisory committee should consist of not less than three nor more than seven persons knowledgeable in health care and/or community service organization;

(e) That the foundation commits itself to develop a service programme based upon integrated family physician and specialty medical services, as well as a broad range of investigative and allied health services. Where such services are beyond those covered by OHSIP, categorical payment mechanisms would be arranged under various government programmes to cover their costs;

6. That the local health services branch of The Ontario Department of Health be asked to assist community health centres by encouraging local health units:

(a) To second staff public health nurses to work in the community health centre;

(b) To rent office space for public health activities within community health centres;

(c) To provide advisory services to community health foundations.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are great potential savings in the health care field by the implementation of group practice community health clinics in this province. We in the NDP deplore the government's lack of leadership in yet another health field where precious dollars can be saved and allocated for other pressing programmes to deal with human needs. We are committed to the promotion of this kind of health care where feasible in the province; and when we form the government we shall move to the implementation of this programme wherever possible.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Do not hold your breath!

Mr. Ferrier: The government should have been doing a lot about this. There is a growing lack of leadership on its part.

At this point I wish to introduce a less plausible, but nevertheless interesting note into this debate, Mr. Speaker. There are potential savings to be derived from the extension of collective bargaining to physicians.

Up until now the OMA unilaterally decided what increases and fees it wanted and the consumers had to pay. The Minister of Health has been careful to point out, in response to questions directed to him in the House, that there are amicable discussions going on between the government and the OMA, but he has been careful to point out that there have been no negotiations per se.

A number of alternatives have been submitted to the OMA which is to pick the ones best suited to its needs. It looks like the usual capitulation by the Tories to a powerful monopoly.

We say, let them justify their increases in fees just as the industrial worker does by some form of collective bargaining with the government. If such were the case some startling savings in the cost of health care might very well show up.

Suppose this had been done for the years 1958 to 1968, the years for which firm information is available on physicians' earnings. During this period, physicians' earnings rose by 114.1 per cent, for an annual increase of 7.9 per cent. At the same time the industrial composite of average wages and salaries rose by 55.1 per cent, an annual percentage increase of 4.5 per cent.

Suppose we calculate what would have resulted if physicians' earnings during the period had risen at the same rate as the industrial composite, as a result of the imposition of collective bargaining. According to my calculations, it works out to something like $193,693,000 during that 10-year period.

In other words if, as a result of collective bargaining, doctors had maintained their income position vis-à-vis industrial workers rather than increasing the disparity—physicians' earnings were 3.9 times the industrial composite in 1958 and the difference rose to 5.4 per cent in 1968—the saving would have been about $200 million.

It can, of course, be argued that because physicians are a highly organized and cohesive group, their bargaining power is very great and the savings resulting from collective bargaining would be less than I have calculated. Even if the savings were only one-half or one-third, it would still be a large amount.

In 1969 and 1970, the industrial composite rose by 7.1 and 8.1 percentage points respectively, which is about equal to the long-term annual increase in physicians' earnings. Unfortunately no reliable information is available on physicians' earnings in the past two years. I suspect, however, that because of the implementation of Medicare in October, 1969, physicians' incomes have risen sharply in the past two years. This has been the experience in other provinces after the introduction of Medicare. In Saskatchewan, physicians' earnings rose by 48 per cent during the year after Medicare; in Nova Scotia, by 35 per cent; in New Brunswick, The Department of Health estimates a 19 per cent increase.

Thus in spite of the abnormally high industrial wage increases in the past two years, it is likely that a collective bargaining procedure which gave physicians increases similar to those of the industrial composite would have produced substantial savings in Ontario in 1969 and 1970.

May I point out that the assumptions which have been used to calculate the $200 million figure involved no deterioration in the physicians' position vis-à-vis wage earners in general. Dr. Glen Sawyer, editor of the Ontario Medical Review, expressed the common OMA opinion when he said in The Globe and Mail on January 10, 1970, that if physicians show restraint, they will "fall still further behind."

Even if physicians' earnings could be reduced to the point at which their percentage increase equalled that of the industrial composite, their annual increase would still be substantial. For instance, if the industrial composite increase of 7.1 per cent in 1969 is applied to the 1968 average physician's earnings of $32,098 he would get an increase in 1969 of $2,279. This increase represents more than one-third of the entire earnings of the average industrial worker in 1969.

However we look upon collective bargaining in terms of its potential for savings on the health care of the province, it does present us with something very interesting to think about.

Another form of potential saving in terms of hospital costs would be to standardize the construction of hospitals and all health care institutions throughout the province. Hospitals that are being built today are custom built, which is the most expensive kind of building there is.

Jean Howarth refers to a doctor who has figured that 20 different plans would meet the requirements of all the sizes and sorts of hospitals that Ontario needs. For instance, there are available plans for truly modern hospitals, such as the Scarborough Centenary Hospital. Jean Howarth points out:

A study which compared Centenary with conventionally constructed and staffed hospitals found:

That Centenary registered nurses spent 32 per cent less time walking and registered nursing assistants 52 per cent less time walking than their counterparts in the conventional hospitals;

That Centenary leading nurses were able to spend 108 per cent more time in patients' rooms than conventional head nurses, registered nurses 37 per cent more time and nurse assistants 20 per cent more time;

That Centenary was able to cut its staff by 13 to 24 per cent, depending on shifts, compared with the conventional hospitals.

Plainly it was more service for less cost. Why not then, goes the argument, standardize Centenary's structure across the province, making changes in it only when they would spell genuine improvements. Why pile up the extra cost of different architects and designs and experiments with each new structure?

I am convinced that a standard pattern for the construction of our hospitals and health care institutions would bring about considerable savings, with increased efficiency of the staff. This, therefore, should receive high priority with the government, which up until now has steered completely away from this very sensible concept.

A great deal of discussion is presently going on in the health field concerning the use of auxiliary personnel, and more specifically an expanded role for the nurse. All three of last year's important governmental commissions and committees on health matters—namely the federal task force on the cost of health services in Canada, the council of health and the committee on the healing arts in Ontario—made somewhat similar recommendations to the effect the pilot studies should be organized to consider the field of work, usefulness and training required, of a person who might serve as a physician's assistant in the delivery of primary contract health care.

These three committees were of the opinion that not only was the training of a nurse the most desirable educational base for such a person, but that also the availability of many nurses within the province together with their present widespread acceptance by the public as a recognized allied health worker, made the nurse the prime candidate to serve in whatever capacity might evolve as the nurse practitioner assistant. There are studies, I understand, going on at the present time at McMaster and Queen's universities.

There is a project at Sioux Lookout, sponsored by the Toronto Hospital for Sick Children and the northern health services branch of The Department of National Health and Welfare, and this project has met with a very positive response among many health officials. It is based on a hospital in Sioux Lookout. It has as its purpose the provision of improved health services for the over 16,000 Indian people who live in the area bounded by Hudson Bay, Lake Superior, the Manitoba border and Hearst. These people were either without services or dependent upon outpost nursing stations. The federal Minister of National Health and Welfare has undertaken to provide accommodation for such nursing stations and to ensure their radio contact with the hospital in Sioux Lookout as well as snowmobile, aircraft and other travel accommodation, if possible.

The outpost nursing stations are manned primarily by nurses whose activities include general health care and assessment, midwifery, minor surgery and general paediatric and medical supervision. They are able to obtain advice by radio-telephone to Sioux Lookout, and are visited periodically by doctors from the Hospital for Sick Children.

Physician manpower in Sioux Lookout consists of one or more doctors in the employ of the northern health services division with a rotation of paediatric residents of obstetrical, dermatological, internal medicine and other residents from the University of Toronto.

Nurses employed in these outpost regions in general require skill, training and experience in areas not usually available to persons graduating from either diploma schools of nursing or indeed the baccalaureate university programmes. In particular, midwifery is a most desirable skill.

This prototype in northern Ontario could very well be expanded to other areas of the north and throughout the province, such as our isolated or rural areas which do not have a doctor. Of course, the people in these areas throughout the province, wherever they may be, are paying as much for medical care, according to their ability to pay, as are those in our built-up areas, towns and cities.

As Dr. D. M. McPhail said to a conference on paramedical personnel in Ottawa last week, the next area the nurse practitioners should be used in are those which have only one doctor and face the prospect of having none when the present doctor retires. Next on the list should be ghetto areas which often are near a large teaching hospital.

I suggest that such personnel could serve a very useful role in community clinics as well as in doctors' offices doing routine administration, thus freeing the doctor to do more skilful medical services. It would have the effect of increasing the output of our medical team.

Dr. D. M. McPhail, in stressing the need for assistants, quoted a Canadian Medical Association estimate that Canada will be short 25,000 doctors by 1991 with the outlying areas showing the shortages before then. If he is correct, then we had better get our pilot project for nurse practitioners under way, and evaluate and, if possible, these auxiliaries into widespread operation, especially to help our isolated northern communities as well as many one-doctor rural communities in the south.

I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the Speech from the Throne would have announced a thorough-going overhaul of our OHSIP and OHSC plans, but, of course, it was noticeably silent on these programmes. Generally speaking, the people of the province are very unhappy about the way these plans operate.

One of my colleagues received a letter from a doctor in his area just yesterday, and this is the doctor's evaluation of OHSIP. He writes:

Along with many other physicians, we have tried to co-operate with government by submitting accounts directly to OHSIP or Healthco carriers. In spite of this co-operation, we have met with poor payment of accounts and have even spent a day at OHSIP offices in an effort to iron out our difficulties. Several things are apparent:

1. OHSIP suggested the use of a foil imprinting system to facilitate handling of accounts. We spent something like $600 to acquire this equipment only to find that OHSIP changes subscribers' numbers so frequently that the equipment is more of a liability than an asset. We have even had families carrying several OHSIP cards, all with different numbers and no effective dates listed.

2. OHSIP has, at last count, some 71 reasons for failure to pay accounts. They have adopted, it would appear, the attitude that all mistakes, whether theirs, the subscribers' or physicians', are justification for refusal to pay an account. They have spent vast sums of the taxpayers' money for computers that are able to cross-reference and correct any number of errors on account cards, but they refuse to provide this service. They are even able to provide an up-to-date OHSIP number in seconds, but never give this new number to the physician, and frequently fail to make the new number known to the patient.

It is virtually impossible to keep up with the numbers game being played by OHSIP. A recent bulletin from that organization suggests that shortly they intend to change subscribers' numbers en masse, making our present office records totally obsolete overnight. After my visit to OHSIP I came away impressed with the fact that their sole function is not the patient's health, but rather the processing of appropriate completed IBM cards, and that, since they change subscribers' details without advising either physician or subscriber, completion of the IBM card to their satisfaction becomes virtually impossible.

I would once again like to point out that this is totally unnecessary as they have complete facilities to process even inaccurate claim cards.

If you would like to see some examples of the mess they have created, I would be pleased to show you some records at your convenience.

That is a doctor's evaluation of the way OHSIP handles its accounts.

Of course, one remembers the government announced in October last year that there are to be administrative changes in OHSIP and OHSC so that they are joined together by July 1, 1972, under OHIC, the Ontario Health Insurance Commission. Even more welcome was the news that the designated agents known as Healthco would also be phased out.

We were never in favour of them in the first place and they, along with HIRB, have created an administrative nightmare that has inflicted a "bad trip" on the people of Ontario right from the inception of OHSIP. When the plans are joined together, it might just be that the government will come up with compatible computers this time around.

During the past year, I have spoken at length in this chamber and during the estimates of the kind of health care programme the New Democratic Party proposes as an alternative to the one we now have.

We continue to be appalled at the government's refusal to change the premium structure of the present schemes. We live in the richest province, yet pay the highest premiums for health care of any province in Canada. The funding of such schemes so largely by premiums is a regressive form of taxation that bears little relationship to one's ability to pay. We have advocated, when we unveiled our plan—and we agree with the government—that OHSIP and OHSC should be joined together under one number for administrative purposes. Contrary to the government, we believe that the funding should be on a different basis.

We believe that to the present coverage of our present plan should be added coverage for nursing homes and prescription drugs. With this package will come a combination of an increase in the personal income tax in the form of an eight per cent surcharge on present income tax in order to make the tax progressive rather than simply proportional. Added to this will be a three per cent corporate income tax, with sharply reduced premiums of $10 a month for family coverage and $5 for single-person coverage.

The Liberals raise the hue and cry that they are going to do away with OHSIP premiums altogether, but they have said absolutely nothing about doing way with premiums for the Ontario hospital plan. So they will still be exacting $132 a year in premiums from families and $66 a year from single persons. Nor have the Liberals said anything about extending the health care coverage to include other costs such as we have done.

Even the member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) has talked about doing away with premiums for OHSIP, but there is still no word from him about OHSC. What his influence on the government will be, no one knows; but it is expected that they will try to keep him muffled.

For the time being premium exemption must be extended to OHSC premiums on the same basis as it is now extended for OHSIP but shortly, I suggest, the amount of taxable income that affects the exemptions will need to be revised upward to give more assistance to low-income citizens.

The ultimate objective of the New Democratic Party is the complete elimination of all premiums. Firstly, because they are a regressive form of taxation and, secondly, it will mean the possibility of being uninsured will no longer exist for any person in Ontario.

It will be possible to eliminate these premiums when we get meaningful tax reform in this province and when the potential cost-saving programmes of health care are implemented and become widespread in this province. Personally I believe it will not take long for the New Democratic government to move to the elimination of premiums for our health care programmes.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): It will take a long time.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): We will never know how long.

Mr. Ferrier: I have no intention of outlining a policy that is not feasible economically.

Mr. Sargent: It is very important to get elected first.

Mr. Ferrier: We will get there. Do not worry about that.

We also believe that double billing by doctors must be eliminated by direct negotiation with the OMA. An acceptable agreement can be worked out so that OHSIP pays the total doctor's bill, whether it be 90 per cent of the OMA schedule of fees or whatever. But it should pay the whole thing.

We also believe that it is desirable to use the full federal grant to offset the cost of the operation of our Medicare programme rather than devote some of it to other needs, no matter how worthy they may be.

There remains for me but one final point to consider in this speech and that is dental care. The state of dental care in Ontario in 1970—in 1971—is far from what it should be—

Hon. Mr. Snow: It is last year's speech, the member forgot to change the date.

Mr. Ferrier: —compared with other countries of a similar socio-economic status. In terms of available dental services Ontario, with one dentist for 2,500 persons, ranks behind all the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Austria, the US, Australia and Switzerland. As I stand here today, less than half the people in the province receive little or no dental care.

Mr. Sargent: Shame!

Mr. Ferrier: In fact, a report of the committee on the healing arts suggested that two-thirds of the community regard dental services as being of minor importance. The committee also said:

The need for better services is enormous. The entire population requires more preventive care than now can be provided and, even worse, the existing volume of repair work required to bring the population up to an adequate level of dental health could not conceivably be provided by the existing service.

Someone, I suggest, is bungling the job of developing and spreading around the services that our society is capable of offering.

The clincher comes when the spokesmen for the profession tend to minimize the apparent shortage of services to patients, flying in the face of both common sense and the conclusions of every responsible study, provincial or federal, carried out independently in the last few decades. Essentially, this is because those who believe that the existing supplies of dental services are reasonably adequate tend to look not at estimates of need as such, but at the effective demand for dental services in the community.

These demands, I suggest, are muffled to a great extent and depend partly on economics, partly on the eradication of ignorance about dental hygiene, and personal dental care, partly on the quality of diets available, and on half-a-dozen other factors which tend to disguise the real needs of people.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Diets available or diets selected.

Mr. Ferrier: The economic factor, of course, is a major deterrent to people seeking dental care. I have been told by a responsible person at the University of Toronto's faculty of dentistry that there are dentists in Toronto with gaps in their appointment books, so that there are dentists available in this area to meet more of the dental demands of the local people.

Yet when the school of dentistry open their telephone lines each fall to accept patients for the students to work on during the coming terms, they only have to keep them open five days in one week as they receive at least 4,000 calls a day, seeking appointments. The demand is there but the economic deterrent is too great for a good many people to seek dental care.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Hear, hear!

Mr. Ferrier: Under private insurance plans for dental care, I am informed that less than one per cent of the population is presently covered for dental care. How far thinking is retarded in this area is indicated by the fact that 70 per cent of the population was already covered by some form of medical insurance before Ontario's Medicare scheme became reality. We have a lot of catching up to do with dental care.

There also exists a terrific disparity because of an uneven distribution of dentists throughout the province. How does the lack of adequate dental facilities affect an area? Take the village of Apsley which is situated on Highway 28 about 30 miles from the nearest dental clinic available. There are 186 pupils in the Apsley Central School with no dentist to go to. The principal of the school reported in an article in the Peterborough Examiner in October, 1970 on cases of the children of seven families whose teeth were completely rotted away. He said:

They suffer extreme pain but we cannot give them as much as an aspirin to relieve their troubles. We have 104 children in primary grades. It is important for them to retain their first teeth but with no dentists available, there is nothing that can be done at the school to see that proper dental care is accomplished.

Children do not have regular examinations to their teeth unless they travel great distances to obtain this service. We have children at school who will never be able to speak correctly due to decayed teeth.

Our speech therapist has supplied a list of families who will be advised to have proper dental care for their children. It is one thing to ask them to have this work done but if they do not have the money for the transportation and the dental work, how can this be accomplished?

Apsley is 40 miles from the city of Peterborough with a population dentist ratio of one to every 1,571 persons. That puts it in the top ten in the province. The ratio for the county of Peterborough is about 25 per cent worse at one to 2,107, but good enough to rate second best in Ontario. Only York county has a better ratio.

In all of Ontario, only Peterborough and nine other counties do better than the provincial average of one to 2,500. A full 43 other counties have less than one dentist for each 2,500 population. The deficiency is unsettling. Peel has only one dentist for 4,850 people. Cochrane and Prince Edward have one dentist for 5,000. Haliburton, Lennox and Addington have one dentist for more than 8,000. Prescott and Russell can attract one dentist for every 12,158 people.

These figures, Mr. Speaker, are taken from an 1967 unpublished study by Dr. A. M. Hunt entitled, "Projected Needs for Dentists in Ontario." While they may not be 100 per cent accurate on a present-day basis, they are close enough to give a clear picture on the situation in this province.

The deficiency is not entirely an economic problem. There are poor counties with a good ratio, and affluent counties with a bad one. Geography seems to have a significant effect. So too, does the level of education.

Nevertheless, Apsley is relatively well situated in the province. In the summer months, there are more than 10,000 people in this district at cottages and resorts. During the winter there are 2,000 potential patients plus an ever-increasing number of winter vacationists.

Apsley, remember—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member give himself a place to break?

Mr. Ferrier: I have about two paragraphs, then I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I would think if the hon. member is within a few minutes of completing his speech the House would be agreeable to his completing everything.

Mr. Ferrier: It will take about 10 to 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Then of course the hon. member might find a suitable place to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Ferrier: After two paragraphs I will move the adjournment.

Mr. Sargent: Can the member get to the meat of his subject?

Mr. Ferrier: Apsley, remember, is in a county with next to the best population dentist ratio in Ontario. According to my information, to this day, it still cannot get a dentist to serve its needs. There are such gaps in Peterborough county. Imagine what the need must be in the less populated regions of Prescott, Russell, Haliburton or Rainy River. I do not pretend that Apsley is typical of towns in the province but neither it is exceptional.

The situation here is symptomatic of the way Ontario dentists have come to organize themselves to serve the needs of a scattered population. To me it indicates the fact that the distribution of dental services in Ontario is guided as much by the rules of supply and demand and the patterns of customer service as by public health needs.

Mr. Ferrier moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I would like to advise the hon. members that we will continue with the Throne debate on Monday, and in fact all next week. We will sit three evenings next week—Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting government House Leader if in fact the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) will present the budget in the evening session?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I understand, Mr. Speaker, it is on the evening of April 26 the Treasurer will be presenting the budget.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What prime-time, non-NHL night does the government have for the opposition to reply?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We are discussing that with one of the senior officials of the NHL at the present time, who is fairly close to us.

Mr. Speaker: In order that there may be no misunderstanding, the information which Mr. Speaker has lately received was that the budget would be at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of April 26, but I have nothing but verbal information in respect to that, so I think the members should just plan on Monday, April 26, for the budget.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There should not be any hockey fans left in Ontario anyway.

Hon. Mr. Kerr moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon our guests in the east gallery are students from Elmbank Middle School in Rexdale and Gladstone Senior Public School in Toronto; and in the west gallery from Oak Park Junior High School in Toronto and Tomkin Road Senior Public School in Mississauga.

Later this afternoon there will be students from Brant District Girl Guides in Burlington; and this evening the 15th Agincourt "A" Cub Pack from Willowdale and the 12th Agincourt Scout Troop from Willowdale will be with us.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that in the Speech from the Throne it was announced that the committee on government productivity would direct a comprehensive study of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

The terms of reference require the committee on government productivity, "to inquire into all matters pertaining to the management of the government of Ontario and to make such recommendations as in its opinion will improve its efficiency and effectiveness." Therefore, as part of its work, the committee is studying the functions and arrangements of government boards, agencies and commissions.

Because of the large size and complexity of Ontario Hydro and its importance to the wellbeing of the people and economic strength of our province, the committee has created Task Force Hydro.

This task force will be made up of members of the business, industry and academic communities and will include knowledgeable representatives of Ontario Hydro and the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, as well as the staff of the committee on government productivity.

Task Force Hydro will review the objectives, function, structure, operations and financing of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. It is expected to take about one year to complete its work.

The study will be conducted under the guidance of a five-man steering committee. The chairman of the steering committee will be the president of the Canadian Tire Corporation, J. Dean Muncaster. The other members are the president of Crothers Limited, Hugh A. Crothers; the vice-president and treasurer of the Steel Company of Canada Limited, Robert B. Taylor; the president of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, Andrew Frame; and the general manager of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Douglas J. Gordon.

In addition, the dean of engineering science at the University of Western Ontario, R. M. Dillon, has been granted leave of absence so that he may act in a full-time capacity as executive director of the task force and as an ex-officio member of the steering committee.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I beg leave to table a copy of correspondence between myself and Mr. Robert D. Howland, chairman of the National Energy Board, concerning the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited's application to export electrical energy to Boise Cascade's operation in the United States.

This correspondence will clarify the government's position with respect to this application. Rather than taking the time of the House by reading this lengthy correspondence, I have provided copies for the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP group.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

TASK FORCE HYDRO

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, further to the statement made by the Premier: Can he tell us if he has any specific time limit set on the deliberations of Task Force Hydro; and secondly if the terms of reference specifically include advice to the government on rate approval procedures?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference are broad enough for the committee to discuss this item. As I said in the statement itself, it is expected to take about one year.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: The Premier has no objection then to the examination of rate approval procedures, although it is not per se in the terms?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The material would be included in that.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question of the Prime Minister: Would the Prime Minister consider adding to that group some members of the Legislature and some consumers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not to prompt any discussion of any lengthy nature, I think it is quite appropriate that if the members of the standing committee that will be dealing with this particular commission wish to discuss this with Hydro, obviously when the report comes in will be a good opportunity for full discussion by members of the Legislature. I think this would be the appropriate way to do it.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): We will need a motion from the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No we do not as a matter of fact.

Mr. Deans: Can I ask, by way of one further supplementary question, whether the Prime Minister can assure us that during the time this review is being undertaken there will be no rate increases?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, obviously I cannot give that assurance.

The question of rate increase is not really related to this particular function; it is a question of the structure, methods of approval and so on. I cannot undertake to assure the hon. member that there will not be a rate increase.

Mr. Deans: Is the Prime Minister aware, by way of further supplementary, that—

Mr. Speaker: The final supplementary by this member.

Mr. Deans: Is the Prime Minister aware that the chairman of Hydro, Mr. Gathercole, stated last year that there would be increases every year for the next three years? And would the Prime Minister agree that studying it now, while permitting increases to take place, is in actual fact negating the whole purpose of this study?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is only one part of the study. As I recall the chairman of Hydro's observations, it was an anticipated increase—he did not state specifically that there would be rate increases.

Mr. Deans: He said he would be surprised if it was not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are always surprised at certain things. That does not mean they necessarily come to pass.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That said 1970.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition a supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Prime Minister if any of the people mentioned on the committee are from northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether they are from northwestern Ontario. I think the chairman of the committee has had some relationship to the north, I will check into—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He is from Sudbury, as usual.

Hon. Mr. Davis: From northeastern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: North-central.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be quite prepared to check out—

Mr. Sopha: A bit north.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —the geographic backgrounds of all of these people to find out if, over a period of time, any of them have had some involvement in the northwest.

Mr. Stokes: Does the Prime Minister not think it is important that they too should have a voice?

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, yes! The Premier asserted in a letter to the United Electrical Workers, March 11, 1971, in Hamilton:

While it is true that relatively modest increases in hydro have been made within the past few months, there are absolutely no commitments beyond the present and I can assure you that no long range plans for increases are being laid.

How does the Premier reconcile that with the assertion of the chairman of Hydro, that he anticipates increases for three years; and the assertion of Dr. Hay, chairman of the Kingston Public Utilities Commission, that there will be increases averaging seven per cent until 1978?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, there is no conflict whatsoever. One was a statement that was made, perhaps in anticipation.

As I stated earlier, when somebody says maybe these things will happen, I believe the proof of the pudding is in the eating. There has been no indication that Hydro will in fact do it.

Mr. Lewis: There is every indication.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

EXPORT OF POWER

Mr. Nixon: A question further to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Is it a proper assumption, having read his letter to the chairman of the National Energy Board, that Ontario will not approve the export of power under the circumstances of the request of Boise Cascade up until the present time? In other words, their plan to extend by the development of a veneer mill and stud mill has been vetoed.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the letter referred to by the hon. Leader of the Opposition indicates that in the event that there is any plan, as a result of the export of this power, to build a new plant at International Falls, that this would have to have the approval of the Ontario government; so in effect the answer to the hon. member's question is yes.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Because the letter indicates that the government would permit the expansion of the present facility, why could they not tack it onto their veneer mill, that is their present facility, and then get government approval on that basis?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No; I think, Mr. Speaker, the idea that there would be a stud mill or a fine paper mill is something that would not be considered an expansion on an existing facility. I think we can certainly divide or separate those two moves, if they in fact do take place.

We have also indicated in the letter not only the question of expansion or new plants, but also the question of loss of job opportunities on the Canadian side; so that one or two of these ingredients could in fact require the approval of the government.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If I understand it then, the government is approving an increase of up to approximately 20,000 kilowatts per year, from 16,000, but will not go all the way to 37,000 without an absolute commitment from Boise Cascade of what it is they are undertaking and whether it will have any effect on the northwest.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, not entirely, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the present capacity is around 14,500 kilowatts. The total agreement—the application I should say—about 1980, would provide something under 30,000 kilowatts. Now as the hon. member knows, this is something that is considered by the National Energy Board. For example, the agreement I refer to in my letter made in 1961, was an application for a 10-year export permit, one might say, or an application to export power to International Falls for 10 years. The result of that application was a license for just one year, so that as any increase in power is made available by the Canadian company to the American company, which strictly is the exporter here, it would be reviewed by the board.

FARM MARKETING LEGISLATION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: Is he aware of the charges made by the Attorney General of Quebec that our recently proclaimed agricultural marketing legislation is economic separatism and, further, that he said, and I quote: "We"—that is Quebec—"are not going to lose time before the courts. We will use our own legislative methods to retaliate"?

If he is aware of those statements, made over the weekend, and even if he is not, will he undertake to get in touch with the government of Quebec himself or through his Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), so that by negotiation we can lower the temperature of this kind of interprovincial warfare, which is surely not in the best interests of anyone, let alone the farmer producers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I assure you this government will be in touch with the government of the Province of Quebec on this issue.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, is the Premier aware of the pretty definite opinions expressed by Mr. Jed Baldwin, the Conservative House leader, about Ontario's legislation on the national news last evening?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was otherwise engaged and did not see the national news last evening. I am also quite aware of the position of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, which I understand is in complete support of this legislation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just by way of supplementary, was the Premier aware in advance of the heat and extent of Mr. Choquette's observations? We were led to believe in the Legislature that deputy ministers had communicated amicably. A charge of economic separatism and retaliation is a pretty tough charge. Was Ontario talked with in advance?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just going by memory now. I, personally, have not talked to Mr. Choquette, who is the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec. My recollection was that there were discussions between The Departments of Agriculture in the two provinces and that the Quebec Department of Agriculture understood what was happening here.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): In view of Mr. Baldwin's suggestion that Ontario's manufactured goods, such as textiles and cars, not be allowed to be sold in the west, does the Prime Minister now think that this legislation may produce a mini-depression in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate this. I think this statement of Mr. Choquette's perhaps must be taken in perspective.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Baldwin!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Baldwin!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Baldwin's rather. I do not anticipate any great difficulties in sales whatsoever.

NEW OMA FEE SCHEDULE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: As the deadline for the imposition of the new fee schedule on the part of the Ontario Medical Association approaches, can he give us a further report as to how the negotiations, or discussions as he chooses to call them, with the OMA are progressing?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I was able to spend virtually the whole of this morning with representatives of the OMA. It was a very useful and constructive discussion and my hope is to have a statement ready for release to the House and presentation to the public, on Thursday or perhaps Friday of this week.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Following the release of the government's position in this regard, will the minister undertake to have the standing committee deal with it, both from the standpoint of the public interest and also the position that the OMA has been taking during these discussions, even though we have a promise from the minister that he is going to have some positive statements to make?

Surely the standing committee should be involved in these discussions, should it not?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader may ask the question, but—

Mr. Sopha: Should it not?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can make that undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Yes Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether the OMA has made it a mandatory situation; in other words, that they intend to announce on May 11 or 12, or whenever they meet, that there are no more discussions regarding the rate increase; that the decision has been made already and their increases will go through?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the misconception that arises out of the tone of a question such as that is that this in some way is similar to the bargaining of a collective agreement in an industrial sense. It is not that.

Mr. Lewis: We understand that.

Mr. Deans: In a social sense it is!

Mr. Sopha: Yes, that is the problem.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? the member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Could the minister tell us why the physicians of the province have been unable to get copies of the new fee schedule from the OMA?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Pardon?

Mr. Shulman: Why can the doctors not get copies of the new fee schedule from the OMA? I paid them and cannot get it.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I know nothing of it. I cannot answer the hon. member. That is a private association.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask the minister if he has a copy of the new fee schedule?

Mr. Sopha: Stop paying the fees to them; that is what the lawyers would do.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Personally I do not, but I believe the department does.

Mr. Shulman: As a final supplementary, may I see a copy of it?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I think the hon. member can drop over and see me any time this afternoon.

Mr. Sopha: He needs to have a copy since he has a house call later today.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: He will be paid.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

LIQUOR LEGISLATION REVIEWS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question of the Premier. In the changing of cabinet portfolio responsibilities, does the Provincial Secretary still have the continuing job of supervising the review of liquor legislation and liquor law and legislation in this province, or did that review stop when the present Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) left that position?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is still with the Provincial Secretary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Could the Premier either add to the term of reference or speak to his minister about some problems that have occurred recently, specifically the Liquor Licence Board's ability, whether it is in the regulations or not, to undertake control of activities in licensed premises even during days when liquor is not for sale such as Sunday?

Surely that is the business of the police and not the chairman of the Liquor Board?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite delighted to speak to the Provincial Secretary about this.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

PENTAGON GRANTS TO ONTARIO UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs. Can he indicate to the House what amounts of money by way of grants for funding research projects were received by Ontario universities from the Pentagon in the last academic year and what plans there are in that direction for the coming academic year?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that there were any funds received. The Pentagon is not a euphemism for Ottawa, is it?

Mr. Lewis: Not normally, no!

Hon. Mr. White: Well Ottawa provided $40 million to the Ontario universities, Mr. Speaker. I was not aware that the Pentagon had provided any money. I will be very glad to inquire and provide the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, the minister will recall that the United States Department of Defence, Air Force, Army and related administrations gave in excess of $1 million by way of grants, I think, in the last year for which information was available—the 1968-1969 academic year. I was wondering whether the pattern was continuing? The former Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said he would take it under review.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not aware of any such funds being made available, but I will check and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Regarding these research grants, can the minister inform the House whether any contracts are now being let to the 14 universities in Ontario that have veto reserve rights attached to them?

Hon. Mr. White: I do not understand this question, Mr. Speaker. Does the hon. member mean to say research grants made available to professors in Ontario universities by Ottawa?

Mr. Burr: I mean by anybody, any government or industry, where the government or the industry has the right to veto the publication if it so wishes.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not aware of this, Mr. Speaker, and in fact I do not think it is my responsibility.

If a corporation in Windsor makes a contract with a professor at the University of Windsor I suppose the terms of such a contract are the exclusive concern of the contracting parties. I suppose that if the recipient of these funds finds those terms unacceptable he will not sign the contract. I do not think it is up to the Minister of University Affairs or this government to police those private arrangements.

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that in most cases public facilities would be used to research the particular contract, would the public interest not be better served if the results of the research were made public?

Hon. Mr. White: Be that as it may—and there is an assumption, which is not necessarily correct and which takes us into an interesting and complicated area, namely the desirability or propriety of using university facilities for certain undertakings; that is something about which I wish to inform myself. I think the information is not easily available. I am not prepared to accept the assumption for the moment; and because I am not willing to accept the assumption I think it would be unwise for me to attempt an answer to the question.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for purposes of clarification, may I direct this question to the Minister of University Affairs: Is the minister saying, in response to the original question, that if the professor who is an employee or secured to the tenure of a university, enters into an independent contract with another party, that the university, or this government, has nothing to say in connection with the aspects of that contract? Is that what the hon. minister is saying?

Hon. Mr. White: In fact I said that I thought the minister and the government had no direct responsibility, and I am glad to reiterate that to my hon. friend. The reason, quite frankly, is because we are determined to safeguard as best we can—having in mind the need for accountability in the use of public funds—the autonomy of the universities. I am not going to be impelled to some direct control in instances like this, because the paramount need is to protect the independence of these institutions.

Mr. Bullbrook: Recognizing the need for the principle of security of tenure, is the minister therefore saying that the principle of autonomy that is given to universities is transferable to their professors?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I am saying that the universities must assume the responsibility—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: —and that the minister has—

Mr. Bullbrook: The hon. minister may as well sit down and go back to sleep.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: —no responsibility in these internal matters.

Oh yes I know how tempting it is to plunge into this for political purposes.

Mr. Bullbrook: The hon. minister talks in circles and says nothing.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside may have one final supplementary and then this matter will be closed.

Hon. Mr. White: I am quite aware of the dividends from that kind of cheap politics.

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister getting so aroused about?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: The hon. minister looks more and more like a hungry seagull.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): The hon. minister has learned that from the hon. member over the years.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that last September the universities—I believe it was the committee of the presidents of universities—announced that the universities were trying to reach agreement that none of them would accept any research grants if there was a veto tied to them? They expected to make the announcement shortly.

My question is, have they made this announcement? Have they reached this agreement yet?

Hon. Mr. White: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. But here again I think my hon. friend's most recent question gives some support to my position; namely that this is the responsibility of the university administrations and of their agents, the committee of university presidents.

Mr. Burr: Will the minister let us know?

Hon. Mr. White: I will find out.

Mr. Speaker: That will be the last supplementary on this matter. We will move on to something else. The member for Scarborough West.

USE OF STUDDED TIRES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs, Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister of Northern Affairs had any effect on the thinking of his cabinet colleagues regarding the use of studded tires in northern Ontario?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter lies with the Minister of Highways and Transport.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, have the impassioned pleas of the Minister of Northern Affairs to permit the use of studded tires in northern Ontario been accepted by his cabinet brethren: is it under discussion; is there a likely change in prospect?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I think the government has already announced a decision.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: Will the minister take it lightly or sitting down? Does he intend to fight back?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the floor for further questions of a proper nature if he wishes to—

ONTARIO MEDICAL GRADUATES

Mr. Lewis: That was hardly improper, it dealt directly with his honour!

Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: Since medical schools in the last year in Ontario produced 366 graduates out of a total of 742 newly-registered doctors, is it likely that the proportions are to change and that we will produce more graduates at medical schools ourselves over the next several years rather than importing practitioners from other jurisdictions, many of which cannot afford the loss of the practitioners?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Generally speaking, I think the answer to that, Mr. Speaker, would be yes. I cannot categorically state whether or not next year's graduating group will be larger or smaller than this year's, but I do know that the effective policies that are underway will increase the proportion two, three and four years from now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, would it be possible for the minister to table in the Legislature by way of reply the trend for doctor graduation in Ontario over the next two or three or four years so that we can see what is in fact occurring?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, I would have that information prepared and put on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question? The member for Windsor-Walkerville has the floor for a supplementary.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): May I ask the minister if he is prepared at this time to inform the House which of the universities in the Province of Ontario is going to be given permission to establish a medical school so that students now attending high school could prepare themselves accordingly?

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not supplementary.

Mr. B. Newman: Where will the next medical school be then?

Mr. Sopha: Tell him Laurentian.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has a supplementary?

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary question of the minister: In view of the fact that the OMA has released a report saying there is a time lag of 10 years between the establishment of a school and the turnout of students—but they did indicate that other provisions can be made in universities immediately to turn out more students—can the minister indicate what actions are being taken now to ensure that more medical students are going to be graduated in the next three or four years?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the best advice I can receive is that the problem is not necessarily the number of institutions available at the university level. The problem is more fundamental than that and relates to the capacity of our hospitals, in relation to the schools, to handle the training of the students from a clinical point of view. It is in this field that I understand the log-jams and bottlenecks can be removed and will be removed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Sudbury have a supplementary?

Mr. Sopha: No.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for High Park a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: Has the minister considered using the plan used in this province during the war, that is using the medical facilities for 12 months of the year instead of the eight and a half being used at the present time?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I will consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Then the Minister of Northern Affairs has the answer to a question asked last week.

IMPORTS OF ALBERTAN OIL

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on April 7 the member for Scarborough West put the following question to me:

Has the Province of Ontario been consulted on the proposal put forward by the National Energy Board that imports of oil from Alberta into Ontario would be decreased substantially?

I undertook to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker, and I am now in a position to say that the simple answer to that question is no.

By way of further explanation, I would refer the hon. member to the recently published annual report for 1970 of the National Energy Board and especially to pages 12 to 14 and 21 to 24 of this report. It will be seen that not only is there no reference to any proposal to restrict imports of oil from Alberta into Ontario, but on the contrary the national oil policy is being actively promoted. That policy requires that markets in the central and western parts of Ontario should be substantially supplied with products supplied from indigenous crude oil.

Mr. Speaker: I have an extra copy of the 1970 annual report of the National Energy Board and I would like to send it over to the hon. member for examination.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

WILDERNESS AREA NEAR SUDBURY

Mr. Sopha: A question, Your Honour, of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Now that he is on the point of settling the problems of Quetico Park, may I ask him what progress has been made since the House met last fall toward the establishment of a wilderness area along the route of the newly opened Sudbury-Timmins highway?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly, the question has sort of two parts—about the progress of the Quetico advisory committee?

Mr. Sopha: That was a preface.

Mr. Lewis: That was a concession.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would say, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Sudbury that he will be most interested to hear something in the very near future about the establishment of quite a large wilderness area not too far away from Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Sopha: “Sopha, Brunelle and Harkness”—not bad!

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no! “Brunelle, Harkness and Sopha.”

WIRETAPPING BY POLICE

Mr. Singer: In light of the recent statement attributed to the Metropolitan Toronto police that they tapped 57 phones during the past three months—38 by the intelligence bureau and 19 by the morality squad—could the Attorney General advise us if there is any control exercised by his office over wiretapping by police forces in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I saw that report in the newspapers and I am trying to get more information about it at the moment.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the Attorney General advise us whether he views with any concern at all the uncontrolled use of wiretapping by police forces in Ontario?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the widespread wiretapping which has been revealed by the police, has the minister considered supporting Bill 22 which would control this problem?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am as aware, as I am sure the other hon. members of the House are aware, of certain statements emanating from Ottawa respecting the control of wiretapping that will be forthcoming from that source. I look forward to seeing the actual legislation when it is presented at the federal House.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a supplementary to the Attorney General, may we presume, as a result of the lack of information that the minister is able to give us today, that neither he nor his predecessor have taken any positive initiative in connection with the control of wiretapping through the Attorney General's department?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can presume that I have taken no steps to control the use of wiretapping.

Mr. Bullbrook: Can we rightly presume his predecessor had not either? The minister gives us no information.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a proper question to address to this minister.

Mr. Bullbrook: Can you tell me, Your Honour, why it is not a proper question?

Mr. Speaker: Because the hon. member is asking this particular minister about the actions of another minister who is—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am asking him about the actions of his department.

Mr. Speaker: I rule the question out of order. The member for Brantford has the floor.

FLIGHTS INTO QUETICO PARK

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Can the minister give us an answer to the question that was raised earlier in the House regarding Quetico Park, as to who were the government people who were using government planes to fly into the park and set up temporary structures?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Firefighters.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I had asked the member to give me some more definite information. However, I have not received it. May I ask that if the member is referring to—I believe it was in 1965—that the advisory committee to the then Minister of Lands and Forests spent two or three days in Quetico Provincial Park.

This advisory committee, Mr. Speaker, is comprised of very able persons who serve without any remuneration. One of their purposes of course is to familiarize themselves with various matters that are brought to their attention. I think it is only sensible that if they want to advise the Minister of Lands and Forests on Quetico Park they should spend some time in Quetico Park. At that time they stayed in tents and the meeting was held in quite a large tent which was dismantled about two days later.

So, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see where there should be any criticism of such a committee whose express purpose is to make recommendations to the department.

Mr. Makarchuk: By way of supplementary, if this committee has made this report, would the minister table this particular report from the committee that visited the park?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to send the hon. member minutes of those meetings. I attended those meetings.

I was then a member of this advisory committee and the late Mr. Kelso Roberts was then the minister. I can tell him that we spent three very active days studying various matters and I would be pleased to make them available to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

AMERICANIZATION OF UNIVERSITY STAFFS IN ONTARIO

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs.

In view of the shortage of positions for many Ontario university postgraduate students, and in view of the present high degree of Americanization of many departments in universities in Ontario, and in view of the persistent hiring policies of some of these departments which discriminate against Canadians; does the minister intend to investigate publicly the causes or the reasons underlying this situation and adopt a corrective strategy to rectify the situation for the remainder of the Nineteen Seventies?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, my predecessor did evince his concern about certain of these allegations, and we are collecting information to see what changes, if any, should be made in those policies respecting universities.

I would certainly hope, as did my predecessor, that all other things being equal, or as you and I would say, ceteris paribus, that the Canadian applicant would be given the priority. On the other hand, I think we should not err in moving too far in that direction for fear of excluding excellent academics from other places.

So the answer in brief is that I am informing myself about it, that I will expect no radical changes, and that the government policy will be subject to review based on these changing circumstances.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question: Is the hon. minister aware, or does the hon. minister have any knowledge, that at the University of Toronto, Donald Creighton, the present but outgoing head of history, is about to be replaced by an American? If the hon. minister has any knowledge about this, perhaps he could comment upon this rather sensitive situation.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not sure now if I have heard that before or not. Here again I have to say that I see the government as having no direct role in this matter. Or is the hon. member suggesting that I select the head of that department of history?

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question if I might, Mr. Speaker: Am I to assume from the hon. minister's reply that he is not concerned with the issue of the increasing Americanization of certain departments in certain universities in this province? And if he is not aware of this, is he just going to sit back and let it go?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I did answer that question and the hon. member is repeating it in an attempt to put me in a position which I will not take. Of course we are concerned about it.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, sort of mutatis mutandis.

Hon. Mr. White: We are not going to be impelled into running all of these universities, because I suspect if we were to do so even the hon. member opposite, whose acumen is not always apparent, would object to such an arrangement.

Mr. T. Reid: A final supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: There have been sufficient supplementaries. The hon. member for Cochrane South has the floor.

COST OF NURSING HOME CARE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister now a date set when he will meet with the Minister of National Health and Welfare to discuss the taking over of the cost of nursing home care?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not.

Mr. Ferrier: Since the minister gives it the highest priority, will he set a date or make an appointment in the near future to discuss this very urgent matter?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, something will be discussed when we meet. There is a meeting tomorrow at the deputy ministers' level between his department and mine and I hope that will be followed by ministerial meetings in the near future, and that question obviously will be one thing on the agenda.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex-Kent.

HEALTH UNIT BUDGETS

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Would the minister tell the House if his department has cut budgets of health units throughout the Province of Ontario, as was ordered recently in the Windsor metro health unit where 12 nurses were given notice of layoff?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that my department cuts budgets or raises budgets. I believe that they are supplied by the local region or municipality involved in the governance of the health units. I think the health units go to that level of government and not to me for budget setting.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale.

AMENDMENT TO THE WILLS ACT

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Does the Attorney General intend to bring forth legislation in this session to amend The Wills Act, permitting an individual of the age of 18 to make a will?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I have no present intention of bringing forward any such amendment this session, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: The age of majority is not going to be changed?

Mr. Trotter: By way of a supplementary question: Would the minister be in favour of such an amendment, because I believe his predecessor was and I understood it was under consideration by the department?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: If and when any such amendment comes forward to the House, it would then be governmental policy. I think I would rather refrain from indicating any personal opinion until that time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

USE OF STUDDED TIRES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of transportation and communications.

Why is the minister being so—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would address the appropriate minister, there being no such minister in the House at the moment.

Mr. Stokes: That is what he is being touted as in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, with the rest of us, knows what the departments are, and he will use the proper terminology.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but you are perpetrating a fraud then, we—

Mr. Stokes: Why is the minister being so hidebound about the use of studded tires in northern Ontario? Is the minister not aware that studded tires do not have the adverse effect on road surfaces in northern Ontario that they might have elsewhere? And is he not aware that they do not obliterate the centre line and that studded tires are an absolute necessity for the safety that is so important to life and limb and personal property in northern Ontario?

Mr. Lewis: The government is going to lose Kenora on top of everything else.

Mr. Makarchuk: Not only their lives but probably the government's too.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I would say in reply to the hon. member for Thunder Bay that that is hardly a yes or no question.

Mr. Stokes: I do not want a yes or no answer either.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the member is not going to get one either, Mr. Speaker.

My answer to that question is that there is a renewed study being undertaken by the Canada Safety Council into the broad aspects of the use of studded tires.

Mr. Lewis: Another study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Canada Safety Council has undertaken a study because it has an overwhelming interest in matters associated with highway safety. We are inclined to wait for the decision of the Canada Safety Council for its recommendations. We are aware of the fact that there are different aspects to the use of studded tires in the north versus the south. We are not convinced and we will not be until we learn a little more about whether, on a broad basis, these tires contribute to highway safety to any appreciable extent, either in the north or the south.

That is about the best that I can say to the hon. member. This matter is still under pursuit.

It may be of interest to the House, in terms of the use of studded tires, that many of the states which adjoin Canada, ranging from Minnesota on the west right through to New York on the east, are in the process of considering—and some may be well implementing—the same ban that is being contemplated and probably will go into effect in Ontario. Minnesota may do that very shortly. Wisconsin and Michigan are giving it serious consideration, and so is the state of New York.

It is recognized that the studs have some safety value as far as glare ice is concerned; and beyond that at this point in time, the department cannot see any useful aspect of studded tires.

The matter is being pursued. As I explained to the hon. member, we are waiting for the report of the Canada Safety Council.

Mr. Stokes: As a supplementary, is it fair—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary: The member for Thunder Bay has the right to ask a question.

Mr. Stokes: Is it fair to say then, that the hon. minister's department is still open-minded about the subject vis-à-vis northern Ontario?

Mr. Singer: They are the most open-minded people there are.

Mr. Trotter: In one ear and out the other; that is how open-minded they are.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I regard that to some extent as a hypothetical question and I am not going to be categorical with the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: I have a mind to be open-minded; how true!

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has a further supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: To put it another way, is it fair then, to say the legislation is still under review?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is hypothetical for them to be open-minded; let us leave it that way!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It is hypothetical. They have to be open-minded.

Mr. Nixon: It either is or it is not.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is fair, I suppose, for the Leader of the Opposition to say anything. I do not think that I am prepared to pursue the question any further than I have already and say that—

Mr. Nixon: The minister says it is now under review?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, it is under review by the Canada Safety Council.

Mr. Lewis: But not by the hon. minister?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We are going to rely on their advice. Whether it results in any form of continued use of studded tires, or some other sensible alternative that does not do the damage to our roads and whose performance, insofar as safety is concerned is better, then we may well take a look at it. I can be categorical and say that there are grave doubts, not only in this jurisdiction but other associated jurisdictions, about the overall safety factors associated with studded tires.

Mr. Stokes: Four hundred thousand people in northern Ontario cannot be wrong.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The minister has made a statement that indicates to me that nothing further is to be gained by supplementaries. The member for Waterloo North has the floor.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Yes, a supplementary question Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: The statement was that there can be grave doubts and serious doubts.

Mr. Good: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No, this is a new question, if the member wishes a new question.

CAR HORSEPOWER RATINGS

Mr. Good: A new question! Then I shall direct this new question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Since the car insurance companies in Ontario have for the past few years been placing special ratings on high performance—or high horsepower cars—would the minister take the necessary steps to prevent the car manufacturers from juggling their horsepower ratings to show minimum horsepower rather than maximum horsepower; and also from their practice of changing their serial numbers so that the horsepower ratings are not identifiable from the serial number on the car?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and look into the matter raised by the hon. member. I cannot give him an answer as to what has been done up to this moment in studying that problem.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

COST DIFFERENCES IN COMPARABLE DRUGS

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: Can the minister indicate whether any study has been done by his department to determine the difference in costs of comparable drugs in the province, as was done by the food and drug directorate in Ottawa, and whether there is any intention by his department to publish in a separate index those drugs that show a difference in cost in excess of 100 per cent?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: As far as I know, the answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

The second edition of the Parcost index is coming out. Again, my recollection is, in reading it, that it only relates to selected, economically significant, drugs; in other words the ones that sell in a large enough volume to have some significance from the point of view of the public and the market as a whole.

Again, there are a vast number of other drugs which sell in Canada and occasionally in Ontario in very limited quantities, and in isolated cases they may be found to be very cheap. But again, as far as I know, there is no publication intended, on the part of this department or this government, in relation to those last mentioned drugs.

He will find, I may say to the hon. member, this kind of information being developed by the federal directorate. Each of their reports I have seen recently on this has brought out a fairly large table including the whole spectrum of all drugs of a particular type sold in the whole of Canada. Their approach, of course, is not from the point of view of the market, it is more an academic ascertainment of total prices and total qualities.

Mr. Deans: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Mr. Deans: It was nice to get there just at the end.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

KEDAR MINES LIMITED

In the absence of Mr. Meen, Mr. G. E. Smith moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting Kedar Mines Limited.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North has a statement.

Mr. M. Hamilton (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House on a matter concerning the committee on natural and physical resources. There will be a meeting of this committee at 10 a.m. on Wednesday, April 21. It had been planned to have the Ontario Food Council appear before the committee. However, I have been advised that the chairman, Mr. D. E. Williams, will be away for some two weeks.

Under the circumstances, I have taken the liberty of inviting the chairman and members of the Milk Commission of Ontario to appear before us on Wednesday next. I think the appearance of the milk commission is most appropriate at this time. There have been many changes in the organization of milk marketing in Ontario in recent times, the most recent being market sharing quotas for milk producers, and plant supply quotas for processing plants. I trust that the arrangements for this meeting will meet with the approval of the members of the committee.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question by way of clarification: It was my understanding—and I learned of this on Friday afternoon—that the Ontario Milk Marketing Board would be invited before the committee. Apparently, this has now been changed. It is now the commission, as I gather?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it will be the commission.

Mr. Gaunt: I was wondering why the change was made. Could the Ontario Milk Marketing Board not be made—

Mr. Speaker: I think that could be properly taken up in the committee, rather than in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, or a point of clarification. Since I gather that other members of the committee were not consulted but that the chairman made the decision, perhaps he could indicate to the House in advance of the meeting why the milk marketing board has been excluded?

Mr. Hamilton: This was done after considerable consultation, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: With whom?

Mr. Speaker: This again, as far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, is a matter for the committee.

Mr. Lewis: With whom does the chairman consult?

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the report was accepted in the House. I would like to know with whom the chairman of the committee consults if not with his fellow members of the committee?

Mr. Speaker: There is no report in the House. The hon. member as chairman was announcing the meeting of a committee. If there is any discussion of that, then of course the proper place is at the committee, and then if it comes to the House—

Mr. Lewis: How much manipulation of the committee will the Speaker accept?

Mr. Speaker: —if it comes to the House from the committee, properly, then of course it is a matter for debate in this House. At the moment it is not.

Orders of the day.

Mr. Trotter: The minister tells them what to do.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, one fact is clear: In Ontario today we face a serious shortage of dental services. In terms of services to children, a child is lucky if he happens to live in North York, where the dentist-to-population ratio is one to 1,538; where, I understand, a dental programme is in effect in the school. But compare his chances with the children who live in Grey-Bruce, Wellington, Thunder Bay, Kenora, Lanark or Elgin, where the ratio is about one to 2,900, just a bit worse than the provincial average.

About 20 per cent of Ontario's children under 13 live in these areas, but less than half of them whose teeth need attention will get it. In North York we will be able to get at close to 60 per cent of the decayed teeth in children. In other words, where there is a ratio of 2,900 there is an opportunity drop of 30 per cent. These counties, remember, are the ones approaching the provincial average ratio.

Did you know that 72 per cent of all children under 13 live in areas of the province where the ratio is worse than 2,900? About 13 per cent of these live in areas where the ratio is approximately 6,000. About half their teeth are decayed and need filling, 40 per cent are missing or need extraction. We managed to fill only 13.3 per cent of their teeth compared to almost 60 per cent in the counterpart group in North York.

The government, along with the dental profession, is too complacent about Ontario's dental care record, and is too ready to overlook the fact that in the total view of things the quantity and distribution of services is at least as important as the level of technical achievement.

The government's plan to give a bursary to any dental undergraduate student on the provision that he practice a year in an under-serviced area for each year he receives the bursary is good; as well as guaranteeing a dentist $22,000 a year income if he moves into a under-serviced area.

However this programme, to work more effectively, should consider the following additions: Many young dentists would go to an under-serviced area for a few years, yet hesitate to do so because of the capital investment required to equip an office. When the dentist decides to move elsewhere, maybe to a more populated area, he takes a big loss when he has to sell his equipment, if indeed he can sell it.

Moreover, a number of young married dentists on the bursary plan now have a great deal of trouble getting the necessary loans upon graduation to buy the equipment to set up their offices. My suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that either the provincial government on its own in conjunction with municipal governments in under-serviced areas undertake to equip dental offices and lease them to a dentist when he sets up his practice.

If he moves in a few years an office is available to lease to another graduate who may wish to settle there and the original dentist does not suffer unreasonable capital loss.

Be this as it may, the government's bursary programme is only a drop in the bucket in meeting the overwhelming needs that exist. The answer is not to be found just in turning out more dentists every year. That has the treadmill effect of just keeping up with the increasing demands of the population.

Even if we added three new dental faculties to the province tomorrow, assuming that we had the resources to do that, each graduating 100 dentists per year, we would still have a ratio of one dentist per 1,700 population in 1981. In areas of the province where we have such a ratio now, as in York county for example, we are still unable to treat 42 per cent of children up to age 13.

This situation would presumably worsen if services were offered free because demand would increase. We cannot produce anywhere near 300 new dentists a year, and if we could, we would not be near solving the problem. The obvious fact, to me, is to increase the productivity of the dentists we already have and of their auxiliaries; as well as expanding the role of the auxiliaries we already have, and also setting up a new category of auxiliaries.

The federal ad hoc committee on dental auxiliaries reported in 1970. On page 5 of this report we have this statement:

There is no doubt that the dentist needs auxiliary personnel of one type or another. Indeed, these personnel to date have improved his productivity while at the same time increasing his income. For example, in 1963 dentists with one chair and no full-time helpers had an average net income of $9,097, while those with one chair and one assistant had an average net income of $13,366. Dentists with two chairs and no employees had a net income of $13,108; with one assistant, $15,974; and with one assistant plus one hygienist, $19,851.

All the gains are not necessarily due to productivity alone because in many places dentists who earn more may simply charge more. The American Dental Association reported, however, that dentists with two full-time employees saw 25 per cent more patients in a year than did those with one. In Canada, the overall ratio of hygienist to dentist was 1 to 18 in 1968. That is, less than six per cent of the dentists were able to make use of the only auxiliary who could work intra-orally. Hygienists, therefore, because of their limited numbers have not been able to play the role they are capable of playing in the overall productivity of Canadian dentists.

It is necessary Mr. Speaker, I believe, for the government with all haste to proceed to train many more dental hygienists, probably at the community college level; and along with the recommendation of this Wells report, amend The Dental Technicians Act to provide an expanded role for the hygienist as far as the duties she will be permitted to perform are concerned.

Furthermore, there are two prototypes of dental auxiliaries who have been in operation for a number of years and who have, by and large, received favourable enough reports for us to introduce them in Ontario. They are the United Kingdom dental auxiliary and the New Zealand type of dental nurse. In New Zealand, the dental nurse has a long history of working in the school system. The first school dental nurses were graduated in 1925.

The intra-oral duties of the school dental nurse include dental examinations, prophylaxis—including scaling and removal of stains—the filling of deciduous and permanent teeth under local anaesthesia and the radiographic examination of the teeth and supporting structures. The dental nurse's services are restricted to children under 14 years of age.

The UK dental auxiliary plays a similar role. A report of the general dental council of the UK evaluating her role notes:

From the observation of the assessors, it is evident that they found that most of the work—simple fillings and so on—of dental auxiliaries was of high quality. The evidence of the employing authorities also shows that the quality of clinical work is high.

As a minimum a pilot project using these auxiliaries should be introduced into Ontario immediately. I suggest that some thought should be given as to the training of this kind of auxiliary for our future needs.

Recommendation 31 of the Wells report goes as follows:

That dental care in its broadest sense be offered to all Canadians incorporating the same principles of quality control and financing as medical care, as soon as possible.

This recommendation squares entirely with the New Democratic Party's goal as far as dental care is concerned.

In any government we form we shall move in this direction as soon as possible. However, because of the terrific amount of dental work presently not being done, much more would have to be done immediately were a full dental care scheme to be introduced in one full sweep of the pen. Because of the present shortage of dental personnel it is therefore not possible to enter a dental care scheme other than by a staged programme. It will be necessary to provide facilities for training New Zealand type auxiliaries and to go ahead and train them.

To some extent it will be necessary to get more dentists into the field. The first step that this government should take immediately is to do as Quebec is doing and to implement recommendations 32 to 38 of the Wells report.

Basically this means starting a publicly financed programme, whereby we start with younger children and encompass new age groups on an annual basis until school leaving children have been included, at which time the whole Canadian population should be included, as in recommendation 31. We want this course of action now, without any delay.

The first step is of top priority. The leaders in the dental field with whom I have spoken are waiting for the government to move so that they can go into operation to make the necessary arrangements for its implementation.

In addition to what I am proposing, I suggest that we find ways and means of covering pensioners and long-term welfare recipients with prepaid dental care as soon as possible. While some on provincial pensions are covered, those on federal pensions are not.

Specifically, the cost of dentures are a heavy burden to pensioners. While the cost of such may be picked up by the municipal welfare departments on a 50-50 cost-sharing basis with the province, it is an optional programme so that many welfare departments budget only a relatively low amount for them.

The administrator of the Cochrane district welfare board recently told me that under his jurisdiction there is a waiting list of 150 people needing dentures. His budget is such that it will be a long time before those on the bottom of the list receive dentures. It surely is a tragedy that many old age pensioners and such, who desperately need dentures in the worst way, are subjected to such delays and frustrations.

The Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), in reply to one of my questions the other day, said he believed in a full dental care plan and would move on it when feasible, and that consideration was being given to the programme starting with school children and encompassing new age groups. I hope that he is serious, that he is committed to this action.

I urge him to make this initial step right now. At any event it has top priority with us, and given the opportunity we shall move on it upon assumption of office.

Over the last number of years, successive Tory administrations have not put high enough priority in their allotment of funds to meet obvious and pressing human need in a number of different fields. Because our health care system has not benefitted from long term co-ordinated planning, nor is it even now receiving the benefits of a real overhaul and significant restructuring, we have a system that is unnecessarily costly.

The government says that it cannot allocate any more funds for the health field. About two weeks ago the headlines of the various Toronto papers were saying "Staff Shortage; Some Retarded Children in Cages." The lead paragraph in the April 6 edition Toronto Daily Star by Claire Hoy, states:

Mentally retarded children in a provincial hospital at Orillia are being strapped into beds completely enclosed by cages because of the lack of staff to look after them.

The administrator of the Orillia Hospital for the Retarded, R. J. Wilson, is quoted further on in the same article:

We would like to get rid of these cage cots, we do not like them. If we had the staff we could probably avoid this kind of restraint.

An hon. member: Oh, they are crazy!

Mr. Ferrier: This kind of situation exists in Ontario today because the government, by its lack of foresight and present inaction, spends money that need not be spent and allows human beings to be treated inhumanely, as those retarded children are in Orillia—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Nonsense!

Mr. Ferrier: —because they say they cannot afford the staff to look after them properly.

There is another illustration of government stupidity about health spending right in my own constituency of Cochrane South. In the summer of 1968 a $6.5 million Ontario Hospital, now known as the Northeastern Regional Mental Health Centre, was officially opened in South Porcupine. The budget was allotted so that the hospital could become operational. Staff was hired so that the treatment programme in the hospital and throughout the region could get under way. Soon patients were receiving treatment in the hospital and the regional programme was meeting with a favourable response.

At this point the government was prepared to co-operate and made reasonable grants for all legitimate needs, and as the programme was developing and expanding, one would naturally think the government would continue to allocate sufficient funds to make it fully operational, especially since it was a new facility. But no, when the freeze went upon all spending in the mental health field, Northeastern, like all other Ontario Hospitals, had to hold the line.

As a result, the significant part of the hospital is still not utilized for patient care. Additional staff cannot be hired to treat more patients and open up new wards or to launch new programmes. As a result, the surrounding community has become disillusioned with the hospital and with the government for its stupidity.

During the municipal elections last December the hue and cry was to use the unused portions of the hospital as a chronic care wing. I have had correspondence with the former Minister of Health, and I have discussed this subject with a number of knowledgeable people in the community. The conclusion I have come to is that the hospital should be fully utilized for that for which it was built—that is a regional mental health treatment centre—rather than turn it into a partial chronic care centre, no matter how pressing the need for such is in our community.

To do this the government must substantially increase the budget to Northeastern so that more professional staff can be hired, more beds can be used to treat mentally ill adults and emotionally disturbed children. I urge the Minister of Health to give the priority that Northeastern should have so that the job that should be done can be done. I have spoken to the Minister of Health about this situation at Northeastern. He asked me to write him and this I have done.

One of the suggestions I made was that an emergency ward be opened at Northeastern to deal with persons needing emergency care in the mental health sphere. I believe there is sufficient space at the hospital for such a ward. It can be under the supervision of one or two physicians specifically engaged for this service.

Now, persons in a critical mental state have to be admitted to a general hospital and kept there until a bed becomes available at Northeastern. Many physicians are reluctant to tie up an active treatment bed with a mental patient, especially when active treatment beds are in short supply, as in Timmins. Thus the patient sits at home and suffers along with other members of the family. The solution, at Northeastern, is if the government will allot enough funds to set up an emergency ward.

I believe that a laboratory can be set up at Northeastern on a large enough scale to do most of the medical tests that need to be done for the whole region. The Department of Health laboratory which is situated in Timmins carries out certain procedures. If this lab was moved to the hospital and its procedures expanded, a saving of over $9,000 a year in rent could be made. But even more important, an expanded and better service in laboratory work could be established; more sophisticated procedures could be carried out.

This is another matter that I asked the minister to consider. I urge the minister to move in and provide the funds to make Northeastern fully operational so that the job that needs to be done can be done in terms of mental health in northeastern Ontario. If changes have to be made, make them, and let us put an end to the dissatisfaction and criticism of so many disenchanting local people. Let us have the planning that should have been done in connection with this hospital in the first place. Let it be done now in the interest of good mental health care for the future of the northeast.

Mr. Speaker, in this speech I have dealt with a number of badly needed changes in our health care delivery system which, if made, would produce better service to the people of the province at much less cost than at present. The system is a result of successive Tory governments' refusal to adequately plan and co-ordinate the programmes throughout the province. It is in a very unsatisfactory state. According to Jean Howarth:

One of the distressing things that has become apparent during the production of these articles is that so many people know what ought to be done and yet do nothing but talk about it.

The meetings are legion in which the same ground is covered again and again; the same little in-fights are conducted; the same delicate stresses are put upon prestige; the same trivialities are rehashed while the meat of the matter is ignored.

And in the field of health as in many other areas, this Progressive Conservative government has lost its capacity and will to govern.

The people of the province need a leadership which will face up to these areas and put the solutions into practice, even if it means stepping on toes or putting aside the roadblocks of the status quo establishment in the senior civil service or health empires that have been built up. The stakes are too high to be timid in the implementation of pressing reforms. The New Democratic Party is prepared to give the leadership and take the decisive action that the people of this province so badly need in the reform and restructuring of our health care delivery system.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Speaker, this session has only been in progress a few weeks but I am certain that the "new wave" spoken about at our recent leadership convention is already evident. Under the excellent leadership of our new Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) we have kept the best of our older programmes and policies while introducing new ones to meet the pressing demands of today.

I am very glad that much of this attention has been focused on the important problems of unemployment. This urgent matter greatly concerns me and I have tried to help all those that I can in my great riding of Welland. What I have done on a local scale, this government is doing for every corner of this province. This government recognizes that a strong employment rate is the backbone of a healthy economy. That is why it has made easing unemployment one of its top priorities.

Immediately after he was sworn into office, the Prime Minister set the machinery in motion with the announcement of a provincial-municipal programme to provide 7,500 new jobs. Combined with previous programmes announced by the Prime Minister's predecessor, this newest programme has brought the total number of new jobs created to 12,000.

In addition, the Prime Minister extended the provincial seasonal employment programme until the end of April. This has allowed the rescheduling of work on the traffic tunnel under the Welland Canal in my great riding, and has made it possible to create jobs for 70 men there for the next few months.

The Throne Speech is also geared to ease the plight of the unemployed. In addition to the housing programme, measures will be taken to find summer jobs for students, help the farmers and tourist operators, and stimulate other areas of the economy. The money generated through these jobs will, in turn, be poured into the economy. This will result in a healthier economic picture and the creation of even more jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I have the proud honour of representing one of this province's industrial centres, and I can say in all certainty that our area's growth would not have been possible without the hard work of our labour force.

I want to take this opportunity to point out the excellent legislation this government has developed to protect its three-million-member labour force. Because we are so well protected by these laws, I am afraid we do not always appreciate them as much as we should. But it is these laws, drawn up by a government which recognizes the importance of taking care of the working man's well-being, that have built Ontario into the "Province of Opportunity."

Our labour force has one of the best workmen's compensation Acts in the world. It is so good, in fact, that other countries send representatives here to study our legislation. Last year, $131,212,629 was awarded in benefits under The Workmen's Compensation Act. That is an increase of almost $50 million since 1965.

The privative clause in the Act is the envy of organized labour in both the United States and Britain. This clause prohibits any compensation cases from going to court. Because his right to compensation is already recognized by the law and therefore cannot be contested, the worker here does not have to sue for damages.

In addition, the benefits under the Act are greater than those in almost any other jurisdiction. For example, the minimum amount of permanent total disability benefits has been increased to $175 per month, regardless of earnings, while widows' pensions have been raised to $125 per month.

Appeals are possible under the Act. It does not take years to hear cases as it does in other jurisdictions, but only a few weeks. In addition, the three-step appeal system, involving a possible progression from a review committee to appeal tribunals to the Workmen's Compensation Board, is geared as much as possible to the employee's convenience by holding the tribunals in various parts of the province instead of just in Toronto.

Our labour force is also protected by several other excellent pieces of legislation. The revised Employment Standards Act calls for time and a half for overtime beyond 48 hours per week, equal pay for men and women doing the same work and seven statutory holidays for which employees receive time and a half if they work on these days.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): It took this government 27 years to implement legislation.

Mr. Morningstar: Good government, good government. It also calls for advance notice of dismissals to workers in layoffs or plant shutdowns, two weeks' vacation after two years' employment with the same employer, and provisions to facilitate the collection of underpayments of minimum wages.

During the first two months of this year the employment standards branch assisted 8,285 employees to collect $310,697 in unpaid wages and other benefits from 1,589 employees.

Great work from this Department of Labour.

Mr. Pilkey: That is not saying much for the employers.

Mr. Morningstar: Ontario also has one of the highest minimum wages—$1.65 hourly—in Canada.

The labour legislation protecting our female labour forces, which makes up one-third of the total, is also amongst the most progressive on the continent. Women under the age of 18 may not be required to work more than six hours a week overtime. Those women working shifts that begin or end between midnight and 6 a.m. must be provided with transportation between their homes and places of work. Women under the age of 18 may not work between midnight and 6 a.m.

Ontario has had an equal-pay law for just over 18 years, with more stringent provisions added in 1969. Until 1969, a woman who thought she was entitled to equal pay and not getting it had to lay a complaint with the Ontario Human Rights Commission. To do this she had to reveal her name. The result often was that rather than get equal pay she lost her job.

But in 1969, enforcement of equal pay laws became part of the employment standards branch of The Department of Labour. Now all a woman has to do is to report to the branch by telephone or in writing and the branch's inspectors will investigate without disclosing her name. The inspectors then look at all the standards, including wages, hours of work and vacation pay, so that there is no reason for an employer to suspect someone has complained about this equal pay.

The historic Women's Equal Opportunity Act, passed last year, prohibits discrimination in employment on the grounds of sex or marital status and dismissal for pregnancy. This legislation is way in advance of the practices in other Canadian jurisdictions and in the United States.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Oh, come on!

Mr. Pilkey: That is awful.

Mr. Morningstar: Our province also can boast very progressive legislation governing labour relations. The Labour-Management Arbitration Commission, established in 1969, facilitates arbitration of grievances which occur while union-management collective agreements are in force.

Last year the conciliation branch of the department was reorganized into the conciliation and mediation services branch to increase the effectiveness in helping labour and management reach agreements in contract negotiations. This is helping not only in the area of big-company, big-union—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Make sure you get the right page.

Mr. Morningstar: —that is right—disputes where large numbers of people are affected, but also with disputes with small firms' first agreements which are often more difficult to resolve.

Mr. Pilkey: It just amazes you.

An hon. member: It is amazing.

Mr. Morningstar: A series of amendments last June to the Ontario Labour Relations Act is promoting industrial peace and providing additional protection to the rights and freedom of our workers.

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister without Portfolio): That is what we needed.

Mr. Pilkey: Tell them how it is.

Mr. Morningstar: But this government has not been content to merely provide our labour force with protective legislation; it has also been concerned with increasing industrial safety and providing further training. To increase safety in industry, the department consults with management to assist in the development of additional accident prevention measures and to raise standards of industrial safety, health and welfare.

Mr. Pilkey: That is why we paid out over $300 million in accident claims.

Mr. Morningstar: In order to provide better service to the working force the department's industrial training branch is concentrating its activities more heavily among persons with employment problems, and in the areas of the province lacking industrial development. At the end of 1970 there were 18,500 apprentices enrolled in the various programmes provided by the industrial training branch. Another 5,000 will graduate this year from short-term training programmes sponsored by The Department of Labour in partnership with the federal government and industry.

Mr. Young: They are cutting it down all the time. The young people cannot get in any more.

Mr. Morningstar: No, no! In Welland and district, the great Welland riding and district—

Mr. Pilkey: Right. Let us hear about that. It is a great district.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Morningstar: As of the end of February, 123 persons had graduated and 118 were in training in the industrial training branch's various programmes.

Employee's basic rights are protected by the Ontario Human Rights Code and The 1968 Age Discrimination Act. Exemptions concerning discrimination in employment which had been extended to religious, philanthropic, educational, fraternal and social organizations not operated for private profit, have now been removed from the code. The Age Discrimination Act is helping to remove barriers to employment faced by older workers because of their age.

The uniform building standards branch has assumed responsibility for the development and implementation of a uniform building standards code for Ontario. This is another decisive step to ease the housing crisis. This code will give contractors built-in savings which will certainly prevent continual price increases being passed on to the purchaser.

An hon. member: The member cannot be serious.

Mr. Morningstar: Mr. Speaker, it is due to this legislation that Welland and the rest of Ontario have been able to obtain one of the highest standards of living in the world.

Mr. Pilkey: It is taken right out of one of the speeches of the member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall).

Mr. Morningstar: It is this legislation which has helped make Ontario the envy of the world because it has resulted in our never having tremendous industrial disputes—disputes where large numbers of people are affected—but also with disputes with small firms' first agreements which are often more difficult to resolve.

A series of amendments last June to The Ontario Labour Relations Act is promoting industrial peace and providing additional protection for the rights and freedoms of workers.

Mr. Pilkey: The hon. member is repeating the same page.

Mr. Morningstar: I am sorry.

An hon. member: The opposition was not listening the last time anyway. Say it over again.

Mr. Morningstar: —having tremendous disputes, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It only happens when they use those Roman numerals.

Mr. Morningstar: It is wonderful legislation, because it has resulted in our never having—

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Go ahead and repeat it. It is so good they want to hear it again.

Mr. Morningstar: —tremendous industrial unrest. And it is this legislation which will help Ontario grow even more prosperous and make it even more of a mecca for the working man in the years that lie ahead. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Give him a hand.

Mr. Sargent: That is very kind of the hon. minister.

In rising to make my humble contribution to this debate, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what debate we are on—the Throne debate or unemployment. They are all mixed up.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): The hon. member would not know.

Mr. Sargent: I would not know. That is right.

However, to convey to the House and for Hansard and for anyone in Ontario who cares about what goes on here, I would like to tell about the sorry conditions in my riding. I think the only way I could get any action is perhaps to enlist the services of the member for London North (Mr. Robarts) on a committee of two and maybe we would get something done here.

I feel that things are in such a way, Mr. Speaker with the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) leaning on the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) so much that it is becoming enjoyable from this side of the House, that I think it is going to be chaotic for the former Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart) party—I forget the hon. minister's new title.

I am reminded of the story of the lady telling her neighbour, "I have had so much trouble with the lawyers these days over my husband's estate that I am almost sorry that poor Frank died." I think that somehow the government members are kind of sorry that poor John walked out on them and now they have got to struggle through with genial Bill, smiling Bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I suggest, for the record, that this government is in the worst mess of any government in the history of the Province of Ontario. There is an old saying that people get the kind of government they deserve. I do not know what the people of Ontario have done to deserve that gallery over there. Things are going on like a dog's breakfast. We do not know what the hell is going on and neither does the government.

In the science of government we must be objective. Those of you who have been in—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): This is the kind of speech that hurts them.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. member can go it that way, but laughing boy back here is laughing all the time. I am reminded of the story of the fellow who belonged to a wife-swapping club and he was not married. That is why he was laughing all the time. I hope we will hear a lot from the hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: I will be around.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, being objective, I suggest to you the story of a nudist camp we have up our way. There was a prominent Tory who went to the convention they had and he said, in telling me about it, that even the butler was nude. I said, "How did you know he was a butler?" He said, "Well, he certainly was not the maid!"

I think that you must be objective in this business and this party it not objective. In fact, we have—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What is going on?

Mr. Sargent: I am following a good act. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) is pretty tough to follow.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member is embarrassing the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart) with these risqué jokes.

Mr. Sargent: Looking around, Mr. Speaker, we have chaotic conditions in education, wasting millions of dollars—no one knows how many millions and no one will ever know how much we have lost in the school consolidation programme.

We have the hopeless expeditions into regional government—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): And pollution!

Mr. Sargent: —And pollution! I think we have a very able minister of that. We talk a lot about pollution but we only contribute about 15 per cent toward pollution. Eighty-five per cent comes from across the border so we cannot do an awful lot about it. But we can go through the motions anyway to keep the people happy.

We have these floundering programmes on assessment across the province. We are wasting millions on countless projects. Take for instance the Ontario Place. Whoever told the then Treasurer to say, "We will do a project in Ontario Place," must have rocks in his head. An architect came in with a plan of some pretty buildings and somewhere along the line, someone said, "Go ahead."

Mr. Speaker, we want to do something intelligent for this area of the city. We need a domed sports palace. We have that land down there where the old Maple Leaf Stadium used to be. That should be a domed stadium where we could have National League ball.

We have the Ontario government, the federal government, the city of Toronto and I can raise the other 25 per cent of the money through a group. We could put up a domed sports palace in the city of Toronto. We need it badly, to have major-league ball and all the other great attractions we could have here.

But, Mr. Speaker, we build a nonsensical thing like that Ontario Place, which is a laugh. It is a tribute to the objective way they look at things over there. I would like to ask—no one will ever know—who said, "Go ahead with it"? The hon. member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall) said that he did not do it. Who did it?

An hon. member: Nobody has signed a contract yet.

Mr. Sargent: We have, I think, a continuous programme down there in Ontario Place. They are continuing to fill and you will see that they are starting now on Harbour City, whether you know it or not. God knows how many millions of dollars will be committed because of friends in the know in the party.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the government, that the whole approach of this government is completely unacceptable. Eight million people directly expect positive action.

Over the years we have been listening to the new Premier—I have been sitting here listening to him and he has been very flowery in his language—using such terminology as "enrichment, both horizontal and vertical," "optimal ratio variety" and "integrated experience."

Why can we not have a more businesslike approach to doing things for people? Let us get something done here instead of all this hanky-panky and nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: No more "enrichment."

Mr. Sargent: Today, I am going to talk about such things as "the great train robbery." I am going to talk about solving the unemployment situation. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Nixon) plan to handle this would be direct and objective and with results.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): If anybody could figure it out.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. member should listen. As long as one has a positive attitude toward these things and a desire to get something done, that is the answer for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: Think positive and stand on it.

Mr. Pilkey: Did the member listen to his leader's reply to the Speech from the Throne? I would like to figure that one out.

Mr. Sargent: We are pretty proud of him, and so will the people of Ontario be, when he is the new Premier.

My leader's approach—and I suggest that my approach to it, to this tragic situation, would be too—is that where hundreds of thousands of our fellow Canadians are out of work, they have not got the dignity of a pay cheque, they do not have a place to live, we should mobilize all of our resources in this province to do two things: Give every man who wants to work the dignity of a pay cheque every week and a decent place to live. And the new chairman of the—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): The hon. member should be speaking to his friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: I could not agree with the hon. minister more.

Hon. Mr. White: They are the people who are plunging everybody out of work.

Mr. Sargent: Frankly, I do not think that a back-bencher, or a lowly guy like me, can get anyplace in Ottawa. I think it has to come from the Premier of this province to speak for us, because 40 per cent of the federal budget is our money.

Hon. Mr. White: We started in October, 1969, to try to get them to change those policies.

Mr. Sargent: I hope this government can, because there is no love lost here for the group down there who cannot move, who go on and say that there will have to be many more unemployed people before they solve inflation. What a shocking thing for Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Benson to say.

Mr. Makarchuk: The provincial Liberals gathered around him like fleas around a dog when he was visiting our area.

Mr. Sargent: If the member would check the record, I was not there, I do not think.

Mr. Makarchuk: The hon. member is right, but he is the only one who was not.

Mr. Pilkey: He is the only one who has sense.

Mr. Sargent: There is an old saying, Mr. Speaker, how to make $1 million is to find a need and fill it—five words—find a need and fill it. How to solve the unemployment situation? Find a need and fill it. We have the need; we have the resources.

We have Ontario Housing Corporation; we have CMHC money; we have banks willing to give us the money. We have the people who want to work. We have the need for—an unending need for—houses that we can never catch up with. So what we do is this.

In every city across this nation we have millions and millions of square feet of empty space in vacant plants through automation—every city has millions of square feet of dead factory space. We have three-quarters of a million unemployed men who do not want welfare, they want a pay cheque.

So we take these factors. We have the space. We have the men. We have the money. The modus operandi should be to produce modular housing in these empty plants.

Mr. Speaker, to the leader of the government I would say this. At the time of war we can find the money to kill—to mobilize all of our resources to go to war—but in time of peace we cannot do a simple thing like giving a man a house to live in, or a job.

I say the way to do it is for this government to command all our resources here, take over these empty plants, get the financing lined up and give them modular housing, if we can get modular housing for under $10,000—a house which will pass any building code. That is the key to the situation—a building code that will be standard across the nation. All we need is coverage on the different climatic and soil conditions to give us a building code that will do that. Here we are, still talking. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) before this new minister appointed two committees to give us a standard building code.

They built aluminum houses—beautiful homes—on the modular system in Woodstock last year. They could not bring them into Toronto because Toronto had a building code that made them unacceptable.

So the need is there, the answer is there, and this government does nothing about it. We can take all our technology and build complex things like automobiles on the assembly line, but we cannot build a simple thing like a house on a modular plan. Any of you people who are involved in it, and many of them are very successful men—I cannot understand the hon. member for Don Mills who is out for a joyride when he could be doing something. He could have been doing something positive toward putting people to work—

Mr. Haggerty: That is why he is in the back row.

Mr. Sargent: —and filling the need for modular housing.

And that is the answer—we have their approach to housing. It is interesting to see the approach of this government to housing.

I was reading very carefully one day a very lengthy and glowing story about the man they call “Fast Eddie” Goodman. He is a director of the Cadillac Development Corporation, Rio Trust Company, Sussman Realty Corporation, along with a lot of WASPs who belong to the London Hunt Club and the country club of John Labatt Limited.

These are not my words they are in a quotation. It is a quotation from the article in The Globe and Mail of February 6, 1971. Now, Mr. Goodman has been the stemwinder for the party for a long time—a king-maker in the party—had it develops that he has been the biggest recipient of Ontario Housing Corporation loans for his clients and for boards on which he is a director. We have a shocking situation that these things happen. No one will ever know what has gone on in these deals.

We have a loan to Cadillac here for $23,929,000 for a university site condominium development in Metropolitan Toronto; a loan of $6.5 million for student housing. They are part-owners of land in Bramalea—fortunes were made in that deal out there where we bought millions of dollars worth of land from them.

“To Bramalea Consolidated Development”—I am not going to read this whole article to the House, but this is an outline of the great power and leverage he had, to make a phone call and say, “Well, these loans are needed by our friends.” The things that bother me are that the men on the inside of this power group have the power to do these things.

It says in a building magazine that 65,000 housing units are needed in this province. With the plan I have suggested, Mr. Speaker, we would never run out of products or market. We would never run out of orders, because we could never keep up with the demand.

It is a matter of record, if the housing industry is booming, the whole economy is booming. The man who does roofing, the man who has the heating, the decorator, the painter, the plumber, the electrician, the lumber man, the brick man—the whole economy will boom if the housing business is booming. That is the key to solving unemployment in this province, but what the government does is coast.

Over the last year, they have been involved in getting set for the leadership campaign and not knowing what the hell was going on in the economy in Ontario. Now they are starting to find out that it might be good vote-getting material to say that they will give 130,000 new jobs through a housing programme; which is pie in the sky, which they know will not work and I know will not work.

In Nova Scotia they are going to build homes for $10,500 with 3.5 per cent mortgages. Is such a plan available in Ontario? I do not think so. This is a leading story in The Globe and Mail, in the business section. They are going to build 55,000 of those homes down there for people earning as little as $3,900 a year. To get a home under the Home Ownership Made Easy plan one has to earn $8,000 a year. How ridiculous can we be, when the average wage in this country is only $4,900 and this government says the floor for earnings is $8,000.

We had in Hamilton—I watched a TV programme last week—a house that was 25 years old; the lady wanted to buy it but she could not because she does not make enough money. The house has been paid for once in the first 25 years. Now they are going to start her on it a second time and they will not sell it to her, but they are charging her $135 a month for it. This is the department that the member for Don Mills handled. They have 100,000 people renting—tenants—and they cannot be fair with people and say, “The houses have paid for themselves once; now we will turn around and give them a deal on the houses.”

Mr. Speaker, it is a shocking thing. It is as simple as solving a building code. With one building code we can go to work and give people jobs and give them housing.

It is a truism that we can pay a man to go to war, to fight battles, kill people—they can train them in about five months—but if we want a man to work in a housing project, we have to have three and a half years' apprenticeship or something like that. It is so ridiculous. It has reached the position in this country—I am telling you how serious it is—that Fortune magazine two months ago had a story about a group in New York that had the money to build a skyscraper; it had the architects laid on; it had the land and everything. Then the union labour boss walks in and he says, “Now you are going to build this property here but here is where you are going to buy your materials. You are going to buy your steel from so and so. You are going to buy your cement here. You are going to buy your heating, electrical equipment and so on here and here. We will tell you where to buy your materials because if you do not, we will not build it for you.”

That is how far we have come in this country, in this democracy. And it is coming into Ontario too; do not kid yourself that it is not. The very fact that we have—

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): It will not.

Mr. Sargent: The member had better not kid himself that it is not.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is that in Ontario?

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the new Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton)—who, I think, will do a great job—

Mr. Pilkey: I would like to see him document that case.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the minister to find out how much of our money goes out of Ontario across the border to American unions.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, shame. Is it still going?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): The hon. minister might tell us how much comes back too.

Mr. Sargent: It would be very important to find that out. But to go back to the simple fact—

Mr. Pilkey: That would solve all the unemployment, if we can find that out.

Mr. Sargent: It should not be hard to find that out simply because it is wrong. We should run our own show here.

Mr. Pitman: Just try and fight General Motors.

Mr. Pilkey: Why does the government not run General Motors too, then? Why does it not take over Ford, Chrysler and American Motors?

Mr. Sargent: It is a shocking fact that a man can be in jail in the United States, but he can be the most powerful man in America and he can call a strike in Canada if he wants to—from a jail cell in the United States.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is that right? That is terrible!

Mr. Pitman: Has the member ever heard of a democratic union process? By law they vote for a strike, you know.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. member hopes they do. He hopes they do. Mr. Speaker, I think that I have made it amply clear—

Mr. Pilkey: The hon. member was doing well until then.

Mr. Sargent: The member does not have to worry about me. I will do all right.

Mr. Pilkey: The hon. member was doing well until then. He has killed the speech.

Mr. Sargent: I think that I have established the fact that if there was a sincere desire on the part of this very floundering group over there to solve the housing programme in a process by which they could put people back to work and give them jobs—

Do you know a fact? A man came into my office the other day for welfare. He sat back and said: "I did not get my cheque—$370." We had a job for him. The job only amounted to $300 a month. He said: "I do not want that job." I said: "You go out and take that job, or else." He leaned back and took out a fresh cigarette and he said: "I know my rights. Get my cheque."

That is how far we have come in this welfare state.

And the government can put people to work and give them the dignity of having a job! It is a shocking thing when these people can walk in and demand a cheque or else, because they know their rights. Who is running this store anyway? A business is not run that way.

Mr. Pilkey: The Tories have mismanaged it terribly.

Mr. Sargent: While I am getting the House pretty mad, I think I would like to take a whack at the boys in Ottawa for a minute.

Mr. Yakabuski: That is right.

Mr. Sargent: We have a story here in February 3 Hansard, on the House of Commons debate. Hon. Mr. Sharp was asked a question. He states, Mr. Speaker, that they made a loan of $207 million to India with a maturity of 50 years at an interest rate of zero per cent.

The shocking thing about it is that we have in this country—40 per cent of the money going into Ottawa comes from Ontario—we have eggheads down there who are running around the world and who have never worked in business. They have always been parasites working for the government, never knowing how to run a business, never having had to meet a payroll; and they have the right to go around the world making loans like this when we have three quarters of a million people out of work.

I suggest to those of you who have been in government, a debenture for a school issue—

Mr. Pilkey: Going from continentalism to isolationism in one step.

Mr. Sargent: —a debenture for a school issue doubles over 20 years because of the interest factor. If we can have the same treatment, if our people in Canada can get interest-free loans in that magnitude, our school buildings would cost us half what they do.

Further, the Premier of this province and the Treasurer took me apart the other day because I questioned the fact that he should not go down to Ottawa and say, "We want the same treatment." I do not care who you are. They decried the fact that I was a poor citizen.

I do not mind foreign aid but I say that charity should begin at home. How can you tell 30 or 40 men who come into your office looking for work that it is going to cure inflation? You cannot do those things. I should suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this government, that our Prime Minister should go to Ottawa and say: "The foreign aid programme is this. Interest-free loans are this." I think it is time we should get our share of the pot.

Mr. Trudeau goes down to Indonesia and he gives away $50 and $60 million to countries which have never even heard of Canada. The great largesse of this man!

Mr. Pitman: Oh, for heaven's sake.

An hon. member: What does the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) say to that one?

Mr. Sargent: I think it is high time we had this government of ours go down and lay the cards on the table and say: "We are not in favour of such foreign aid giveaways." If they are reciprocal, if we are getting industry back, then there is merit in it, but a lot of these deals are not reciprocal. They are long-term deals.

Mr. Pitman: Will the member for Sudbury get to his fellow member?

Mr. Sargent: Those of you who are knowledgeable about finance would know that with a $200 million loan over 50 years the commuted value in interest rate would be fantastic. It would probably be half a billion dollars on that one factor. But no one seems to think about things like that any more.

Where are we going? We argue about thousands of dollars here when they give away millions and hundreds of millions. So it is important that we assess what we as Ontario are giving toward the foreign aid programme.

The total amount, I understand, is $400 million a year. It is a shocking thing that we do nothing about it from the area we stand in.

Mr. Pitman: It is a good deal less than it should be.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, we have had quite a lot of talk in this Legislature—

Mr. Pilkey: The argument should be that we ought to be able to do both.

Mr. Pitman: And do a better job of it.

Mr. Sargent: They are cutting off our rail systems. Mr. Sharp was in Africa last month. He gave away a $14 million loan to help them with their locomotives in Africa. We have watched Mr. Pickersgill voting himself a $41,000 job before he quit the Treasury Board, and now he gets into bed with the CNR and CPR and he figures he will help them cut off their passenger service.

Over the years, we in the outlying parts of Ontario have seen these railroads deliberately discourage passenger service, doubling the rates, running the schedules at awkward times and slowing down the service. It is a matter of record that they made a deal with the people of Canada when they received the millions of acres of land in perpetuity, and they have now reneged. Here we are now without rail service to western Ontario.

I call on this government through the Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) to investigate the need for setting up a Railpax service. In the United States, realizing that rail passenger service is not ever a paying operation—in every administration and jurisdiction in Europe, they are all subsidized heavily by the government—so, realizing this, the United States granted to Congress $240 million to a commission called the Railpax commission. It is time that something was done for my area, western Ontario, for the need for a rail system.

I can go on and deal with this at great length, but the fact is that in every area in Europe the whole economy is geared to a rail system and it is fully subsidized. In Germany they are now talking about having trains that will go 250 to 300 miles per hour. They have 20,000 passenger trains being run in Germany, with 13,000 freight trains daily, fully subsidized by the government.

I think it is time that we had an immediate decision by the government as to what they are going to do. If they are going to go to the people for an election, they can bet their boots, I say to the House leader, that they will not get any votes in the areas where you have cut down the train service because the people cannot assess whether it was their fault or the federal government's. Because the government will not move on it, the federal Minister of Transport would not take any positive action to appeal the ruling of the board.

Mr. Yakabuski: Trudeau did that!

Mr. Sargent: I do not know whether the hon. member knows what he is talking about, but if he does, sharpen up.

Mr. Speaker, we have watched the arrogance of this government over the years. We have suggested that they set up a purchasing department and every year, they say, "Yes, we are going to do it." In the Province of Alberta, the first year they set up a purchasing department and with their small budget they saved $5 million.

An hon. member: They are not doing it here.

Mr. Sargent: That is right. The projection here was that it was going to save from $10 to $25 million a year through a purchasing department. One day, my colleague from Guelph, who was an old-time mayor of the city and knows what goes on in purchasing in government, asked the Prime Minister, "What about the purchasing department?" The Prime Minister did not even know they had one.

It turned out that the department had a payroll of about $100,000 a year, but they had not bought anything through purchasing. I guess it was just there, that was all. That is why I think, Mr. Speaker, if they ever put television into this place, it is going to be a circus. When the people see how you operate things—and you have a ball yourself—you would probably get your own quiz show afterwards.

I think it must be embarrassing to be a member of the Conservative government when you see all the ministers now in the back row, demoted. They will have to have some new blood to see if they can make things work. I think what the people of Ontario will do is to say that the Liberals are the only alternative they have.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that a very serious area in my riding is the crisis in farming. We have the case of cattlemen who suggest that the prices farmers and ranchers got for cattle in 1950, compared with what they get today, are about the same. There has been no increase in 20 years. We watched, last week, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) going to bat for the brooders and the chicken people. Sometimes I wondered, knowing your attitude toward setting up the FAME programme, that he would not go to bat or give them a loan of $1 million, which would have solved the needs of the beef cattle industry for many years to come. All they want is $1 million credit, and this government turned them down because I suspect that Minister of Agriculture and Food and the member for London North were too friendly with the big people like Canada Packers and Swifts.

It was going to set up an empire against the packing company, and this could never happen. But we have here, in this area of farming, a real crisis. The junior farmers loan programme has been cut off. In Quebec, they subsidize at five per cent so that the net cost of a loan there is two-and-a-half per cent. But a farmer in this province cannot get that treatment, so how can he compete with the Quebec farmer?

Why has this government not done anything about a rental purchase agreement for farm equipment, something now afforded in the United States? But nothing like that happens here to help the farmer. Why not think of forgivable loans for farmers? They do it for industry.

Has anyone ever thought of beef crop insurance for beef cattle farmers? It is revolutionary, but a lot of the beef cattle people are thinking and talking about it. But not this government!

Why not standardize farm machinery and parts, with computerized parts departments around the province?

There was an interesting article—the hon. member for Yorkview will be interested to hear I read the Observer the other day, the United Church bible. I do not suggest at all that I am religious because I read this magazine but this article says, "The farmer does not get a fair share of the national income." It goes on to say:

Late in 1970 the price of whole milk paid to dairy farmers shipping to Metropolitan Toronto dairies was increased to $6.85 per hundredweight. This is what the affluent farmer in one of the richest farm areas of Canada receives.

Dairymen shipping milk to cheese factories and to other processors receive $3.85 per hundredweight. Such a farmer, if he has a good herd and farms efficiently, may be expected to produce up to 400 lb. of milk a day from 15 milking cows on a 100-acre family farm. Most farmers complain that this estimate is too high, but we prefer to err on the high side of it.

This will require his full-time work plus substantial help from a hired man or the family or both. A heavy investment in stock, equipment, land and buildings is required. Fertilizer must be purchased. There will be taxes, insurance, replacements and repairs and all those expenses necessary to carry on a business. All of these factors go into this operation. There will be deductions from the $6.85 price for haulage, 40 or 50 cents, marketing fees, and so on, and that portion of the milk which is surplus to the farmer's quota will be paid for at a lesser price.

Such a farmer, Mr. Speaker, will gross a maximum—and this is a very generous estimate—of $25 a day and out of this, his expenses and wages and help must be paid. Based on the average of the above, the gross income for seven days, a week's work, for himself and his helpers, will be $175. The average manufacturing wage is now $122. In mining and milling, it is $154. In construction, it is $176. As for doctors and lawyers, editors and architects—I could say politicians—but that is something else.

The only way we may expect the family farm to survive is to invent a new kind of miracle cow that will produce double the milk and require no feed. One inescapable deduction is that the Canadian farmer does not receive a fair share of the national income—and this is very true because in my area we have the lowest farm income of any province or any county in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to suggest, in closing, that I have made my points quite clear on the suicidal road we are going along with nuclear power development. We are committed to a $1 billion programme between Ontario Hydro and AEC. Regardless of how many times we talk about this, no one seems to know the route they are going.

We do know that the target is for more power and that is the reason for the whole operation. But the fact of the matter is that regardless of all the hardships they have along the way in trying to make heavy water, this process, and I have said it before, is the same process they were using before in 10 countries in Europe. It never once did work. They cannot make it work in Nova Scotia; and now we are trying it here in this province with Hydro. The fact of the matter is that the authorities state, regardless of whether or not it works, if it does work the total product will be less than one half of one per cent of the load needed, so we are 99.5 per cent off target—and it is costing us up to $1 billion.

I asked the chairman of Hydro at the hearings what happens if he is wrong again; he said, "Then we have lost $1 billion and we will try something else." The point I am trying to make is can we afford to shoot for a target of power for 1990, when so many of our people are out of work? They cannot get a home to live in yet we are launched into this programme.

This is one of the things that there should be a royal commission to investigate because no one seems to know what is happening. Mr. Speaker, I have told you what the Nixon approach to unemployment will be. I think it will work.

I have not talked to any authority who says it would not work. I have talked to housing people, to builders, to bankers, to businessmen. It would work to put people, all of the people, back to work if we had the desire to do it.

Somebody asked me what was wrong, what was the matter with Queen's Park—

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Too many Conservatives.

Mr. Sargent: That is the time, right now!

I think we could answer that by saying it is nothing that an election would not cure. We are advised, Mr. Speaker, that the budget will be announced on April 22—

Mr. Bukator: April 26.

Mr. Sargent: April 26, I am sorry.

An hon member: They have not got the money right now.

An hon. member: That is just in case the government back-benchers do not know.

Mr. Sargent: All provincial programmes then will come to this focal point, the announcing of the budget. The director of this instrument—I am amazed as to where he gets his knowledge—this man is an authority on everything.

Mr. Haggerty: He is an expert.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know one thing that this provincial Treasurer is not an authority on. He made a hell of a mess of regional government and now we put him in the most important post of government. This man who is floundering—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): If the member spent as much time doing something instead of criticizing—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: The member knows he does not mean that; he hurt my feelings.

The announcing of the budget, Mr. Speaker, is a focal point. The director of this instrument must estimate the needs and resources, evaluate the programmes and help make decisions about the allocation of funds. That is the essence; the whole essence of government is the allocation of resources. Recognizing that no one should suffer for education because of geography and no one should suffer for a job because of geography or no one should suffer for hospital care because of geography, the job of government is the allocation of resources; and this man is going to have the allocation of funds. In a very real sense, Mr. Speaker, this budget is an instrument of policy as well as an accounting device.

At least, I would regard it as such. The provincial Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, seems to regard himself as an executive, infallible. In my limited education, I took a bit of Latin. I never got past fifth form in high school, but the word, "executive," is a derivative of the word "executioner." This is the terminology; it means "executus." But he is an executioner, this man. As budget director, and in his lofty opinion of himself, he plays the role well as the executioner. If a budget is the financial expression of a plan—and I again regard it as such—I feel sorry for the taxpayers of Ontario, who have to dance to the tune that he sets for us.

In closing in a kinder vein, I think that all of us are striving for the same thing. I say to all members in a kindly way, that they cannot hope to change the whole world, but they can change the corner upon which they live. While they are doing their area, let us help my area too.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) is right on one point, and that is that this debate has taken on the character of an unemployment debate. Maybe I am just going to take the time to add a little bit more to it on unemployment.

A few weeks ago, or a few days ago actually, I rose in this House and asked the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr.

Bernier) a question concerning the closing of the Cobalt refinery. The question I asked him, in view of the fact that that day was the last day that Cobalt refinery would accept ore, was could the minister give the House some indication of the present status of negotiations between his department and Cobalt refinery and the various mines in the Cobalt area. The minister rose and said, "Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and report back."

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): It was not put into limbo either.

Mr. Jackson: Well, he did report back. His answer was almost taken word for word from a comment made by the former minister. It is my opinion the former minister actually dictated the answer for the new minister.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He did not.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): The minister should not argue with him.

Mr. Jackson: But the important thing, Mr. Speaker, the very important thing, is the fact that today the Cobalt refinery is closed. Today, in a town of 2,300, we have lost 90 more jobs with a possibility of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 480 jobs going down the drain.

The minister in his wisdom and the government in its wisdom have decided that, because of the cost of trying to save the refinery and for various other reasons that they have not made known to the people of Cobalt, the Cobalt refinery was expendable. It could be done without, and the people of the Cobalt area could do their own worrying about what they would do for jobs.

I would just like to tell the House some of the facts behind the Cobalt refinery closing. Several months ago, near the first of the year, the Cobalt refinery told all of the mines that were presently shipping to that refinery, that after March 31, it would no longer accept ores at the present rate for refining.

This meant that, as of March 31, because the mines were not willing to pay the extra rate, or could not pay the extra rate, the refinery closed down. Immediately we had the men who were presently employed at that refinery out of jobs. But the most important aspect of it was that now these mines in the Cobalt and Gowanda area that were shipping to the Cobalt refinery are now forced to ship out of Canada to have the ore smelted.

Several months ago, or two or three years ago, the then Minister of Mines rose in this House and said that he was making certain amendments to The Mining Act, section 106, that would compel companies mining in Ontario to process ores in Ontario; at least to the intermediate step. What he did in Cobalt was to give another exemption to that Act, another exemption to add to the 23 already existing exemptions, and in fact made a mockery of everything he said in this House when he—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could interject on a point of privilege. The member is failing to point out, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to finish my speech, then surely the minister can answer me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister is entitled to rise on a point of privilege, but not to make a speech. Now if he will state his point of privilege, we can perhaps deal with it. Otherwise the hon. member may continue with the remainder of his speech.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I will not elaborate any further. I would just say that I will speak after the member is finished, but I would ask him to put all the facts on the record, please.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a matter of privilege. The hon. member will continue.

Mr. Jackson: Just let me go to what the former Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) said. He said his department scoured the possibility of extending government aid to the refinery in the form of grants or loans, and he said this was no answer at all because the refinery is an uneconomic operation. Fine!

He said the refinery holds an uneconomically large inventory of refined and concentrated silver valued at $3 million. My information says it is almost three times that much money. It must pay a large amount of interest, he said, on the money it borrowed to pay for that silver in the first place.

That, Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with. The mine was in economic trouble because of poor management, or the smelter was in economic trouble because of poor management. We do not disagree with that point.

Let us go on to say what Mr. Jim Armstrong, a former mine manager in the area and now a consulting engineer, said about that very point. He said the refinery was charging the mines 15 to 16 cents for a contained ounce of silver, and it would need double that amount in order to break even, which would mean 30 to 32 cents. I do not argue with that, but can the minister stand after I am finished, or at any other time in this House, and tell me how those mines which could not afford 30 cents for smelting can afford now to ship their ore to New Jersey to have it smelted?

It may be that the smelter was uneconomical at that point, but the very action of the closing of the refinery has made all of those mines uneconomic. What do we do about them? Do we close them down too? Surely that is going to be the result of the minister's decision to allow them to ship out of the country.

It also says that in some of the letters I received from the former minister and from various members of this government. Like the one I received from the present Premier (Mr. Davis):

"I have received your letter of February 25 with regard to the close of the Cobalt refineries. I want to assure you that I am quite aware of the situation and quite concerned about it. We are trying to do all we can to solve the problem, including reviewing alternative employment opportunities in the area.

I am referring your letter to the hon. Leo Bernier and would suggest you keep in touch with him to keep up with the latest developments.

Yet when I asked that very minister what was being done, he had no answer for me because he did not know.

Is there no communication between the Premier of this province and the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs? That is surely what I get out of that.

Several weeks after the closing was announced I wrote to the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs and asked, in effect, would he show us in black and white that the smelter had to close because they were in economic trouble? Would he show us where he had negotiated or where he had sat down with that smelter, or the smelter management?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is a private company, the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Jackson: On the basis of that comment, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that there were no negotiations between the smelter management and this government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There certainly were.

Mr. Jackson: When he says it is a private company, then what he is saying is that they have accepted the company's ultimatum that they are going to close down and they have allowed it. That being what it is, fine and dandy.

But I ask, could this government, could The Department of Mines and Northern Affairs show the people of the Cobalt area—could they show anyone—in black and white, whether the smelter be in New Jersey or wherever that smelter seems to be in the United States, could they show us signed contracts that they would accept the ores from these various mines in the Cobalt-Gowganda area?

We still have not received any answer to that. We have been ignored. The people of the Cobalt area still are up in the air as to what their future is. And when I say the people of Cobalt-Gowganda I mean literally that, because 470 jobs represents about one-fifth of the population of the Cobalt area.

I ask the minister again, Mr. Speaker, through you, when he rises in this House to reply to what I have to say, will he show us in black and white that the smelters in the United States will accept the ores if they are shipped to them? And will he show us in black and white the rates that they are going to charge? Will he tell us whether those rates are comparable with the rates that were asked by the Cobalt smelting company? Will he show us, in black and white, the rail and transportation cost figures from the Cobalt-Gowganda area to the smelters in the United States?

If he can do that and he can convince me that it is cheaper to ship to the United States then maybe he has a point, but at this very moment I do not think he can show us that.

The people of the Cobalt area made a very good suggestion that obviously was ignored. We asked that, in view of the fact that there was a good chance that the smelter would close, that the government, through The Department of Mines and Northern Affairs, would consider expanding the facilities of the Timiskaming testing laboratories. This is a government-owned laboratory that has been profitable over the years and has taken a lot of money out of the Cobalt area from the Cobalt mines. We asked that it would take over the relevant portions of the Cobalt refinery and operate them, as part of the testing laboratories, to smelt the ore from that area.

We asked, failing that, whether they would go in and do a feasibility study on whether or not the Cobalt refinery could be expanded to handle other ores, other metals, and thus become an economically feasible smelter or refinery.

It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, quite obvious, that the government went up and sat down with the Cobalt refinery—Kam-Kotia—management and when Kam-Kotia said “we are not going to run it any longer, and we are not going to give up any figures to prove that we cannot run it, because we do not care what happens to the people of the Cobalt area, and we do not care what the government says about it,” the government accepted that, and it put out a nice little release which says, “Now we will exempt the Cobalt area mines from section 106 of The Mining Act.”

Mr. Speaker, one might well ask the Conservative government of Ontario when does it really intend to break Ontario into two provinces?

In The Globe and Mail of February 11, 1971, the new Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) is quoted as saying: “Northern Ontario could stand as a separate province.”

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to suggest that the hon. minister is in favour of such a division, but it is my intention to suggest that it has become a very real possibility in the minds of many high-ranking persons in the Tory government.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Sopha for the first Lieutenant Governor.

An hon. member: The member will have to stop smoking.

Mr. Jackson: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, economic separation has already begun, as witnessed by the development plans for northern Ontario. The development plans for northwestern Ontario and the plan for the development of northeastern Ontario were done in complete isolation. In no way were they integrated with the plan for south central Ontario, southwestern Ontario, or the Toronto-centred region plan.

In spite of the optimistic statements in the two northern plans, it is quite obvious that the Conservatives intend to promote the growth of the Toronto-centred region by even further exploiting the resources, both natural and human, of northern Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: What does the member mean "obvious?" That is what they said!

Mr. Jackson: I must agree for once with the member for Sudbury—that is exactly what they said.

Mr. Sopha: They said the resources of the north will be manufactured down here—run a test.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, I do not need the aid of the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: What we should do is build a Chinese wall and keep you all out. Tell the Prime Minister and his gang to stay out.

Mr. Jackson: Sudbury could do with a member who would stand on his feet and speak.

Mr. Speaker, on page 4 of the Toronto-centred plan it states quite clearly the possibility of increasing the economic role of the southern region by processing resources which currently originate in northern Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: Is that what it says?

Mr. Jackson: Just let me quote from that:

Because of the location within the Great Lakes - St. Lawrence megalopolis, the Toronto-centred region probably can increase its economic role in processing resources which currently originate in northern Ontario—

Mr. Sopha: The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart) does not agree with that, does he?

Mr. Jackson: Still growing:

—and move to major markets in the Chicago-Detroit-Cleveland industrial area.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what it says to us, and what it says to the people in Cobalt and Gowganda who stand to lose their jobs, you see, is the government does not really care. It does not really care because it intends to move the smelting and refining process out of northern Ontario anyway. In spite of their high-sounding promises they really intend to move out.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): You have to feed those hungry industries in the "golden horseshoe."

Mr. Jackson: Well, let me just quote what it says in the plan for development in north-eastern Ontario. It says that:

These might include the encouragement of further processing of primary products within the region and the establishment of industries to support the export or basic industry.

It is in direct contradiction to what it says in the Toronto-centred region plan. Surely you cannot process resources in the south and process resources in the north and have an integrated plan?

What they are really saying is, "We are going to go ahead with the Toronto plan" and because this is only phase 1 of the analysis, by the time the poor people of northern Ontario find out what they are going to do it will be too darned late.

Let me just quote another little letter I have here—a clipping from the Northern Daily News of Tuesday, March 30, 1971. It is the result of an interview between the press and the new Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs. The minister said he will continue to use pressure and lobbying tactics to focus attention of the provincial government on northern Ontario. He went on to say he has used the pressure type of tactics since his election to Queen's Park in 1966.

Mr. Stokes: That is Leo the lion, is it not?

Mr. Sopha: That is the old Bernier before he became a minister.

Mr. Jackson: And he went on to say he had the message about problems facing northern Ontario.

But there is a little bit in between. He said he was prepared to seek the leadership of the Conservative Party last month unless the five announced candidates spoke about programmes for the north.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you he was prepared to seek the candidacy for the leadership of the party unless they promised him a cushy position, which he got. If any pressure was put on for the people of northern Ontario it was for one person in northern Ontario. Because it surely has not been shown to the people in northeastern Ontario that he is working for them.

Mr. Sopha: He became the leader. He is one of them. Well sure, they bought him off.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): That is putting it on the line.

Mr. Jackson: But something else that comes out and illustrates the point even further. He said he still considers the work of a provincial member for the Kenora riding as his primary job at Queen's Park. "The Kenora constituents sent me here in the first place," he said.

Mr. Speaker, I say that is a lot of baloney. The people of Kenora sent the hon. member here—the people of Ontario pay his wages. The people of Ontario—northeastern Ontario, north-central Ontario, southern Ontario—deserve as much as the people of Kenora from the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs. If he uses a parochial situation such as he has indicated—

Mr. Stokes: That statement was just endorsed by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman).

Mr. Jackson: —to do something for the people of Kenora that he would not do for the rest of the people in this province, then maybe he should step down and let somebody who does look after the overall good of the province take his place.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): They would have complained anyway if a member from the north had not been appointed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Jackson: Just as a little aside, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sopha: What is the member for Don Mills muttering for up there? Is it true he is the new doorman at the Constellation?

Mr. Randall: The member for Sudbury got the job.

Mr. Jackson: —we have been talking about unemployment in northeastern Ontario—

Mr. Sopha: There is a doorman unemployed.

Mr. Jackson: —and in the United Church Observer under the editorial columns there is a little article that says:

Resisting policies which could create unemployment is a church job. We were disappointed a year ago by the lack of response in the United Church to our editorials on unemployment. We had hoped that the pulpits would thunder, the presbyteries would echo and the politicians would note denunciations of policies adopted by Ottawa designed to fight inflation, but which it was arrogantly admitted would put men out of work. The only vigorous response came from the Liberals who damned us for criticizing Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Sopha: Who would dare to criticize him? Who would dare? His wife would not dare do that.

Mr. Stokes: The member for Sudbury has done just that.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, in going on I say that we are disappointed. We thought that maybe a northern minister would have something on the ball.

We are very disappointed, but surely not surprised. Because for 26 years it has been the Tory platform to ignore us in northeastern Ontario. In "Manpower Review," 1970, December, we have a nice point that says:

In the Kirkland Lake area Upper Canada Mines expect to phase out their gold workings in two or three years. At New Liskeard the Glen Lake mine and the Hi-ho Silver mine have indefinitely suspended their operations. In addition, the Cobalt smelter has cut back staff operations by 50 per cent.

So it was not at the first of this year that the government started to learn. They knew four of five months ahead of time, and they did nothing about it.

In the March/April "Manpower Review" it says:

A better note was recently sounded for the northern Ontario lumber industry, and particularly for the town of Elk Lake in the Kirkland Lake district, when it was revealed that this community was one of two sites being considered by a west German concern for the establishment of a $50 million forestry complex. The other site is in New Brunswick.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I rose in the House in the question period and I asked the Minister of Lands and Forests whether his department was in active negotiations with this company—this west German company we are talking about—and what was status of the negotiations at that time.

The Minister of Lands and Forests rose in his seat and told me he knew nothing about them. Yet for weeks before that announcement by the minister in this House, the northern papers had touted the possibility of a pulp complex in Elk Lake. It is in the "Ontario Manpower Review," and yet the minister responsible in this House knew nothing about it. The government knew nothing about it because it wanted to know nothing about it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to belabour the point. All I am saying today is that if this government intends to do anything for northeastern Ontario, it surely has not come through to us.

There is another point that sticks in my mind and bothers me very, very much. Mr. Speaker, in "A Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario Region"—it is a volume of some 300 pages, 296 to be exact. It has various graphs, various analyses of different things in northeastern Ontario; and yet the Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) is quoted as saying, while still the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs, during an interview at the Conservative convention: "We have not had anyone there to look at the whole problem."

If that is a fact, why do we have this volume that says "Phase I Analysis"? How do you analyze without looking at it?

I can tell you how it was done. It was done by using the 1961 census, which is 10 years too late. It was done by using a survey done by the northeastern Ontario regional development council which used a budget of $5,000 to send out questionnaires to the people on "what do you want?" with a list of questions that were right out of the Tory guidebook. And then it was put together in this volume—this volume of nothings—to convince us in northeastern Ontario that surely now something was going to be done.

Well I for one do not believe it!

Mr. Speaker, it is not just a question of retaining the young people in northern Ontario. It is a question of attracting new people into northern Ontario. And when the former Minister of Mines says "We have not had anyone up there to look at it yet," the Tories said, "Well, we are not going to send anyone because they rejected Mr. Lawrence at the polls, and are now rejecting the new Mines Minister in this Legislature." In saying so they are rejecting the people of northeastern Ontario and northern Ontario as a whole. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we will reject the Conservative administration during the next election.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The hon. member had better start working.

Mr. Stokes: I thought the Minister of Northern Affairs repudiated that spokesman for the north?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He is in some pretty serious trouble in his own riding—this is his last pitch right now.

Mr. Jackson: At the same time, such a statement from the then Minister of Mines makes a mockery of his own development conferences, which he held in Timmins, Sudbury and in the Lakehead, which he now currently admits were nothing but a sham, and of the development plans for all of northern Ontario, in fact, which, Mr. Speaker, are now shown to be the worst kind of election gimmick. There are those of us in the north and in this party who believe in a fully integrated Ontario, in a fully employed Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: That is what the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) used to profess. He believed it.

Mr. Jackson: We believe a fully integrated, fully employed Ontario is possible and desirable.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Have to get rid of Pierre first.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And Marchand.

Mr. Jackson: We are willing to work, even if the Tory government is not. Mr. Speaker, in closing I would just remind the other side of this House that a strong Ontario is a united Ontario. That is something we have been told by the Tories many times, but they obviously do not believe it themselves.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): The member should look in the mirror when he gets up in the morning.

Mr. Jackson: This is a fact that the Tories have not recognized, despite their electioneering slogans and visions. I was almost ready to sit down, Mr. Speaker, when I just remembered another little slap in the face we got in northeastern Ontario—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): There he is across there.

Mr. Jackson: —not a slap in the face, a kick in the face—when the Tory government took a man, who is obviously incompetent to hold two portfolios in this House in my time, and created a job for him because they could not find any place to put him.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Dump him, dump him!

Mr. Jackson: They dumped him—

Mr. Makarchuk: No place to dump him!

Mr. Jackson: And where did they dump him? The same place the Minister—

Mr. Makarchuk: Northern Ontario.

Mr. Jackson: —of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) was going to dump the DDT, on the poor people of northeastern Ontario and the mines.

Mr. Makarchuk: Better warn those people.

Mr. Jackson: Let me tell you the ONR has not been the most efficient railroad in Canada over the years, but as of now it is going to become less and less and less effective—

Mr. Simonett: The member is going to make it that way, is he?

Mr. Ferrier: Is the member conceding us victory?

Mr. Jackson: —unless, like the Tory government, the people of Ontario choose to dump the same person in the next election. Maybe then we will get some results.

Mr. Simonett: The member wants to watch that he does not get dumped. Do not worry about me.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is that the member's job up there?

Mr. Ferrier: The member is not going to run again?

Mr. Jackson: I would just like in closing to tell the hon. members on the other side of this House, if I am elected again—and I am going to be elected again—it is going to be because of the policies that they have obviously displayed in the northeastern, northwestern, south-central and all through Ontario, their policies for development. They are nothing more than a lot of bunk printed on paper. The people of northern Ontario know this and they will show it in the next election.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate, I first of all wish to congratulate the new Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) and leader of the Ontario government.

I wish also to congratulate you, sir, in your handling of this House and your deliberations on our behalf in most controversial situations, from time to time, and in good peaceful operations at others.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Yes, things have been almost too peaceful with you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I also wish to congratulate the seven newly appointed ministers of the Crown.

Mr. Sopha: Is that how many there were? Seven? Where did the member go wrong?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton)—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): He supported the wrong man, I guess?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: —the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), and the three Ministers without Portfolio (Mr. Snow, Mr. Potter, Mr. Dunlop).

Mr. Sopha: Who did the member support at the convention?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I supported my principles!

Mr. Sopha: I did not know he was a candidate.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, much has been done towards security for our people.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): What school?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: It is apparent that much is being done to direct this province toward a path of recovery that will provide people with work, that conforms with broad principles of that policy.

The greatest ability present in Ontario to move out of the problem of employable people being now unemployed, in my opinion rests at the local community level. It is here that this government must increase its effort of assistance. The dictates of a sound administration require that every effort be made, in the first instance, toward an increased local one. I, for one, do not believe that this is the only need for this government to infuse dollars into that community, but rather a combination of assistance.

Let us, for one thing, strip from our simple purpose the confusion that results from a multiplicity of detail and from millions of written and spoken words. Among our objectives, I suggest, first, must be the security of the men, women and children of this province. This must remain our first and continuing task and, in a very real sense, every major legislative enactment of this session should be a component part of it. The security of a livelihood can be secured through the better use of this province's resources, better use of the land in which we live.

Let me point out one instance, in particular, that can affect the area in which I live. This is the uranium ore body in the eastern part of Haliburton county. We have large known reserves, presently in the ownership of several companies. But these are not quite of economic percentage to warrant the creation of a milling operation, on any one part itself. However we have, a few miles away, a mine of high grade reserves in quantity that does permit the establishment of a milling operation. This government, I believe, has a direct responsibility to call together all those groups with a direct purpose of a co-operative development of a mill that would utilize all the ores and work toward a long-range or long-term operation. In this way security of personal investment and public investment by local government can be assured, in the best interest of all the people of the community.

Security against the major hazards of life is a wide area of this government's concern. It must not overlook improvement in the opportunity of our people to direct their working efforts toward a future of their own design and making. We find our population suffering from some old inequalities—little changed or not changed enough.

In spite of our talk, we have not effectively lifted up the underprivileged. In building toward this end, we must take great care we do not destroy or harm ambition. We also must continue to recognize the greater ability of some to earn more than others. Our people now, more than ever, assert that the ambition of the individual to obtain for him and his, a proper security, a reasonable leisure, and a decent living throughout life, as an ambition to be preferred to the appetite for great wealth and great power.

Many of us believe that there must be an up-grading of the place for a person in the image presented of the individual's value to Ontario in being in business so that our young bright minds have worthwhile further direction. I believe it is existing and future industry that will be our greatest help toward the opportunity for people to earn a decent livelihood.

Business in Ontario today is expected to meet social concerns of our people, either directly or indirectly. There appears no end to the challenges to be met. It includes inflation, foreign competition, unsatisfactory productivity, and in many areas increasing government regulation. Rising costs have damaged our competitive position, both at home and in other countries, with some of our production. Business must be protected by our government from new and unnecessary social costs if it is to be the main vehicle by which new and more jobs are created and to take its proper place in relieving unemployment problems.

What sort of business do I mean? Surely, the sort of legitimate and honourable business—that business which is of advantage both to buyer and seller and to producer, distributor and to consumer alike, whether individuals or nations—which makes common some useful thing which has been rare, or makes accessible to the people good things which have been within reach only of the few. We mean that great art of production and exchange which through the centuries has increased human comfort, cherished peace, fostered the fine arts, developed the pregnant principle of associated action and promoted both public security and public liberty.

The third security I wish to make some remarks about concerns the need for decent homes. Whether these are permanent or summer homes only, there is cause for immediate remedy by this government. I refer in particular to the present chaos in land development and planning. The sheer size of this problem in rural Ontario is beyond any one person's ability to conceive at this moment in time.

A recent decision from consideration by a provincial judge in Peterborough, Ontario, on a vendor's and purchaser's application involvement with deeds and severalty has led to this reference of chaos.

Hundreds of titles being filed in registry offices, that are bypassing consideration by our planning branch at 801 Bay Street, must have immediate action, as it really highlights the frustration with the present processing operation of this branch. Why, otherwise, would so many use a process that leaves some doubt as to valid title? This matter I brought to the attention of the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) in detail.

Creating homes in the winter season is a problem—but why not consider waiving municipal taxes for the first year or several years on homes so created? Such a subsidy to any homeowner who builds at this time would be a good incentive. Even a basic grant, per home, to the municipality in lieu of taxes to cover this programme is not beyond consideration. One of the ironies about this Legislature has been the millions of words expressed about 12 per cent of our housing—they are very few in comparison—about having our families own their own homes.

In the limited time I have today, I only touched on the stark fact before us that great numbers are unemployed. A large proportion have been placed in this position by conditions which were not so much local as national.

One national concern is the change-over to the metric system. We, as a province, should look at this future requirement which will face our people, our industry, our educational system and our way of life. It will update our plants, create jobs and improve our export opportunities. Let us take a good look at this with a view to not only what it means to our future, but what it can do for us in the short term in Ontario.

The second national concern that many feel may involve Ontario people is the real possibility that a value added tax may be applied in the United States.

The possible options that may be available to the Americans in connection with their exports could be of great concern to us in competition. It requires us to look into this and decide our policy as a province because we would immediately be involved in joint discussion with our federal people. These are two things we can keep in close touch with that will determine how well we can protect our present employment. At the moment it is just as necessary to keep what we have in jobs, and also requires very great energy as does the effort to create new jobs.

The burden of the unemployed has grown with great rapidity. We have here a human as well as an economic problem. When human considerations are concerned, Canadians give them precedence. Continual dependence upon welfare induces, I believe, a spiritual disintegration, fundamentally destructive to the national fibre. We have only to remember the Thirties or to observe the experiences of other jurisdictions.

Work must be found for able-bodied workmen. If we in Ontario have a choice, let us take the long-range permanent solution; but in any case why not create that choice, if we can, to a far greater extent? And it can be done, Mr. Speaker. It has been done by other nations in the past and it has been done by our own nation. We have had ups and downs in the areas of unemployment and we have, in the end, arrived at a reasonable and sensible solution which has put our economy into motion again.

I say this without reservation, Mr. Speaker, for at this moment, while so many of our people are caught up in the crushing unemployment wave, we in the counties of Victoria and Haliburton are in fact experiencing a somewhat healthy economic life in comparison to some years in a good amount of our area.

Many people have acquired new homes and cottages. Our farms show numerous new silos and barn extensions. New industry and plant extensions are quite visible in several places.

The municipal, county and provincial road programme was an aggressive one. Our municipal street rebuilding, resurfacing and widening of a good portion of the road and street system as planned for this coming year is extensive. Bridges in a good number were built throughout the townships or under the counties' programme by The Department of Highways or by several joint construction policies.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member unduly, but within the next three minutes would he find a convenient place to adjourn the debate so that the private members' hour may go on time?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Perhaps at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION No 4

Clerk of the House: Private members' motion No. 4, by Mr. Deacon.

RESOLUTION: That, in the opinion of this House the Ontario Water Resources Commission should be empowered:

1. Without entering into agreements with municipalities, to construct the water supply facilities and trunk mains and to develop the sewage treatment facilities and collector trunks required to serve the development of municipalities' distribution systems in Ontario;

2. To sell these wholesale services to municipalities according to area rates which are reasonably competitive with existing rates and which will eliminate the main cost variations that now exist across the province;

3. To embark on the above programmes on such scale and with such scope as to ensure the servicing of building lots in a quantity substantially in excess of the current demand.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): I move resolution No. 4 standing in my name on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Deacon moves resolution No. 4 standing in his name on the order paper.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, about 50 years ago, one of the greatest things happened in this province that had ever happened to ensure its future development. That was the formation of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power system. With that system it enabled communities which up to that time were not in a position to obtain hydro power because of bad location or because of the private enterprise of that time not considering it economic or other things—it enabled those communities to have plants and transmission lines constructed so that there could be development in all parts of Ontario where pressure for growth existed and where economic opportunity for industrial development occurred, and these centres could receive the power that they required.

Back in 1955, the Ontario Water Resources Commission was formed. At the time of its first meeting with some of the people in the financial community, where the programme for the Water Resources Commission was outlined by the late Dr. Berry, we were told that the Ontario Water Resources Commission would be another Ontario Hydro, but an Ontario Hydro that would be serving us with the needs for water rather than hydro because water at this stage is just or almost as important as hydro today. The problem has been that in the period since 1956, when these great words were spoken by Dr. Berry, we find that the government of this province has strangled the Ontario Water Resources Commission by placing upon it onerous guidelines which make it just a financing project with little individual water development and sewage system projects across this province.

It has not the ability to meet the overall provincial requirements for growth and development. It does not have the same concept of providing the wholesale requirement and leaving the retail or the distribution facilities to the local autonomy situation. It puts all the responsibility on the local municipalities including onerous financial burden, including the impossible engineering requirements of staying within very, very tight geographic limitations that are always necessary if you are not able to deal on a broad scale.

I want to illustrate this major restriction of the OWRC by pointing to distortion in the wholesale price of water to the city of London and the city of St. Thomas. The city of St. Thomas was forced to enter into an agreement for the supply of water from the Lake Erie pipeline at a price nearly three times that offered the city of London from the Lake Huron pipeline, even though these two cities were only 10 miles apart. The fact that Lake Erie's pipeline project did not pay out on as an attractive basis and required these high costs took nothing away from the tremendous problem facing the citizens of St. Thomas in offering incentive to industry when they had to charge water rates greatly in excess of those of their neighbouring city.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook: They had to.

Mr. Deacon: They had to, or show great losses in subsidizing their water rates. Surely we do not need to impose that financial burden on the municipality?

The way they were able to achieve that agreement was of course by stopping any development whatsoever in St. Thomas until they agreed to these onerous terms. Although the municipality fought for some time, the pressures of development were such that they did have to agree to a rate that was between two and three times the London rate.

The other alternative that developing communities face is to have a developer come along and offer them a project without any of these onerous requirements, but of course there are always other ways that municipalities have to pay if such a development goes forward by the developer who in effect is controlling the whole project.

The delay of 14 years in the Lake Huron project, the delay of several years in the Lake Erie project and the delay of six years in the Brampton sewage project all come back to this problem that we have faced, where the Ontario Water Resources Commission is really not carrying out any meaningful function for the future of developing municipalities in this province today. As a matter of fact, it is placing restrictions upon them that are completely unnecessary.

For example, in the case of the Brampton pipeline, in the case of the other pipelines I have been talking about, in the case of any project that is operated exclusively by the Ontario Water Resources Commission, it requires that an agreement be entered into which, in effect, is a take-or-pay agreement. They have to assure the Water Resources Commission of sufficient revenues to pay off the obligations that are incurred in the construction of the project within, say, 30 or 40 years, whatever is decided for that particular project. And that agreement is considered by the Ontario Municipal Board as the same as a debt or a bond; it prevents the municipality from entering into other financial obligations unless the total financial picture of the municipality, including this Ontario Water Resources Commission agreement, permits them to do so. Yet when the province goes out to borrow the money to build pipeline for the needs of an area, not one penny of that money is dependent on these municipal agreements.

In other words, we are crippling the financial resources of the municipality, and yet the fact that we are putting that burden upon them means nothing to the taxpayers of this province in advantages in the raising of provincial funds. Funds are raised because it is a provincial obligation. The province sells provincial bonds and turns the funds over to the Ontario Water Resources Commission. But those who buy a bond could not care less about these agreements that we force these municipalities to enter into. These agreements are of course the cause of a lot of animosity that develops between the municipality and the Water Resources Commission, because they can see in these agreements that they are not going to be able to do the road paving job or certain work in the town or municipality because they have this agreement with OWRC. We force them to go into these unnecessary agreements, crippling them. Actually it is not helping us one iota.

As a result of this practice of making each project self-liquidating, we not only distort the rates, which I have mentioned as between St. Thomas and the city of London—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): They cannot deny that.

Mr. Deacon: —but it also causes a strangulation of the small communities. If one is in a town like Geraldton, like Fenelon Falls, or Fort Frances—almost anywhere you go in this province—one will find communities where they can have no more development because development has been closed off until they build a sewage plant, a new water plant addition, or something of that sort. Yet that project is held up because the province forces the municipality to enter into a financial commitment that it is not in a position to undertake, and their taxpayers cannot accept the burden that is imposed upon them.

This is the reason that we must immediately remove this restriction, this obligation that we now require through the OWRC, to make projects self-liquidating. This is why we must take the Ontario Hydro approach, where we look at the overall picture and get rates that are reasonable—area rates—that are required for these towns to go forward and allow them to distribute what we provide wholesale at rates to those towns that are competitive. We will not get situations such as the one my hon. friend from Sarnia faces, where we are in effect forcing higher rates on the municipalities than they now have, and they have no choice in the matter.

Mr. Bullbrook: Double! Terrible! The OWRC are the judge and jury.

An hon. member: No appeal!

Mr. Bullbrook: No appeal. You cannot appeal it.

Mr. Deacon: In addition to this self-liquidating requirement, and the restriction that it has placed upon municipalities and yet not helping us as a province one little bit in our financing, we have the restriction that prevents the overall planning of communities because we think in terms of forcing communities to have their own little projects instead of saying we, as a province, will provide the wholesale services to them. And with the power that the province has, we do not have to be concerned about whether we go into the neighbouring municipalities or whether we drew water through a pipeline from across three or four municipalities to supply them; we have the right because we are a provincial body. With that power we can then plan on an overall basis. After all, services are one of the most important planning tools that we have. We can draw all the pretty pictures in the world, but if we do not have the services that people require in development, then we might as well forget the pretty plans. The province has this power, with the Water Resources Commission, to influence where it wants development to occur by providing services in substantial quantities to those areas.

The ridiculous part is that even when the Ontario Water Resources Commission does have some overall conception for a plan, it sometimes gets stymied itself by municipal boundaries. Take for example the $65-million or $85-million—I do not think anybody knows yet what the cost will be of the latest scheme that has been presented to service the area north of Metro—a 25-mile collector sewer going up hill and down dale, with all types of pumps required because of the difference in land elevation—at tremendous cost, at tremendous expense. By the time the sewage from over in Vaughan gets over to the proposed site for the sewage plant on the Rouge River, it will be septic and it will be impossible to treat, and this is all because the province sees the north boundary of Metro as a wall, just like the Chinese wall or the Siegfried line one cannot pass—one has to go around it. Instead we should put treatment plants on the upper reaches of these rivers and, if the effluent flow is too high for existing streams to take the flow and further treat it down on the lake. Present technology of our Water Resources Commission seems to be it will be handled in the lake anyway in the end.

Here we have an example of where they should not think in terms of being barred by the north boundary of Metro, but where they could think in terms of the geographical conditions—the elevations, the river valleys—and have the sewage take the natural drainage course for the most efficient and most effective way of handling it. Yet they do not seem to feel that they can cross a municipal boundary.

If we had overall provincial planning and gave the power to the Ontario Water Resources Commission to forget about municipal boundaries and just put the whole scheme in terms of where we want development to occur according to our provincial plan, then we would get the most efficient and the lowest cost, the best type of water supply system and sewage treatment system.

This does not endanger the local autonomy, because we are not interfering with the distribution of the collection of sewage in this concept. We are thinking in the same way as transmission lines for Ontario Hydro—you take them to the hydro distribution points and let the local municipality deal with their own people. The main thing we must do is be sure that each municipality in a given area knows that it will be charged similar rates for the services it receives to Ontario Water Resources, to those charged other municipalities. We cannot have a repetition of that St. Thomas-London situation.

The third point I want to bring out is, if we take this concept and put provincial funds in quantity behind the Ontario Water Resources Commission we can ensure that the shortage of supply of serviced lots, particularly in this area, will be cleared up.

We have all types of problems today that are caused because we have distorted the picture of normal supply and demand in housing. Landlord-tenant relations can be covered by all types of legislation, but unless there is a 10 per cent surplus of empty apartments you will always have troubles. As soon as there is a good surplus, people have a choice and that takes care of an awful lot of the problems that exist under the conditions we have today.

If we have a surplus supply of serviced land we will not be faced with the problem we have today, where land is now getting into a few hands and those people who own the serviced land are able to call the tune and charge whatever price the market will bear. And that is a most unfair situation caused by not having an excess of supply of serviced lots.

Mr. Bullbrook: We just buy the lots from those people who call the tune; right? That is what we do.

Mr. Deacon: Right, we just help them out of their financial problems by giving them cash.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: We are room-mates, we can chat together if we want to.

Mr. Deacon: But our present situation means that the ones who can go ahead are the ones that have big projects, can help finance the cost to a municipality of a sewage and water scheme and it removes the opportunity for the small man, who is often the one that keeps the prices under control. We lose that opportunity for him to be competitive, because he just cannot get in with a big deal, the big development programmes.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Would the hon. member acquire public lands to help pay for the trunks?

Mr. Deacon: There is no need for us to get into the land business and own land or have money tied up in land. If we have a surplus of serviced land on the market and we also tax at market value land that is serviced and ready for development, that would soon move it into the market, because no person who owns raw land—or land that has no housing on it or is not being developed—can afford to hold it very long with taxation based on present market value. We would have many land bankruptcy sales if the province would really go after opening up an excess to serviced land.

There is a fourth area in which things would happen if we would take the new approach of Ontario Water Resources, and that is in the area of research and development. This afternoon up at York University there was a presentation of a critique done by a similar group up there on the Toronto-centred-region plan. One of the points the group brought up that I thought was particularly good, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this major failing of the Toronto-centred-region plan, is that it is based upon 1960 technology.

The plan is based upon having a sewage plant down on the lake and all development within a very few miles of Lake Ontario will use it so that we can make Lake Ontario our sewage effluent lagoon. We fail to recognize that if we put money into research and development and co-operate with other jurisdictions that are doing the same, we would not have to restrict our future plans because of the technology. We will be able to have the technology fit our requirements, making use of the geographical advantages of the land within the area where we want to have development occur.

For example, one of the projects that I gather is making some progress is something called the "Black Box" where all our sewage will be handled on an individual home basis. Apparently, some way they get the residue in a little black box and it is converted into pretty good fuel. Whether that is going to be something considered desirable, or whether it will be the scheme that they have developed in Muskegon, Michigan—where they used the effluent there for producing a three-fold increase in their production of corn, or a very substantial increase in the nutrient value of wheat, or they get the greenest golf course greens anywhere in North America—whatever they do, they use the phosphate that is in the effluent to advantage instead of having it dumped into their water resources, such as Lake Ontario to endanger the future ecology of the whole region.

This is where we need to have research and development occur. If the Ontario Water Resources Commission has the financial responsibilities for putting in a water and sewage plant and has, therefore, the control over what goes in, it will always be trying to get better value out of these plants, it will be able to do experimental projects here and there to improve the technology so that the future development of our province will not then be controlled by technology. We shall be able to take better advantage of the geography we have.

Local autonomy, cost to taxpayers, all these advantages I have cited we can have if the Ontario Water Resources Commission will be given the power and instruction in the resources to make it the Ontario Hydro of water and sewage in this province.

Mr. Bullbrook: The member for Wentworth is next.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) I am next?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes. The member knew he was next.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I somehow thought that the order was that a Conservative spoke second. I want to take a moment to talk about the resolution, because I find the resolution rather vague. I would like to say that we agree with it, if I was absolutely sure what the resolution itself intended.

If the purpose of the resolution is to ensure that pollution will be reduced in the Province of Ontario, and that the province will play an active role in ensuring that municipalities will, indeed, have the kind of anti-pollution resources that are necessary to combat municipal pollution, then we agree. There is no question. But what I worry about is that there are not sufficient safeguards indicated either in the resolution or by the member in his address to make clear to us whether or not the expenditures of money would simply result in pouring of public funds into ensuring that the private developer and speculator would derive more from his investment than he presently derives.

There has to be an effort made by the province, if they are going to embark on this kind of a programme, to ensure that the development that takes place is in keeping with the overall development programme of the province and, indeed, the development programmes of the municipalities.

I am surprised, frankly surprised, to hear the Liberals speak about proposing that the water resources commission should be empowered without entering into agreements with municipalities, because in every single speech that they have made dealing with municipal affairs they have spoken almost completely about the need for municipalities to have autonomy. Now, how do they rationalize the situation that they are prepared to embark upon a programme—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: —of thrusting down the throats of municipalities without entering into any agreements that they shall develop in a certain way without taking into consideration whether this conforms with official plans; or whether this, in fact, is in keeping with the overall development of the Province of Ontario.

What we want to propose in conjunction with this kind of resolution is that before the government embarks upon the providing of trunk sewer and trunk water facilities, it first of all has to have an official plan for the province. You have got to decide at the provincial level in what areas you want to see development take place.

It is not good enough to turn to the municipality—let us take Niagara, for an example, the regional municipality of Niagara—and tell them that they are going to have municipal autonomy on the one hand while on the other the government turns to the OWRC and says to them: “You are empowered without any agreement by the municipality to push water and sewers in there, anywhere you want to put them, regardless of whether it conforms with the official plan.” That is exactly what has been said. I find that to be unacceptable.

If we are, as a province, prepared to settle down and to draft the kind of economic programme that will insure that the province will be developed in an orderly fashion, and if we are prepared to ensure that this development takes place in such a way that people in this province are going to benefit and that the economics of the province will grow and that employment will be made available, then this is fine. We can then, after having done that, determine where the water and the sewers have to go in order to ensure that the kind of development we want takes place.

But what is happening here—what is happening in the Liberal resolution—is simply that they are saying that, regardless of whatever plans municipalities may have—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Oh, that is not true; come on now!

Mr. Deans: —the OWRC is going to be empowered—

Mr. Sargent: It is permissive.

Mr. Deans: —to put in trunk services and that those trunk services are not necessarily geared to those lands that are held by the OHC or by Central Mortgage and Housing, or, for that matter, are not necessarily geared to the plans of development that the province has embarked upon.

How can you support that kind of resolution? The member himself said that there was no need for the province to enter into the land business—that he was prepared to use public funds to make the land that is presently held by the developers more profitable. To that end we find that completely outside of our participation. We do not happen to agree that it is proper to use public funds to enhance the already outlandish profits made by the private speculators and developers.

Mr. Deacon: The hon. member does not understand it.

Mr. Deans: The member says I do not understand it, but the fact of the matter is that the resolution is so poorly worded and so vague in its intent—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): That is because the member does not understand it.

Mr. Deans: How does one interpret section 22 “To sell these wholesale services to municipalities according to area rates which are reasonably competitive with existing rates.” How do you determine that, when in actual fact there are no existing rates? If there were existing rates you would not have to put the trunk sewers in.

Mr. Deacon: Sure you would!

Mr. Deans: “And which would eliminate the main cost variations that now exist across the province.” What does that mean in English?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): It sounds like “Laugh-in” to me.

Mr. Deans: What does that mean in English?

An hon. member: Preposterous.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Cannot the NDP get somebody better than that?

Mr. Deans: The whole thing is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: —improperly worded and poorly thought out. If the member had introduced a resolution that said: "That OWRC should be empowered to ensure that every municipality has proper sewage facilities in order to cut down on the pollution in the Province of Ontario," then that would be acceptable.

Mr. Good: What does the hon. member think this means?

Mr. Deans: It does not say that.

Mr. Good: He cannot read.

Mr. Deans: If this resolution had said that this province was going to embark on a properly planned programme of economic development and that they were prepared to expend the necessary funds to ensure that development took place in the areas in which it was most needed, and that the money of the Province of Ontario was going to be used to ensure that the publicly held lands were going to be developed in order to keep down the cost of private lands which are available for home purchasers, then we could have supported it. But the fact of the matter is that this is not what it says.

What it says, in fact, is, "We are going to take the taxpayers' money. We are going to make it available. We do not care who gets the benefit of it. We hope that it will accrue to the homeowner or to the home purchaser." But in actual fact it does not necessarily accrue to the home purchaser. Because of that we find the whole thing very difficult.

In the third point, the member obviously tries to rationalize it. He says: "To embark on the above programmes on such scale, and with such scope, as to ensure the servicing of building lots in a quantity substantially in excess of current demand." To be in "excess of current demand" is one thing, but there is no guarantee in that kind of a statement that those lots will be made available at a cost that people can afford.

There is required initially in this province a determination of the kind of economic growth that will take place and also, prior to embarking on this kind of programme, a determination of basic land values. Because this members knows, as I know, that the minute you put in the trunk sewers and the minute they pass through the private developer's lands, that this will increase the value of the private developer's land and he will soak the public. This should be directed solely toward ensuring that the public lands that are presently available are developed.

If this is the kind of programme that the Liberal Party wants to put forward—if they want to talk about providing public money to fatten up the pockets of the private developers—then that is up to them. But I happen to think that his particular resolution, reading it on its face, is not a very acceptable way to deal with the people of this province.

I do not care what was intended by it. It is what it says that matters. It says, quite frankly, as far as I can see, that it is going to use public funds to ensure that the private developer and land speculator will receive more than he presently gets. It is he who will benefit and no one else. As far as I am concerned, that is totally unacceptable. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario South.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Mr. Speaker, I commend the member for York Centre for his interest in the Ontario Water Resources Commission and welcome the opportunity to speak on its functions.

I notice the member who introduced the resolution is not in the House. I hope that he is sufficiently interested that he will show up later for the discussions here.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): He is here.

Mr. Trotter: He is not far away.

Mr. W. Newman: I cannot but marvel at the general philosophy reflected in these proposals. I find it very difficult to reconcile the call by the member for York Centre for a centralized agency, with his party's demand for the true acceptance of the doctrine of local autonomy. I do not know how many times I have heard him stand in this House and talk about local autonomy and he stands up here and talks about a centralized agency here today.

Under the present system that we have, municipalities and the OWRC are partners in water and sewage projects and I would think that the municipalities would want to continue to have a say in these projects which have a direct bearing on the mill rates in their respective municipalities.

The government's contribution in the provision of water supply and sewage treatment facilities is already substantial. In 1964 and 1965 the provincial ownership plan was introduced, providing for the construction and operation of water and sewage treatment plants for municipalities with the cost recovered on a usage basis.

This programme is administered by the OWRC and the plants are operated entirely at cost. Development of these facilities for the province is of much benefit to the municipalities, since the financial burden falls upon the province and is not part of the direct municipal debt.

When the programme was initiated municipalities were required to provide the trunk sewerage and watermains necessary to connect the homes using the services. However, the cost of providing the sewer trunks and watermains proved to be a heavy burden in some of the smaller municipalities. In 1967 this government included these services as well in a provincially financed programme.

Further financial assistance programmes were undertaken by the government in 1969 with the initiation of a plan of assistance to municipalities with high-cost projects. Some communities are faced with unusually high water and sewage plant construction costs because of topography or because of small population or because of a very low assessment per capita.

Provincial assistance is being provided in an attempt to ensure the cost of a water and sewage works in a municipality will not exceed an average home charge of $100 per year for water and $120 per year for sewage. The government contributes a maximum of 50 per cent of the total cost of both water and sewage work in such high-cost projects.

As of September, 1970, provincial subsidies approved by the Ontario Water Resources Commission amounted to approximately $28.7 million. This money will be spent over the next three years as projects are developed. At the same time, in 1969, the government also approved an OWRC proposal that financial assistance be granted to ensure that area projects for sewage and water may be oversized for future development.

Under this plan, oversizing must be beyond the needs of communities initially serviced. The province may contribute 15 per cent of the total capital cost of the work. This programme of provincial assistance was first designed to assist existing communities only and applied to new work. However, this has since been extended to the incorporation of a subsidy for extensions to existing systems as well.

Provincially financed extensions are now eligible, whether or not the existing works are required by the province.

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing subsidy programmes are clear proof of the seriousness with which this government views the need to service Ontario communities with adequate water supply and sewage treatment facilities. By and large, the municipalities have the capability to handle the provision of these facilities, and the Ontario Water Resources Commission provides both technical and financial support where required and requested.

Partnership programmes such as these between the provincial and municipal governments are preferable to the imposition of a centralized agency. I, therefore, cannot support the resolution of the hon. member for York Centre at this time.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, in supporting the resolution of my hon. colleague I would like to deal mainly with the matter of the agreement that the municipality must enter into with OWRC before it is permitted the services of water and sewage in its locality.

We know that there are many small municipalities in the province—and I will speak generally of my own riding—which are desperately in need of water services and sewage services, if these communities are not going to come to a standstill and go behind. We know that pollution in our province is a very real and live issue at the present time and that many of these small municipalities are facing this problem very seriously, because first of all they do not have the funds to clean up the matter. Secondly, the people themselves are finding that when they start to investigate how to go about getting sewer and water into the municipality they almost throw up their hands in disbelief at what the cost will be. Definitely, in my opinion, there has to be a better way of providing our small municipalities with sewer and water.

In my own riding, for instance, between the cities of Kitchener and Stratford there is only one municipality that has services. That is New Hamburg. The town of New Hamburg has grown very drastically since they put services in. They are meeting many crises because of this fact, and while they have no funds now to extend their services, they find that their locality is now completely filled to its maximum for services. So we find there is another little municipality along the highway between Kitchener and Stratford called Baden, which is right in the act of putting in services, and I would like to look at this municipality of Baden. I have with me a copy of the agreement and members will hardly believe what hardship that agreement with OWRC can put on some of the people of the area.

Mr. Ruston: It costs $700 just to advertise one in the paper.

Mr. Good: The people in the municipality know very well that they have to do something; they have to get services in one way or another or their growth is completely stopped. This has happened. No further building can be allowed in the municipality for the simple reason the water supplies are not adequate. Some are contaminated, and the effluent from the individual disposal beds of the area, is contaminating the whole area.

It was some few years ago the people in the municipality decided they should have sewers and water in their area, so they took some preliminary action and found out that it was going to cost them around half a million dollars. At that time they felt it was much too expensive, that they could not afford it. So things went from bad to worse until it was apparent to everyone that something had to be done.

It was reactivated about two years ago, and OWRC started to talk with the municipal council which in this case happened to be the township of Wilmot. They told them at what stage their reports were; the engineering reports were in and locations were being tested for water supply. Finally, after much consideration, activity began on the actual engineering and layout facility for the municipality.

Eventually the procedures came to the point where the OWRC was prepared to present an agreement to the municipality. The agreement was accepted by the municipality under the conditions which now exist, whereby publication must be made in the newspaper on two consecutive weeks, after which the local residents have three weeks to lodge a protest to the clerk of the municipality and if, of course, any protests are lodged, an Ontario Municipal Board hearing will be held.

The town of Baden was no exception. There were 135 protests to the agreement out of a population of 973. This is hard to imagine—135 people in the village were unable, in their estimation, to afford sewer and water at the cost that was proposed by the agreement. On checking with OWRC, they told me, "Well, this is not unusual. We have instances where 200 people object to the installation, but we still feel that the municipality needs them so they have to go ahead and get them.

Now, I would like to look into this agreement a little more closely so that perhaps we can understand and sympathize with some of these people.

It is not going to be any problem for some people in the community; they are going to be able to pay the rates. The people in these nice houses along the street that have been built in the last few years obviously can afford to pay the cost of this agreement.

But the part to which many people object is, first of all, the three manners in which costs are allocated. First is the connection charge, then the frontage charge and finally the usage charge.

The connection charge, in the case of the municipality of Baden, is separate for water and for sewage. We will deal first with the water.

The connection charge is $16.17 per year; the frontage charge is 60 cents a foot, so on a 100-foot lot it would be $60; and the usage charge for water of an average householder is $50. So we have a water charge of $126.17 a year.

But this is only part of it. We then go to the sewerage aspect of it.

The sewerage connection charge is $18.59 a year. The frontage charge is the same; so that would be another $60 for a 100-foot lot. And the usage charge is 205 per cent surcharge on the water charge, which is another $102.50, making a total of $181.09 for sewage. Added to $126.17 for water, the average householder has to pay $307.26 for sewer and water services.

Mr. Ruston: That sounds like the Premier's (Mr. Davis') education costs.

Mr. Good: Now to many people this is fine and dandy, but to 135 people in that little community this is too much. Why are these costs so high?

Well before we go into that, I might just say this; that one can reduce his annual charge of $307—and, incidentally, one may say, "Well, Good is using a 100-foot lot and some lots are only 60 feet"; well, that is fine, for on a 60-foot lot it is $259. But let me point out that in many small communities lots are much larger than they are in cities for the simple reason that land was cheap years ago and people had to build on big lots in order to be able to put in a septic tank. So now they are caught in the squeeze of having to pay the huge frontage charges simply because the OWRC chooses to make the municipality itself responsible for service which the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) would really know is a social service in this province that has to be provided if we are ever going to clean up our pollution mess.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Is the member allowing for the subsidy there?

Mr. Good: These rates, Mr. Speaker, are in spite of the fact that the province pays up to 50 per cent and in this case they are paid 50 per cent.

If a person wants to reduce his annual charge of $307, he can, if he has the money, pay in a lump sum. The lump sum payment on a 100 foot lot would be $1,658. I am sure none of these 135 people who objected has $1,658 to pay out in a lump sum. On a 60-foot lot it would be $1,122.

So here we have this impasse, where certain people in the community feel if they are going to progress they have to have sewers and water and another faction in the same community feel that it is going to be a tremendous hardship to them and they just will not be able to stand the financial pressures.

Now bear in mind the figures which I have just given you, and let us hear what the sewer-water rate is in these three municipalities—

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be well to warn the hon. member that he has two minutes left so he can arrange his speech accordingly.

Mr. Good: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Compare $307, which you are asking the people in Baden to pay for sewers and water, against the average householder in the city of Kitchener, who pays $60 to $80 for sewer and water.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right. That is the problem.

Mr. Good: In Waterloo, $48 for sewers and water. In the town of Elmira, $44. Now, how do you ever expect to get sewers and water into the small municipalities of Ontario under agreements such as this?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, it is the third section of the resolution of the member for York Centre on which I wish to make a few brief comments, for I must think of the resolution as it would affect the constituency I represent.

The township of Sandwich West is on the outskirts of Windsor. It has no sewage disposal system and no sewers. There are many houses, however, that would be built if there were an adequate sewage system planned for the near future. Even as things are, there are many people willing to install septic tanks until such time as they can hook up to a sewage treatment plant, and build a new home under those conditions.

There has been an understandable reluctance on the part of the OWRC to slow building until a good system is installed. A few months ago, about 56 lots were approved by the Sandwich West township council for building homes and the local adjustment committee approved them for severance as building lots. The 30-foot lots of the original township subdivision plan were being divided into 75-foot lots to conform to present-day requirements.

For some reason the then Minister of Municipal Affairs intervened and appealed to the municipal board these 56 decisions of the local government. If there were sound ecological reasons for this move, for this appeal, I could understand and approve the appeal of course. But this does not seem to have been the case, for we find that several of these appeals have now been withdrawn. Fifty-six building lots were tied up, have been tied up for many months, and then some of them are set free.

It is true that a contractor on Golfview, who had a very prominent Conservative lawyer was able to persuade the minister to withdraw the appeals on his lots; and it is true that on another road another contractor, who had another very prominent Conservative lawyer, was also able to persuade the minister, the present Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), to withdraw the appeals.

I have been seeking for several weeks by telephone and by letter to get from The Department of Municipal Affairs an explanation for this strange behaviour. All these lots were open to the same technical objections; all these lots were reviewed by the local board of adjustment; all were approved by the township council; all were suddenly appealed by the minister.

All should have been allowed or all should have been denied. If there were valid health reasons for refusing approval for building homes then so be it, ban all building until adequate sewage systems are assured. But apparently this was not the determining factor in the minister's appeal against these 56 lots.

Now if the OWRC will push ahead, as suggested by the hon. member's resolution, with the development of sewage treatment plants in places like Sandwich West, these frustrations which are now being experienced would no longer be experienced. Political favours of this kind would not be asked and would not be given.

But before I give blanket approval to all sewage treatment plants, let me refer to an opinion held by some people that septic tanks regularly cleaned on a house-to-house basis, perhaps twice a year—which would be relatively inexpensive because as you know now when a homeowner calls, the cleaner has to make a special trip—it takes an hour or so to do one place; but doing it door-to-door would be very inexpensive—

Mr. Speaker, the theory or opinion held by some people is that the best possible kind of sewage disposal plant is the home septic tank regularly cleaned. They argue that the treatment plants, the large ones, eventually pass on to rivers and lakes a considerable amount of partially treated sewage which should be returned to the soil. They argue that the home septic tank can be cleaned out—

Mr. Bullbrook: What is the member doing with it when he takes it out of the septic tank?

Mr. Burr: —and the effluent, after some rather simple treatment, returned to the farms, the golf courses, the gardens and the lawns of the province.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is one country club I would not want to belong to.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Ecoutez bien!

Mr. Burr: I do not know whether this is feasible, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to have a certain logic to it, and I pass on the idea to the OWRC for serious consideration. If this is a valid theory, of course then the proliferation of sewage treatment plants would actually be unnecessary. With this reservation then, I must express general agreement with the resolution if it will promote and accelerate the best type of sewage treatment and disposal and if it will do this at the lowest possible cost to the people of the municipalities of this province rather than providing a windfall for land speculators, as my colleague has suggested.

I congratulate the hon. member for York Centre for bringing forward this resolution for discussion and hope that the discussion will prove of some value at least to the OWRC.

Mr. B. Newman: The member had the right side of the issue.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few comments about the resolution, I would like first to commend the member for York Centre for his recognition of the need for expanded water and sewer facilities in order to enable the further development of the province at the same, or more greatly accelerated rate, than is now taking place.

However, I am a bit puzzled and concerned by the content of the resolution—the first part, the portion that says, “without entering agreements.” In Peel South, we have achieved something of what I believe he has in mind here, with the agreement of the municipalities.

Mr. Deacon: It took five years, five years. It was an unnecessary delay.

Mr. Kennedy: That shows fiscal responsibility in dealing with the problems.

Mr. Good: That is pretty fast.

Mr. Gaunt: What do the people do in the meantime? Live in tents?

Mr. Kennedy: I believe, Mr. Speaker, in all these instances it is necessary to reach agreement with municipalities over such projects as he suggests.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Kennedy: It is a very sensitive area to go into a county or some larger jurisdiction without having the agreement and having consulted with the people that will be involved right at the local scene.

Mr. Bullbrook: But then you designate it. If you cannot get an agreement, you designate it.

Mr. Good: No more help.

Mr. Kennedy: This government has proposed municipal-provincial partnership. I think this is one area that we must remember, rather than any unilateral action on the part of any body of government. One reason for this, apart from the retention of local autonomy, is that certainly in the built-up areas, such as around Metro, additional facilities must tie in with existing ones. It must take into account the present equity of the municipalities. As the member for one of the Hamilton ridings said, "We must recognize the development plans of the municipalities." Surely, this means that we must work with them.

In the agreement with which I am most familiar, the Peel South one, provision was made to provide basic trunk services—

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): That would be something new.

Mr. Kennedy: —and, of course, to wholesale water and sewer services through the municipalities. The member for York Centre suggested a programme similar to Hydro. The local hydro commissions work very closely with Ontario Hydro and, in fact, the local hydro commissions have an equity in Ontario Hydro. That means that there is a pretty close association.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): We work with them, you work with them.

Mr. Kennedy: Another problem here is, I believe, that though the OWRC can do, and is doing, a good job where the major trunk services have been installed, the local operation of them—the relationship with consumers, the billing and various other aspects of operations—is much better dealt with on a local basis. Again, if the province were to go ahead, or OWRC, and shoot these lines through wherever they thought suitable, I think it would cause a lot of sparks locally. Local people should deal with these problems that are local, that is the final retailing of the water or the sewer services.

Mr. Bullbrook: Right! Exactly right!

Mr. Good: That is the point.

Mr. Kennedy: Well, that is not what the resolution implies.

Mr. Good: It says right there, "wholesale."

Mr. Kennedy: It is not. I think the member has it in mind, but it does not say so.

Mr. Gaunt: It says "wholesale"; it says that.

Mr. Deacon: Move an amendment.

Mr. Kennedy: Yes, I will move an amendment. It is not the policy of this government to take such action. I do not believe that unilateral action by the province would be in our best interests.

Mr. Jackson: It is not the policy of the government to take any action.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You want another Hydro?

Mr. Bullbrook: You want another Hydro?

Mr. Kennedy: Another Hydro would be great.

Mr. Stokes: The government cannot control the one it has now.

Mr. Kennedy: They mentioned that it was a period of time before OWRC agreement was reached in Peel. It was not all that long. Port Credit, Mississauga, Streetsville, Brampton and Chinguacousy got together and after a series of meetings came up with a very amicable arrangement.

That was completed in 1968; and the programme, Mr. Speaker, has been very satisfactory.

Mr. Deacon: It took five years.

Mr. Kennedy: This despite rapid growth in that area, probably the most rapid growth anywhere in Ontario. Prior to one of these meetings, I thought that the members might be interested in an agenda that was set up and it points up, I think, as well as it can be pointed up, some of the issues that must be dealt with. The first question they asked was how can provincial and local jurisdiction over the supply of water be divided? Where will supply points be provided to the individual and municipal distribution networks? Again, this has to tie in with local systems, so how in the world can you work without dealing and reaching an agreement with local municipalities?

What guarantees can be given regarding the adequacy of pressure at supply points? Will the pressure zones envisaged under the provincial programmes be compatible with those presently in operation under local arrangement? Again, this ties in to the development plans of the various municipalities.

What local facilities are to be acquired by the OWRC; and how will compensation be determined?

What arrangements are to be made for the initial operation of the provincial system following the assumption of the above facilities? Finally, how will the provincial system be expanded to meet increasing local requirements?

I think those terms of reference are the ones that would be needed in any major trunk works that would be installed by the province.

They are answerable. They were answered in our county by the municipalities, and a very satisfactory agreement was worked out on this $88 million programme. The problems were resolved, but they were not resolved on any unilateral basis.

For the reasons I give, I cannot support this portion of the resolution. We must be very sensitive to the rights of the municipalities; and just before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would commend OWRC for recognizing the essential need for discussion and negotiation with municipalities and for their success in concluding the very good arrangement in the county of Peel.

Mr. Speaker: The private members' hour has now expired. We started at one minute to 5, and it is now half a minute to 6, so this hour has expired.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock p.m.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned at 5 o'clock, I was proceeding to tell the members some of the activity in my riding conducted by our own people, and some of the matters that had the constructive exercise of the Province of Ontario's assistance with my people in creating work and creating structures for all in this province.

Park development has proceeded extensively by the municipalities and The Department of Lands and Forests in Victoria-Haliburton. Additional parklands were acquired by municipal people in many parts of our counties. Park plans in several instances are being engineered and applied, and additional facilities were established at provincial parks at Emily, Balsam and Silent Lake. Development of the large water service operation at Emily Park and at Balsam Lake Park was an extensive development. Water control structures were undertaken in several places by The Department of Lands and Forests, with the dam at Omemee being the largest and the one at Billings Lake the second in size.

Major highway planning was undertaken with 10- and 20-year forecasts, a very basic feature. These plans were not only internally within the two counties, but were for all areas surrounding the boundaries. One has only to look at these to realize the tremendous growth of traffic expected to be part of our living in 1980 and 1990. The facilities and major highways bringing and taking away our visitors and residents to and from activities will have a great change and effect on our people.

The undertaking of an extensive examination by a study of the Trent Canal waterway, both by the federal and provincial governments, and the local people who are involved, will have a far-reaching effect on all our area.

I have had the privilege of contributing many ideas and suggestions, as have the councils and people of this whole vast waterway land. The study of recommendations will be toward a direct involvement by our people in the future concept of this great recreation facility. How we meet this steady challenge will, to a large extent, establish our future in these two counties. Early development and application of the proposed concept will create the future need for much industry and business of all types, and this will be very widespread over the two counties and in the villages and towns.

The large hospital programme, undertaken by our hospital boards and citizens, of new facilities for the Ross Memorial in Lindsay, extension at the Minden Red Cross outpost—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why are these developments in government members' areas?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: —and the completely new building at Haliburton is certainly the greatest activity we have been able to undertake as a people in this part of our living needs.

I would say to the hon. member that it is basically because our people—

Mr. Sargent: We can tell how good the government has been to the hon. member.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: It is basically because our people in Victoria and Haliburton certainly want to see progress and change and new things for themselves that they have enlisted this government's aid.

The development of water and sewage engineering and planning by Omemee, Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon, Minden and Haliburton through the year has been a vital part of the municipal work of these councils or of the corporations mentioned. This consideration and the decisions will be theirs and with them in 1971. Health unit activity of the two county councils and its board will no doubt be enlarged in 1971. In 1970 the new personnel and existing staff carried out greatly increased workloads and will through this background be able to continue the protection and inspection of our homes, cottages, industry and waterways in the two counties. The awareness of our people and the desire to keep our rivers and lakes free from pollution will place a great responsibility on this part of our public authority.

The responsibility of the undertakings of two large school construction projects—a secondary school building at Lindsay, and the elementary school building at Haliburton—have involved members elected to the county council and the county school boards of Victoria and Haliburton in much discussion and decision-making through the whole of 1970. The fact that both are under construction at present and the necessary changes to the area system operation will continue to be a good part of this local government body in its 1971 deliberations.

Our people's great concern with costs of the school system and its basic considerations of quantity and quality of education will be a large part of the matters of concern for these boards in their area of jurisdiction.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What do they think of the guidelines?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: They have accepted them. They have been right on the dot, and I am going to tell the member that they are working.

Mr. Stokes: Completely unrealistic for northern Ontario.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I live in northern Ontario under very similar conditions.

The changes to The School Administration Act by the Ontario Legislature which provides for the Ontario government to exercise a measure of control over the expenditures of these boards, and the guidelines imposed by the department on such expenditures, have made for serious discussion of an extensive nature in decision-making by board members. The fact they have met this requirement shows the responsibility these members exercise for us.

There is one area which I feel I should bring to the attention of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, and that is the ever-increasing problem of litter pollution, particularly in Algonquin Park. I have today two points or recommendations I wish to make which I feel certainly merit much consideration by the advisory committee on that park.

It has come to my attention that parks which require a travel permit have a definite possible method of control of litter pollution. For instance, each party travelling through the park must take so many tins or bottles in his packs. All that is necessary is that a declaration slip be filled out by the party entering the park.

Mr. Stokes: Is that into the park or out of the park?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: This declaration slip would be checked when the party was leaving the park and a penalty of $5 would certainly encourage people to bring litter out again. It has cost thousands of dollars to bring this litter out and this is a money-saving project by encouraging the people to do it on their own.

Mr. Speaker, the second recommendation I would like to make is that there be an immediate slowdown of the development of campsites for trailers and overnight sites for campers inside of Algonquin Park. I feel this is extremely important if we are to continue to maintain Algonquin Park as the desirable place that it is intended to be.

There is much alternative land for development by private enterprise, and by the province, of such campsites outside of Algonquin and these are within easy reach of Algonquin, being in most cases no more than 10 miles away.

I suggest that this is the type of development we should encourage in the future, Mr. Speaker, in an effort to preserve Algonquin as it is at the present moment.

I have only touched slightly on the matters in which the province has assisted our people in Victoria and Haliburton and I am sure that if every member here would take a constructive approach, as I have tried to do tonight, I am sure we would find that this Province of Ontario is indeed in good hands.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am again glad to take part in this Throne debate. I would like to, of course, while starting, offer congratulations to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the cabinet and in particular to the new ministers who have been taken into the cabinet, and, of course, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my congratulations to you, sir, for the manner in which you have carried out your responsibilities so far.

At the recent Progressive Conservative leadership convention I thought there might be a "new wave." I even feel that I did my part in helping this to be successful. I drove Mr. Bill Jarvis, the chairman of the election committee, from Stratford to Toronto about two weeks before the convention. We thought we would maybe get the election machinery working smoothly, but it did not seem to really help much. However, I do hope that the lesson learned was that it is really people who are the most important.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): We got the man we wanted anyway.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, I have several topics I would like to talk about because of the discontentment that seems to be around the province, and I would like to try to bring to your attention some of the comments made by Mr. Public, or in other words, some comment from the grass roots.

I want to discuss two or three points that are affecting most parts of Ontario but, of course, they are of special interest to my constituents at this particular time. One of these areas is transportation, another is regional government and the third is education.

It seems that there has been no co-ordinated proposal for an integrated transportation system in mid-Ontario. The Department of Highways put out a plan called the Lake Huron-Georgian Bay plan which only covered the recreational areas and did not tie in with the business and industrial areas to the east.

MODA, in its analysis volume of July 27, 1970, at page 153, observed, under the heading "Important Problem Issues," that "there is a need to improve highway connections to points within and beyond the region" and it particularly singled out for mention "highway improvements and additions from Stratford to Highway 401 and to the Kitchener-Waterloo area."

Many municipalities responded but on December 22, 1970, the city of Stratford responded to The Department of Treasury and Economics' phase one analysis with an important brief to the Midwestern Regional Development Council on the subject of transportation, and this is what they said:

The phase one report states that a good road system is vital to a region's economy. Generally the roads within the region are quite good, but accessibility to the 401, major metropolitan areas, and the Lake Huron shoreline, needs improvement. We are in complete agreement with the statement in the report that improved highway connections are necessary from Stratford to Highway 401, and to the Lake Huron recreational area. We also agree with the observation that Highway 8 has a great potential as a recreation corridor along which the communities could develop their distinctive attractions.

Better accessibility from Highway 401 to the Perth-Huron region is also necessary for faster and more economical transportation of goods. It is significant that truck transport rates from Toronto are based on road hours and reduction of time would result in a corresponding reduction of rates. It should also be mentioned that Stratford, as the largest centre in the Perth-Huron counties, with the most manufacturing and with a high rating for growth prospects, should have a better highway connection to the 401.

The report also mentions the additional transportation services on the Great Lakes and the demand that will be generated for fast and regular service. As Goderich is the only port in the region, it would seem that it is vital to have adequate highway facilities to this area.

The report also states that the "golden triangle" shows development toward the Toronto-centred and Niagara regions, while Stratford shows some orientation toward London. The highway pattern should take this into consideration.

It is, therefore, our recommendation that a highway built to present standards should be constructed from 401 in proximity to interchange 34, west to Stratford. Such a road should include a bypass to the south and west of the city to connect with Highway 7, thence to London. Similarly, the bypass could continue west and north of Stratford to connect with the existing Highway 8 to Goderich. This stretch of Highway 8 should be upgraded and improved where necessary to handle the increased traffic which is projected.

Such a highway pattern will be necessary for the economic development of the region, not overlooking the fact that Stratford will undoubtedly be playing a very important part in the Perth-Huron area.

The report designated Stratford as a high growth urban centre which undoubtedly will serve a large rural population. In fact, Stratford has the largest square-mile trading area of any urban centre in the total midwestern Ontario region.

Mr. Speaker, The Department of Highways has started a new road from New Hamburg to the Kitchener-Waterloo expressway, but it has not been tied right through to Stratford and beyond to Goderich, which is the only port in the area.

My leader has suggested that there is likely to be a great new development, involving docking facilities, somewhere between Port Elgin and Kincardine, in association with the Bruce nuclear complex. Even if this happens, I cannot see the former Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) allowing Goderich to die. I am surprised he is not more active in promoting the interest of Goderich than he appears to be from this side of the House, particularly since regional development came under his wing recently.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I cannot believe that. Did the hon. minister let Goderich die?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): I think the hon. member should leave Goderich to me. I will look after it.

Mr. Sargent: The minister sure has!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Edighoffer: There is clearly no basic overall plan, but rather we see activity in cut-up areas. The Department of Highways does not seem to consider overall planning at all. It just picks up with one section in one area and with another fragmented section in another area. Its main concern seems to be visible all over the province every season. I suggest that this approach is not the most efficient way to go about things in the taxpayers' interest.

Can it be that The Department of Highways has fallen under the spell of what the Aurora Banner recently defined as "McKeough's law"? Strictly speaking, McKeough's law can only be applied to the Earl of Chatham's approach to regional government. You see, McKeough's law, simply stated, says:

For any increased combination of people into a new and larger unit of government, it follows, as night follows day, that more people will pay more money for less in the way of services and satisfaction.

McKeough's law also states that the old buildings are rarely if ever good enough—

Mr. MacNaughton: Who wrote this nonsense?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Shakespeare!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He is totally misinformed.

Mr. Edighoffer: McKeough's law also states that the old salaries are insufficient to maintain the bureaucracy in the state to which it has become accustomed; and that broadloom is a symbol of status in the hierarchy.

McKeough's law states that the upper tier is always on top not only on organization charts but psychologically as well. McKeough's law states that all the key meetings involving elected officials will be held at the other end of the region. In fact, McKeough's law states that if it is worth doing, it is worth gathering dust at Queen's Park.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): It used to be known as MacNaughton's law.

Mr. Edighoffer: Although the former Minister of Municipal Affairs has now passed to his reward in the Frost Building, McKeough's law will be his permanent memorial, inscribed on many a wall across the province.

Mr. Speaker, I went a little astray there from transportation.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): The hon. member was right on target. He did not go astray at all. He was right on target.

Mr. Pitman: You are doing badly.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): You sure did.

Mr. Sargent: And the funny part of it is most of them agree with you.

Mr. Ruston: The back rows are pretty quiet.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member has got the publications mixed up.

Mr. Edighoffer: No, I have not.

Mr. Speaker, on this point I would like to quote The Palmerston Observer of April 1 in regard to transportation.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): We have this government under control.

An hon. member: Oh, oh. Shakespeare is quoting again.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I hope he did not write this himself.

Mr. Edighoffer: To continue:

A lengthy editorial in March 29 London Free Press dwelt on the passing of rail passenger services in Canada. Their concluding paragraph carried a thought we consider worth repeating:

Rail passenger service cannot be abandoned to history. It must be retained in the public interest—but subsidies are needed to keep it going. The subsidies should not be looked upon—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member is speaking in the wrong forum.

Mr. Edighoffer: No, I am not.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He should be speaking in Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: The minister should listen and he will learn something. This government did nothing about it and it is not doing anything about it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He is in the wrong House.

Mr. Edighoffer: Oh, the minister has changed.

Mr. Sargent: You will find out.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Put up with Ottawa.

Mr. Edighoffer: To continue:

The subsidies should not be looked upon as handouts to railroads, but as a cost society must bear to fill a social need.

In attempting to reinstate rail service through the development of Railiners, the the railway seemed at last to be on the right track. But the railway equipment designers seemed obsessed with size and weight. Those cars were much too heavy, too large and too expensive. The problem should have been turned over to an automotive or aircraft designer. Something like a medium-size highway bus mounted on rubber would have been ideal. Operated by one man, like a highway bus, and getting many miles to a gallon of cheap fuel, operating costs could have been cut to the minimum. Automotive design would have made available all the presently existing automotive services to them without the expense of their own specially trained staffs and equipment to change a spark plug or put in a new fuel filter. Such service would be available at every stopping place, if and when needed.

Like highway buses, too, they should have a generous and—

Mr. Jessiman: Is he talking about the GO train?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Talk to Mr. Pickersgill!

Mr. Gaunt: I would rather talk to the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I cannot do anything about it. Mr. Pickersgill can.

Mr. Pitman: He is too busy miswriting history

Mr. Edighoffer: To continue:

They should have a generous and readily accessible luggage space slung underneath. Package carrying would come into its own to be distributed from a taxi stand or bus depot on the main street of every hamlet served.

With such equipment we might still get to Toronto or London in comfort in less than four hours for less than five bucks and a package from either city for less than $6.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister of Transport should be listening to this! He would learn something. This would not cost him $3,000 to $4,000 to learn this.

Mr. Edighoffer: The last point, freight transportation—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is all it is worth!

Mr. Edighoffer: —is a sore one for Mr. Arthur Carr, the Observer's publisher. In a private communication he writes of a freight charge of $130 on 2.5 tons of newsprint from Toronto to Palmerston, and he adds:

Sometimes, when I think on these things, I wonder how small towns exist. Were we printers in Toronto that newsprint would be delivered to our door free of charge on wholesalers' trucks, which we in the outlying districts are paying to maintain. In Palmerston, we wonder just how sincere any talk about limiting Metro's growth, and encouraging growth in smaller centres instead, can be.

If I might, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to stay with transportation a moment longer, in order to read into the record the further proposal from the city of Stratford. If the government's Air Ontario concept is more than just so many words, then this ought to be noted:

While on the subject of transportation we would like to briefly comment on airport development. The larger airports of Toronto and London are fairly accessible to the region for the services they provide. However, the increasing popularity of business aircraft indicates that better airport facilities are needed in smaller urban centres throughout the region. In particular, all-weather landing strips should be developed to accommodate private aircraft and, to a lesser degree, charter and commercial feeder lines. Industrialists, in particular, object to any appreciable driving distance from their plant locations. In fact, the proximity of an all-weather landing strip could, in many cases and increasingly so, have a bearing on the location of a new manufacturing facility.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn here to the area of assessment. Again, I would like to quote Mr. Arthur Carr from The Palmerston Observer when he says:

We used the 'Books' as a guide, measured all buildings and our assessment was generally considered well in line with county practices. It cost us half a mill. The county took this over, and costs multiplied five times. We are told that equalized assessment over the county will stop southern towns and townships who had, it is alleged, low assessments for years and were thereby getting a free ride at the expense of more rationally assessed municipalities.

But the question is, did the adjustment of assessment compensate for the increase in costs through the establishment of a county assessment office?

Then, too, we have the very definite resentment of folks here, who saw strange young men wallowing in the snow, as they measured every structure in town. Just why the buildings had to be measured in February and March seemed a little obscure. The snow hampered the actions of the men, and we were reasonably sure the buildings would not vary in size between now and next May.

The regional assessment office for Perth and Huron, of course, was set up in Goderich, so perhaps the former Treasurer was looking after his own after all. But what a way to do it—right at the far end of the region. Any unbiased observer will tell you that for efficiency and economy and minimum travelling, this office ought to have been set up in the centre of the region, at Seaforth or Mitchell, rather than in a town with only the lake on one side of its catchment area. The travelling expenses of the staff are really tremendous.

It also takes much longer now that a community has to submit a form for taxation of property changes to this faraway office. The municipality may actually lose substantially in revenue because of the time lag involved in processing this form. Because of the amount of the assessment in the Stratford area, if the Goderich office is to stay where it is, the present Stratford sub-office should be substantially upgraded and remain open.

There is something very odd about the current review of assessment, which falls short of published reassessment at market value. Could it be that the government is compiling its dossiers by holding back the bad news until after the election? That could be typical: to give out goodies on April 26, to have the dissolution and writ on April 29 and then come back and give the bad news to the people who had voted for the government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, on the question of regional government and local responsibility, my newspaperman Carr, who is also a member of council, has these pungent observations to make—I feel they should go into the record—and I quote:

It is my belief that democracy as we try to operate it, must first have an educated public, then it must have communication as intimate as possible between the people and their representatives. In our weekly newspaper we have tried to keep the communication lines between town councillors and the public wide open, and have met with some success.

The unfailing high percentage of voters who respond at each municipal election seems proof of our success. Last year, with just councillors on the ballot, as the mayor and reeve were acclaimed, we had a 66.4 per cent poll. In 1968, with a more complete slate, voting reached 78.8 per cent.

This objective of ours, to keep open communication lines between councillors and electors, will become impossible if the erosion of town council authority continues. It will be impossible to cover a meeting in Guelph, even as we cannot cover your sessions in Toronto. More and more our government will become distant, vague and obscure. This, to me, is a rather terrifying prospect, and to say that I fear regional government is putting it mildly. I am terrified.

To date I have not voted for any move to take any department, or phase of government from the town or township councillors. Yet more and more it is being taken.

Though I do not, for economic reasons, leave my place of business for a day, I did take time to attend a meeting in Guelph. The Treasurer of Ontario and Minister of Economics, Mr. W. D. McKeough, was the "main course" at the banquet of information. Someone asked if a municipality could remain an entity unto itself, separate, apart and reserved from a regional government. The speaker said, in effect. "Yes, of course. You have that choice if you can afford to do it. You must remember that all grants will be regionally based."

So you people at Queen's Park take five cents off every dollar my little printing plant produces in commercial printing. You also take my gasoline taxes and the other multiple ways you have of getting my money. You give it back in grants that you use as a club to force me to do something that I believe is detrimental to the administration of my town. I do not really like that!

I have, I think, made it quite clear that from what I have seen of regional government, it is not for us. It is too inefficient, too impersonal, too remote and too subject to stupid administration points that, formed by some career civil servant, are absolutely inflexible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the subject of education. During a recent survey I conducted in my constituency I asked the following question, along with others. The question was simply: "Are you satisfied with county boards of education?" Of the first 900 or more replies that I have tabulated to date, 675 said no and 251 said yes.

Perhaps the following anecdote, again from Mr. Carr in his letter, will give some way of explaining the people's disillusionment with the county board system of education.

During the last few years I have watched small town councils, through their school boards, lose all semblance of control of educational costs. Our school administration is now a remote thing. Schools do not appear any more efficient, and we have experienced a cost increase of 14 mills. Things at our schools bother us.

At Norwell High School, administered from 40 miles away at Guelph, the house-keeping staff kept the grounds trim with a power lawn mower, bought by students through the sale of magazines. Today, the Wellington board sends up a crew of men to pick up the litter from the grassed areas. Then a second crew comes along and cuts the grass.

There are several other points that were mentioned here which also leave one to believe that there is still much inefficiency in this setup. But, Mr. Speaker, the troubles and tribulations do not end at any one end of the educational system. The government, for example, in my area has been promising a new Stratford teachers' college for the last 10 years. It has been an issue in the last two elections; just one more election promise that has been promptly forgotten as soon as this government has been returned to power. This project has been in the Public Works capital works programme at the "approval for preliminary planning" stage for many years, just sitting there. Now that the minister has announced that new elementary school teachers must have a degree, no doubt the facility will be moved to a nearby university. The life of the Stratford Teachers' College as a political football could be drawing to a close.

The furor last week over who shall investigate the best use of provincial funds for education—the committee of the Legislature on human resources or Dr. McCarthy or both—has still left the common ground that costs and priorities will come under extensive and thorough review. Nowhere is this more important than in those marginal areas where the high school, the community college and the Manpower retraining programme overlap. It is possible to get the worst of all three worlds by letting things drift.

Now there has been a proposal that Conestoga College of Applied Arts and Technology, whose main modern campus is at Highway 401 and Doon-Blair Road, just beyond the Kitchener-Waterloo cutoff, should move into Stratford with an academic, commercial and technical series of programmes. Quite importantly, in view of the role of the festival in Stratford's life, a school of drama ought to be tied in with any such expansion.

When and if the teachers' college goes from its present old building, this edifice, which is right next to the Festival Theatre, could be used to house the drama school which Conestoga might then operate. I reiterate the views I have already expressed in last year's budget debate regarding the desirability of such a school, and I commend those remarks to those whose responsibility it will be to look into these matters.

The council of regents of the applied arts and technology branch have, I understand, given their blessing to a new community college building in Stratford. I gather that this project is now at the stage where it is awaiting the approval of, either the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) (who the Premier said was still responsible for CAAT estimates this session), or the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White), who is showing interest in community colleges, even though he is not yet apparently entrusted with the financial responsibilities that we understood went with this portfolio in this regard.

At the moment, the facilities that have to be upgraded are the technical ones and these are the activities that require the new building. The drama school would do well in the old teachers' college when that is vacated by the present occupants.

There is a very real danger, Mr. Speaker, especially in connection with the adult training courses, paid for by the federal government and operated on contract by a college of applied arts and technology in the premises of a third party, which is the high school of a county school board. I am concerned that the technical equipment is, or could be, old and that, under the circumstances, effective safety-on-the-job training of the kind endorsed on television by the Ontario Safety League, and by the Workmen's Compensation Board is just not possible. Bad habits engineered in the training phase are liable to stick, Mr. Speaker. It would be folly not to have things right in the early stages of learning new skills.

Retraining in Stratford and area with its diversity of industry is a matter of high priority, Mr. Speaker, or it certainly should be. The board of Conestoga College is very interested in expanding in a more meaningful way and tailoring its activities to the Stratford situation which I have just outlined.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have, I believe, a most serious complaint about the way in which The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act is being administered to the disadvantage of those who can least afford to bear the loss in my area; and the manner in which the department is discouraging tenants to pursue their rights, under the law we passed in this 28th Parliament. We were all here and we all recall quite clearly what was intended. The reality, unfortunately, is only a travesty of the Legislature's intent. In one instance, a Mr. Geldhof received a form letter from a senior officer of the municipal subsidies branch, which says, in part:

Dear Mr. Geldhof:

. . . An officer of this department has been in touch with your landlord re your complaint that you have not received payment of your municipal tax reduction allowance. . . . The landlord has been requested to make payment to you or submit an explanation as to why such payment should not be made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, listen to this. It is, I believe, in the form letter and it is just disgraceful in its tone:

If you have not received the tax rebate and wish to pursue the matter through court action, it will be necessary for you to go to London—the name of the city was typed in:

—and swear out an information against the landlord before a local justice of the peace. You would then have to be prepared to appear in court—and this is in London again:

—on the date set for trial.

Now listen to this planned discouragement on the part of The Department of Municipal Affairs:

You should appreciate that the case may be remanded to a later date and that you would have to appear a second time.

Incredibly, Mr. Speaker, this is all in the form letter.

In view of your present location, you might not find it advantageous to undertake the above time-consuming steps.

Now that seems to me rather loaded wording. Here, as I continue, is the cinch which loads the department in favour of the landlord:

Accordingly, and before further action is taken, would you please confirm that you will be prepared to devote the time necessary for court action.

I commend this form letter to Mr. Justice McRuer, Mr. Speaker, as being germane to his continuing inquiry. I hope that he will have something refreshing to say about this particular form letter, which I think shows up bureaucracy at its worst, and demonstrates just why the price of freedom must be eternal vigilance on the part of each one of us at all times.

I also have a similar letter where the landlord has refused to pay, claiming that the tenant is in arrears, and one where an older lady is afraid to force her just claim for the rebate because of the threat to put up her rent by the amount of the rebate. When this happens, as happened to a Mr. Donald Kestle, whose landlord increased his rent by the amount of the tax reduction, the department is equally "helpful."

Incidentally, this one comes under the New Wave, and it is now a Bales and not a McKeough department when the following occurs. This is a letter from Mr. Kestle to the department on March 6:

My purpose in writing is to inquire if there is any way a tenant can protect himself against practices of this kind.

And the reply from a subsidies officer, April 5:

There is no justification for a landlord to increase rents because of the residential property tax rebate programme, but at the present time there is no legislation to control rent increases imposed by some landlords. Therefore, in order to be assured of protection against unreasonable rent increases, a tenant should arrange for a binding contract in the form of a lease.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the worst cases are those in which the tenant finds it impossible to obtain a lease, but is forced by the shortage of accommodation to take what housing he can get, always on the landlord's terms.

I echo the concern of my colleague, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), that things in the landlord-tenant field, given the attitude of this department, are not much better than they ever were in Ontario. The feudal system is still with us, and encouraged by this new government, as by its predecessors, the landlord is still very much top dog.

My final point, Mr. Speaker, concerns the letter sent to me by the corporation of the town of Palmerston on April 13, with a copy to the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) and a copy to the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Wells), which is self-explanatory and which I will now read into the record.

The council of the corporation of the town of Palmerston was approached at its last meeting by a representative of the Victoria Order of Nurses to assist them in reducing their 1970 deficit of $19,000 for the counties of Wellington, Dufferin and Perth.

Council is aware that the provincial government, attempting to reduce the soaring costs of hospital care, has endorsed the home care programme, but now seems unwilling to assume the lesser costs by accepting responsibility for the deficit of the VON.

Inasmuch as the saving effected by using the VON care in lieu of daily hospital rates is substantial, it would seem that the VON deficit should be cheerfully accepted by the provincial government and not be assessed against the VON or municipalities.

The provincial government pays 80 per cent subsidy for VON services provided to the marginal income group, but perhaps this government could explain why it does not assume 100 per cent of the costs to the marginal and all other income groups who return home early and reduce in-hospital daily charges.

Your comments on this matter would be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
R. J. Saunders
Clerk-Treasurer.

Just to show how vital this service is, I have here a plea which I received from a lady in my area and I know that she is typical and who would benefit from such a service.

I would like to bring to your attention a community service that is organized in 15 Ontario counties but not yet in Perth county.

This is a home care programme under OHSC. It is set up under Victoria Order of Nurses in 13 counties, with Toronto and Kingston under other agencies. The enclosed pamphlet is from the North Waterloo branch of the Victoria Order of Nurses. Wellington county, Middlesex county—these counties also are organized.

The VON in Perth are most ready to work toward this setup for our county—they see the very great need there is for such a service.

I am personally concerned for I am a polio quadriplegic and require the services of the VON daily.

It is an injustice, is it not, that a part of Ontario benefits from such a programme, and not Perth county?

I know your awareness of the need for this service in Perth would be greatly widened were you to have a talk with Mrs. Jean Stewart, head of the VON in Perth.

Yours sincerely,
Miss Dorothy Clark.

Mr. Speaker, The Globe and Mail saw the relevance of this in its editorial on Wednesday, March 10, of this year, which I will quote because it is very brief.

Mr. Lawrence could put on a real push to develop Ontario's home care programme right across the province. They are excellent. They are inexpensive to operate and they please a lot of patients. But the municipalities have not been pressed to make them available and most people do not even know that they exist.

But then, this seems par for the course because even Walter Blackburn of the London Free Press on April 1 observed in his editorial: "In this government's maiden Throne speech, Premier William Davis remained faithful to the pattern." How true.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to end with this observation from the editorial page of the Stratford Beacon-Herald of Tuesday, February 16, 1971:

One delegate (to the Progressive Conservative leadership conference), John Stratton, was so concerned with the reaction in Perth to Davis as Premier that he said, "The feeling is that there will be no use running a candidate if he wins. We may as well stay home."

On this hopefully prophetic note, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks and advise that I will fully support the amendment made by my leader. I am sure that many members of the House will do so also in order that the people of Ontario may be better served.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, you will be relieved to hear this evening, in contrast to my previous efforts in the Throne debate, I am going to be relatively brief, the reason being that to my dismay, my favourite targets, the former Minister of Health (Mr. Wells) and the Attorney General Mr. Wishart, have been moved to less onerous posts. The new gentlemen, whose qualities and abilities may or may not exceed that of their predecessors, have not yet given enough opportunity and enough targets really to provide much material for attacks. We will have to leave this for another occasion.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): However—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Watch the "however."

Mr. Shulman: However, fortunately the Attorney General has given me sufficient material that I think perhaps—I had not intended to but since he is here—I will commence with him.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): His hair is getting thinner all the time.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He is still smiling.

Mr. Shulman: The new Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, started off with some approval, I must say, from this side.

Mr. Singer: The enforcer.

Mr. Shulman: He suffers, as I do, from speaking over-freely at times, perhaps, and without thinking things through.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Oh, heaven forbid!

Mr. Gaunt: They are both in the same boat.

Mr. Singer: They shoot from the mouth.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Shulman: I have had some pleasure in his initial reactions to most things that have come up in the brief time since he has been appointed, but there is one matter that has come up which upsets me mightily. I wish to go into that matter in some detail, because the Attorney General's attitude in this particular field I think is so very wrong, not because the matter itself is that important, although it is important to all the people involved, but because the attitude of an Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, should be always not only to see that justice is done but—and it is an old phrase—to make sure that everyone involved gives the appearance of justice being done. I find it very upsetting that the Attorney General, according to this matter and according to a letter which I have from him in front of me, does not agree with that principle.

The case, Mr. Speaker, involves the tragic death of a young boy—a six-year-old boy by the name of John Glen Arnold. This took place last September, and the family wrote to me because they were extremely upset at what had happened. They live in North Bay, and they wrote me on February 19, 1971, after an inquest had taken place into this boy's death. They were extremely upset about the details of it and they asked me to intervene with the Attorney General, which I did. The circumstances are—perhaps I should read the letter or the important part of it because it is quite succinct and explains it quite simply:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

My son, John Glen, died September 5, 1970, of lindane poisoning. He was six years old on September 4—the day before. I am sending you a copy of the paper's report on the inquest, but with it I will give you a few facts that did not come out in the inquest or the paper.

The night we came home from our camping trip, Friday, around 7 p.m., September 4, the house had been sprayed for bedbugs the day before. When we opened the door, the first thing the kids said was "Oh, it stinks in here."

It did not bother my husband or I—we had such bad colds we could not smell anything. We opened all the doors and windows and turned on the furnace fan to clear the air. The basement and the downstairs seemed to be fine. The upstairs was a mess. It was all covered in oil base. I took all the bedding and sent it to the laundromat. I put the pillows in the dryer for about 20 minutes each. I washed the walls and the floors and the closet in the boys' room and put everything back. The dressers were all oily so I cleaned them also.

I said I would do the rest the next day. I made the beds with the clean bedding and put the boys to bed about 10:30 p.m. and the girls slept in the tent trailer. My husband and I went to bed about midnight.

I will not go on to read this letter in detail, but, to sum it up, they all became ill that night as a result of the lindane which was left from the spraying the day before, and the boy died. It is a particularly tragic death, an unnecessary death, an accidental death, I am blaming no one.

An inquest was held, and I wrote to the Attorney General because the conduct of that inquest to my mind left a great deal to be desired. I will read the letter to the Attorney General. It is very brief; it was sent originally to the then Attorney General. I wrote to him on February 23, 1971.

Dear Mr. Wishart:

On September 5, 1970, six-year-old John Arnold died in North Bay as a result of breathing a chemical used to spray a house two days before for bedbugs.

The inquest was conducted by Coroner Dr. H. M. Wallace, and the family are extremely upset because the inquest certainly did not give the appearance of a fair inquiry. The firm that had sprayed the chemical—P.C.O. Services Limited—hired as the lawyer to represent them at the inquest the coroner's brother, George Wallace.

I hope you will advise me that a new inquest is to be held.

Yours sincerely,
Morton Shulman.

I ultimately got a letter back from the new Attorney General on March 19, and I am going to read the letter in full—it is brief—because to my mind it sums up a great deal of what is wrong with the coroner's office and, I am sorry to say, what is wrong with the new Attorney General:

Dear Morty:

A report has now been forwarded to me from the supervising coroner's office.

Mr. Gaunt: Pals, eh?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Was that a personal letter?

Mr. Shulman: It was not marked "personal."

Mr. Gaunt: I can tell the two fellows are buddies.

Mr. Shulman: To continue:

A report has now been forwarded to me from the supervising coroner's office as a result of your letter of February 23 to my predecessor, the hon. Arthur A. Wishart, QC, relating to the inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of John Glen Arnold, which was held at North Bay on February 11, 1971.

I am informed that the coroner, Dr. Harold M. Wallace, presided at the inquest and his brother, Mr. George E. Wallace, Q.C. acted for an interested party, namely, P.C.O. Services Limited. It is of importance to note that the family of the diseased lad was represented by counsel, Mr. D. C. Doney, and at this time the coroner's office or this office has not been made aware of any complaint about the inquest from the counsel who acted on behalf of the family.

The circumstances surrounding this death are unusual in that the premises where the lad slept the night before his death had been fumigated that day, and this, presumably, was a factor in deciding that an inquest was necessary.

While there appears to be some evidence that he was subjected to lindane spray, an extermination agent, the reports from the independent provincial laboratory of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food do not indicate that the lad suffered a lethal exposure to the spray.

I agree it is also of importance to note that Mr. John A. Inch, Crown Attorney for the district of Nipissing, acted as Crown counsel for the coroner at this inquest. It would appear that all the relevant evidence was made available to the coroner's jury, and the fact that one of the counsel was related to the coroner would not appear to have in any way limited the evidence which provided the jury for consideration in this case.

In view of the above facts, and unless you or anyone else has further evidence, facts or material bearing on the matter, I am of the opinion I should not direct that a new inquest be held in this matter.

Yours very truly,
Allan F. Lawrence
Minister of Justice and Attorney General

I read the letter in full, first of all because of some of the nonsensical things in it. The statement that the reports from the independent provincial laboratory of The Department of Agriculture and Food do not indicate that the lad suffered a lethal exposure would be ludicrous, if it was not so tragic. Of course, the lad suffered a lethal exposure—he died—and, of course, that was also found at the inquest, and supported by the expert evidence at the inquest.

The suggestion that there should be no action taken because the lawyer had not brought the complaint—the lawyer from this small town—to my mind bears no importance whatsoever, and the fact that all the relevant evidence was made available to the coroner's jury may or may not be true. I do not think it is relevant in the slightest. The fact remains that an inquest was held into a tragic death and the appearance was given, to the family, that something funny was going on because the coroner was present and his brother was there defending the firm that sprayed the lindane.

When I was coroner of this city, one of the major problems we had was just this type of thing. I had hoped with a new wind—

Hon. E. A. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): Has the member a brother in the law?

Mr. Shulman: I have no brother. If my brother were in the law, I would have enough sense if I were a judge not to let him act in front of me, and if your brother were a judge, I hope you would have enough sense not to act in front of him.

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: I was just wondering why the member had the same problem.

Mr. Shulman: Similar problems! The member for Forest Hill, who I think is a member of the law, must know that no judge, surely, in this country would allow his brother to appear before him as a lawyer for one of the parties?

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: I am not a member of the law.

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, I apologize. Then I understand the member's ignorance of the matter.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Surely the appearance of justice must be given here also? Surely the Attorney General, a new Attorney General coming in without any debt to anyone involved in this matter, should have enough consideration for the families of the people involved here to order a new inquest, even if nothing else is discovered; even if the very same results are brought out. Because the appearance of justice is just as important in our coroners' courts as it is in our magistrates' courts or our supreme courts.

I am going to leave it at that. I am not going to belabour it any further. I think the Attorney General knows he was wrong. I hope he will reconsider this matter. I hope it is not so terribly important in this case—but I hope he will lay rules down to the coroners' offices. They still have not got through their skulls what should be done in that coroner's office or how it should be done—that the appearance of justice must be given; that in every inquest affected persons should be given the right to have a lawyer. They still do not have that right; it is a privilege which may or may not be given. I hope we will see new legislation in that way, and that this type of small-town abuse which we see in the coroners' offices will not be allowed to continue in the future. I will leave it to the Attorney General. I am sure he will make some comment on it at an appropriate time.

The matter that I had intended to begin with today is a more political matter. It involves automobile insurance in this province and, in effect, I think this case which I am about to tell you about will sum up the reason that my party, for better or for worse, will probably form the next government here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: One of the major issues which is going to take place in the coming election campaign is going to be that of automobile insurance. The NDP have made their position very clear; they are going to bring this under government auspices. The insurance agents and the insurance agencies have raised a fairly substantial sum of money to get involved in the next provincial campaign to support the party of your choice, be it Liberals or Conservatives, and make sure the NDP does not form the government.

I, somehow, as a result of my recent correspondence with these gentlemen, think that they are determined to produce their own destruction. If any issue is going to result in the NDP being elected, this will probably be it. I am about to tell you of a most incredible case which has just taken place, in the last few days, which involves the insurance companies and which shows the reason we cannot allow them to continue to cause the human havoc which they are causing in this province. This type of thing could not possibly occur under the most ineptly run government plan.

The government plan which has been brought in in other provinces, in other areas, in other jurisdictions, and which we hope to bring in here, is one whereby a fee is paid along with the licence and you are covered automatically. Most or a part of the cost of insurance will come out of the general revenues.

I received a letter just last month, on March 12, which was written by a friend of the person involved because this man does not speak or write English well. This is the type of person who gets caught in the meat grinder of bureaucracy and the meat grinder of government, and the meat grinder of the insurance companies.

This is a man who was fully covered by insurance and I quote from the letter. Briefly the facts are as follows:

On December 1, 1969, Mr. Mateo Perez of 26 MacGregor Avenue, Toronto, was driving along Eglinton Avenue proceeding westward. At the Oakwood intersection he made a left turn southward on the advanced green and in so doing bumped a pedestrian.

A charge was laid against him. He was taken to court. He was found not guilty. He was covered by insurance, he thought, and he gave it no further thought until, in February, 1971, he received a formal notice from The Department of Transport which informed him that a judgement had been given against him in the amount of $2,263.10, and that until paid, or arrangements made, his driving licence was under suspension.

He has no more chance of paying that kind of money than we have of flying. There is just no possibility. So, in effect, it means that for the rest of his life he is not going to be able to drive. How does this happen when he is covered by insurance?

This is the story. His insurance, which has been paid for, ran from May 27, 1969, to December 1, 1969. The accident took place on December 1, 1969. However, the fine print in the policy—a copy of which I have here—states that the coverage extends from 12:01 a.m. to 12:01 a.m. on the relevant dates. Thus on the afternoon of the accident technically the policy had expired.

Mr. Perez had received his premium notice a few days before from the insurance company—and more about that in a few moments, because they said they should not have sent it out; they sent it out by mistake anyway—and on December 5, Mr. Perez gave the agent a cheque payable to the insurance company to cover the premium. The company deposited it in their bank, cashed the cheque, and then some time after that, some days after that, they issued a new cheque refunding the amount and cancelling the insurance, using as the reason late payment of premium. They dated it back to December 1 at 12:01 a.m.

After considering the merits of this case—the company involved is Continental Casualty—it appeared to me that if ever there was a type of case that they did not want made public in this election year, this was it, because it showed exactly what is wrong with insurance as it is now run, where this type of non-coverage can take effect within a few minutes or a few hours and a person can have financial ruin. Of course, if you were covered through a government scheme there would not be any running out. You would be automatically covered and everyone would get his expenses paid.

Here we have two tragedies—the tragedy of the Perez family and also that of the other family who were unable to collect for their medical expenses.

I wrote to the president of the Continental Casualty Company, of 150 Bloor Street East, on March 24 as follows:

Dear Sir:

Re Mateo Perez.

This gentleman had an accident on December 1, 1969, which was the day that his Continental policy expired. He was under the impression the policy renewed automatically and on December 5 he sent Continental a cheque which was cashed, but subsequent to this date, you cancelled his policy retroactively to December 1.

The amount involved for the insurance company is not crucial, but for the individual involved it is tragic, and I was hopeful that if I brought this matter to your attention you would see fit to assist Mr. Perez.

Certainly in this day when the very survival of the auto insurance companies is at stake this type of case cannot assist you.

Yours sincerely,
Morton Shulman.

I received a very courteous, very lovely letter back from the president of Continental Casualty Company, and I am going to read some excerpts from this. He says no, of course, they are not going to help Mr. Perez. They are very sorry about it all, mind you; it is really a shame this type of thing has to happen in this day and age, but they are not going to pay out the $2,200. Let me read you the letter.

Dear Dr. Shulman:
Re Mateo Perez.

Mr. Perez' situation is indeed unfortunate and I am sorry that it has apparently caused him considerable financial difficulty. You might be interested in some of the background of this policyholder. We initially insured Mr. Perez effective May 27, 1969, and his policy expired as of 12:01 a.m. December 1, 1969, for two reasons.

1. He failed to pay the renewal premium prior to the expiration date and in fact payment was only tendered some days after his accident.

2. We were no longer doing business with the agent who represented him. Our contract with Mr. Perez's agent was cancelled on September 22, 1969, and at that time we advised the agent of all his insured who could no longer be renewed because of the cancellation of the agency contract.

As you know, we are not allowed to continue to service business after a cancellation of an agency contract since the agent owns the business and the company does not.

May I intersperse here in the letter, this of course is one of the evils of the present system. I continue the quotation:

Additionally the agent would no longer be licensed to act for the Continental Casualty Company. It then became the agent's responsibility to continue to secure insurance for Mr. Perez and his other clients with another company. As occasionally happens, because of our IBM billing system, sometimes all the records are not corrected on time and, consequently, a renewal billing was sent to Mr. Perez and three other clients of the agent under our normal billing procedure 30 days prior to the renewal date.

When we found that these billings had been sent out we immediately called the agent and advised him of this.

Again, let me intersperse. You note they did not call the client and tell him; they sent the bill to the client and when they decided there was a mistake made, they phoned the agent. I continue the quotation:

An agent's normal procedure is simply to replace the coverage in another company. In this particular case we have not discussed this question of the agent involved since I do not believe it is our prerogative to do so.

I will leave out some more of the detail, and I go on:

I appreciate your interest in this case, and I certainly share your sympathy for Mr. Perez's situation. However, I think we have been extremely fair with Mr. Perez since he was given every opportunity to secure other coverage and, as you can see from the circumstances outlined above, our obligation was to be certain that we did not inadvertently renew Mr. Perez policy because it was his agent's right to handle the renewal as he saw fit in Mr. Perez's best interests.

It would, in fact, have been quite improper for us to have renewed Mr. Perez's policy. I should point out that all of our actions on Mr. Perez's policy were taken in accordance with our standard office procedures, and well prior to the time of his accident.

I know that this explanation does not provide Mr. Perez with the relief which he is seeking, but I do not believe that under these circumstances we can be of any assistance to him. I hope, Dr. Shulman, that I have given you all of the information you desired, but if not, I would of course, be pleased to discuss this with you further.

Sincerely,
Richard Gilmore,
Continental Casualty Company.

Let us just look at the case. They sent out a renewal-of-premium notice to Perez. They decided that they did not like that, so they phoned the agent and said they should not have done it. They received Perez's cheque, but they did not return the cheque—they cashed the cheque. I have the cheque right here. Then they decided, "Oh, my God, we have an accident here, it is going to cost us $2,200. Well, better Perez should pay it than us." And they threw the whole thing back in his face, which means he can never drive.

This is the abuse that is going to do in the insurance companies, and this is the abuse that is going to do in the people opposite in the next election.

The president of this company got a chance to get out of this mess by paying this relatively small amount of money. I did not get up and say, "What a stupid bunch of people you are"; I said, "For goodness sake, straighten it out." And what is his reply? "Go jump in the lake. Too bad about Perez." Do you think the public, when they hear about this case—and I intend to mention it on every platform I get on—are going to pay any attention to the hundreds of thousands of dollars that the insurance companies are pouring into this campaign against us?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Not likely.

Mr. Shulman: Do you think they are going to pay any attention to any party that tries to defend this type of thing, or that tries to defend a system under which this can happen? Let us suppose that Continental Casualty is not at fault. Let us suppose that technically they are right. Are you going to defend this system where Perez suffers? Is this not a spot where government should step in? Where is your superintendent of insurance? Well, I tell you, you have picked the wrong issue for this campaign, and if your insurance companies go ahead with their great campaign on television and radio, and if you are foolish enough to stand with it you are going to go down to a resounding defeat and we are going to get elected for all the wrong reasons.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Right, right.

Mr. Shulman: I leave a lot for you gentlemen to ponder over. The minister responsible is in the House. I am glad the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs is here; in a recent case where the insurance companies refused to come across I understand he did a little arm twisting for one of my constituents, Miss Sylvia Sapiano, for which I am grateful. They did not pay her what was owing to her, but at least they gave her something. She was owed $4,000. The Occidental Life very magnanimously gave her $500, and as Ron Haggart said, "Well, there is one election campaign issue down the drain." He is right.

I cannot talk about that one any more, but this is a good one, and unless the minister comes across very quickly and puts a little pressure on some of these insurance companies and knocks a little sense into their heads, they are going to destroy themselves, and they are going to destroy him and the government at the same time.

I would like to turn to The Department of Health and I want to start by complimenting the minister—this is the first time, I think.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): That is a change in a hurry.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is a change in a hurry. He is a good minister and he deserves a compliment. We have been plagued here for many years by incompetent Ministers of Health, ministers who either were in above their heads or who did not care. The last man appointed committees. Any problem that came up he said, "I will appoint a committee." He appointed 843 committees, and none of them ever did anything.

Mr. Gaunt: Eight hundred and forty-three problems.

Mr. Shulman: Eight hundred and forty-three problems, but they were all solved with a committee being appointed. Well, two good things have happened in this province in recent months. The present incumbent was appointed the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), and the member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) was appointed to the cabinet, and I disagree with some of the other comments that have been made on that. I do not think this will silence this particular member.

I have been pleasantly surprised, Mr. Speaker, in these recent weeks by the reaction of the Minister of Health to the various issues that have come up, and I think perhaps a new day is dawning in that department. We have an open mind there at last, a willingness to have open institutions and finally, if he can persuade the Treasury Board to give him the money that is needed for the institutions that have been so neglected over the years, perhaps we can have some good things begin to happen within those institutions.

There are three matters which I want to bring up in The Department of Health, and none of them do I bring up to criticize the minister. They are public health problems which I bring up to bring to his attention, and to that of the member for Quinte. I hope that perhaps they will do something with these particular problems.

The first one is a problem that has not been brought to the attention of the public in any meaningful way, and it could be a most serious public health problem. It was brought to me by Mr. Nick Douloff, who is in charge of Canadian Consulting Engineer, which is the outlet in this country for engineers in various fields. He was very upset about a situation that is taking place right now in Ontario which he feels could be a very serious public health problem. He has written a lengthy article on it which I am not going to read, but I just want to point out the relevant parts of it and I want to give him full credit for what has been done.

Three or four years ago, and dating back some 10 years ago when municipalities began to add fluoride to the water supplies, there was great controversy. Ballots were taken, much was said on both sides—and I do not want to go into that controversy at all tonight—but while the fluoridation debate raged, literally raged in this and other jurisdictions, other chemicals were being quietly introduced into water supplies until the practice became widespread with no publicity whatsoever.

Unlike fluorides which are put in to protect the health of human beings, these additives are used to protect the pipes through which the water runs. Unlike fluorides which are put into the water by government, these chemicals are put in by private individuals or organizations and municipalities, with no debate, no vote and no fanfare. Amazingly enough, the practice flourished under an almost total blanket of silence while fluoride proposals aroused agonized debate ranging from constitutional law to social ethics.

So quietly did this revolution take place that many leading engineers and regulatory bodies were completely unaware of the practice. In fact, some engineers doubted at first that these chemicals, these corrosion inhibitors, were in fact introduced into the drinking water system.

It took a lot of research to find out exactly what was being done and how widespread it is. The reason for this is quite simple. When you are building new apartments, you can put piping in in two ways. You can put in copper pipe or you can put in galvanized iron pipe. Copper pipe has an initially higher cost, and when you put it in, it costs more to build the building. If you put in iron pipes, it is much cheaper. There is only one thing wrong with them—they corrode. So in order to save this initial cost of putting in copper piping, most of the apartment houses under construction at the present time are putting in galvanized iron pipe, and so that it will not corrode, they then introduce into the water—constantly from then on, going into those apartment houses—certain chemicals to prevent the corrosion of the pipes.

These chemicals consist of a number of things but their main component is polyphosphates. They are injected directly into the water supply after the water has entered the building. The chemicals are placed in an automatic metering dispenser which is attached to the cold water pipe in front of the system. Most provinces, including Ontario, limit by law the feed rate of polyphosphate corrosion inhibitors to 10 parts per million. But the feed rate, although limited by law to 10 parts per million, in actual practice, is not held there and in the various machines that were examined to see how fast these chemicals were going in, the rate was anywhere from one to 30 parts per million, depending on which company had installed it.

The interesting thing is that copper piping, which costs more to start with, in the long run is cheaper because you do not have to buy these chemicals to be put constantly into the water; such piping does not corrode, copper piping is forever. But if the builders of these buildings really cared about the long-term economics, let alone human health, they would save money.

But they do not; they are interested in a quick buck—build the building; get your buck out and run; to heck with the health of the people involved.

The strange thing is that corrosion inhibitors are banned in this province, but for some reason this government has never exercised the ban. Corrosion inhibitors are under regulation 471 of The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act, part 2, section 24, subsection 1, which states: "No connection shall be made in a potable water system whereby any foreign matter or non-potable water may enter the potable water system."

There is the law. It is against the law. But the builders in this province do not feel that they have to follow the law because the Ontario Water Resources Commission has said, "We are not going to enforce it," and in fact they do not enforce it. There is only one area in this whole province where you cannot put in corrosion inhibitors and that is in North York. They passed a municipal bylaw prohibiting the use of corrosion inhibitors. But in the rest of the province—anywhere—they may be in use!

There is one province, Saskatchewan, which has specifically banned their use in drinking water supply. They exercise and control their law and insist that the law be followed. Here in Ontario there is no control.

I have here the research that was done by the Canadian Consulting Engineer and I wish to quote the material on the health hazards:

There are serious health hazards inherent, such as possible synergistic effects. When two or more materials combine to produce a third substance or aggravate the effect of either compound, the permutations become endless. It is now known that two non-toxic substances can be changed into a toxic one during the conventional drinking water treatment process.

With the ever-increasing amounts of toxic materials, pesticides and other materials now being found in our raw water sources, the prospect of toxic conversion is very real and should be on everyone's mind.

Outside of the health aspect, of course, the fact of pouring all these polyphosphates into our water is incredible from the effect that it has on our water system, because polyphosphates of course are responsible for the eutrophication or the death of our bodies of water, our lakes and our rivers.

There is an immeasurable amount of polyphosphates being poured out, neutralizing all of the great work the Ontario Water Resources Commission has tried to do. They sue Dow to prevent this type of pollution or other types of pollution, and yet they allow this to go on to a far greater extent.

There is public health problem No. 1, that, for some reason the government has not been aware of, or if it has been aware of it it has taken no action on it. I throw this over to the minister responsible, and it happens to be the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) because I guess he is responsible for his laws not being carried out. If he does not do something about this, he is going to have a serious public health problem which is going to reach the public's attention. I think this is the only time that many of our ministers take action.

The second matter I want to talk about is not as serious a matter. It is not a public health matter, although it is a health matter; it does affect the health of many thousands of people in this province. These are the people with Parkinson's disease.

Parkinson's disease is a horrible, crippling, debilitating disease which affects persons, usually beginning in their fifties, sometimes earlier, and which results ultimately in their complete inability to carry on. It does two things. It gives them a frozen mask—they lose the ability to move their features in the way we are used to—and gradually they develop a tremor of their limbs which makes it impossible for them to carry on even the most simple activities.

There is a cure for this disease. This is one of the ravages of the human race; Parkinson's disease has been known back to antiquity. No one has ever been able to do anything about it until half a dozen years ago when a cure was discovered. I see my medical friend shaking his head, but I am going to quote from The Medical Post. I hope he will go along with them. This cure is a drug called L-Dopa. It was discovered by accident. It does not cure all persons with Parkinson's disease, but it does—and I should not use the word cure—it is like insulin in diabetes.

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister without Portfolio): I will buy that.

Mr. Shulman: I see the member is agreeing with me now. It controls 70 per cent of the persons who have Parkinson's disease and allows them to return to normal life.

It has a side effect. It also restores their sexual ability, which has caused some—

Hon. Mr. Potter: That does not always work either

Mr. Shulman: —which has caused some persons who do not have the disease to try it.

An hon. member: The member is not leaving?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Perhaps the member has gone out to try it.

Mr. Shulman: The problem with L-Dopa—

An hon. member: There is a point of privilege here.

Mr. Peacock: The member for Brantford should take the point of privilege.

Mr. Shulman: The major problem with L-Dopa is the cost. As a result of the extreme cost of this drug, although there are 200,000 Canadians who are now suffering to the point of crippling with Parkinson's disease, only 1,500 patients in all of our country are receiving treatment. There are two reasons for this. One is the difficulty in administration, but the major problem is the cost.

The Medical Post, which I think is one of the major organs for Canadian doctors, on February 9, 1971, wrote an editorial, a very lengthy editorial, on this matter. I just want to read the last paragraph, or the last two paragraphs, because they sum it up pretty well. I quote:

We suggest that the publicity given to the use of L-Dopa and the number of patients who are awaiting treatment has placed this situation in the category of an emergency. Therefore it requires the involvement of both government and the profession.

L-Dopa treatment is costly. The price of the drug will undoubtedly come down as volume increases, but one must remember that it is chronic treatment, and as such could impose an intolerable burden on the patient.

One solution would be to have L-Dopa classified in the same category as insulin and that it be paid for out of Medicare funds, or at least some part of the cost subsidized. A hard look at costs would also be an important item on the workshop agenda.

Are we to deny treatment to at least 100,000 patients suffering from Parkinson's disease, many of whom can be salvaged to lead useful lives, because it is difficult to work out a system of getting the treatment to them?

End of quote.

I will leave this with the Minister of Health. I hope he will go to his cabinet colleagues and say that this is a worthwhile thing. It involves 100,000 votes, at least, from the persons involved, without their families. As such perhaps it merits some attention by the current government.

In any case, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, if it does not receive attention by the current government, I shall solicit those 100,000 votes for this party on the promise that we will do something about it, if and when the time comes that we are able.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): If!

Mr. Shulman: The third health matter to which I would like to refer briefly is a more local problem, but it is one that is a minor scandal in this city because we had a solution, and for some reason we dropped it. That is the matter of detoxification units for drunks who are arrested in Toronto.

Some years ago there was a building opened on Harbord Street called the detoxification unit, which was a new idea—a new way of treating a drunk. Instead of throwing him into the cells, let us take him to a place where he can receive proper treatment, proper food, proper care. Let us see if we can get him back on the street and not just throw him in the cell, sober him up and throw him out again to come back again.

And it worked. It was a bold experiment—I give the government credit for it. It was their idea, or their officials' idea. They brought it in. It worked beautifully.

I went through that place twice and each time I came out saying: "Well, they do not do everything wrong. Sometimes they do something right." So what do they do? They close it down.

I have here the official statement of policy from the Canadian Criminology and Corrections Association, which is an organization affiliated with the Canadian Council on Social Development. They write about the Toronto detoxification unit:

Conclusions arrived at after more than one year of operation suggest that detoxification could be done at much less expense, with less emphasis on highly trained medical and paramedical personnel.

So here, they approved of it. Everybody approved of it.

The government approved of it. The opposition approved of it. But they shut it down. The building was needed for something else. Space was needed for something else. The building was torn down.

We came to the Minister of Health, in the estimates last summer and we asked him about this. He said: "Oh we did not shut it down. We just transferred it over. We are not using that building. We are going to have it someplace else. We are going to have it—" let us see, what did he say? "We are going to have it at Harbour Lights and Seaton House."

Unfortunately, I should not dwell on that overmuch, unfortunately his facts were not accurate. There is absolutely no detoxification unit in Toronto at the present time. Deputy Chief Ackroyd of the Toronto police, when asked at an inquest recently, stated quite flatly: "There is no detoxification unit." There should be; so here we get a nice bold great idea, a new way of tackling a serious social problem—it works and there is no follow-through.

Well, we have a new energetic Minister of Health. He has come into the House now, and I put this idea to him and I hope he will read today's Hansard because I have made one or two suggestions for his benefit. This is something that is an emergency. This is something that merits something being done. It is not going to cost anything. That is the funny thing.

If he would just compare the two costs—the cost of keeping the drunks in the cells or keeping them in a detoxification unit, he would find it cheaper in a detoxification unit. So here he can do something without going to Treasury Board or perhaps when we have to reassess the funds a bit, but it is not going to cost him anything more. Here is his big chance to do something. The previous minister talked. He set up a committee to look into it. If this minister does something before the election, I will go out and support him in Carleton East.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Where is the member's leader?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Where is the member's leader? He is not here tonight.

Mr. Shulman: Unfortunately, none of the three leaders is here tonight, but fortunately my leader had the benefit of what I am about to say because we consult together. The member's leader and the leader of the Liberals unfortunately have missed all of these great ideas.

Mr. Henderson: The member's leader has lost interest in him.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I hope not. I hope not.

Mr. Stokes: Where is yours?

Mr. Ferrier: The member opposite never got very far with his leader. He is still sitting in the same seat.

Mr. Pilkey: He could not even get a change of seats in the back row.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, to reply to the member for Lambton, let me say at the moment I am not making an appeal to my leader because unfortunately at the moment he is not in a position to put into effect these various remedies which are obviously necessary. At the moment—and I say "at the moment" through you, sir, to the members opposite—at the moment it is their ministers and it is their leader who are the only ones who can do anything about this. Now, I do not really think they are going to. I have not got much faith in them quite frankly.

I still have a reasonably open mind. That is why I am here giving them these suggestions. If they put these things and others into effect, they might even be re-elected. But I do not think they are going to do these things and I hate to say it to the member for Lambton, but I am going to miss him next time; I really am, because we sort of sat opposite each other all this time and we smiled across at each other. Next year, as I sit over there looking at the few Conservatives and Liberals that are here, it will bother me not having him here to see the things we are doing that we suggested he do and that they missed their chance. Mr. Speaker, they have had every opportunity. They have the power, they have the members, they have the government, they have got the bureaucracy. They could carry out all these reforms, and if they did it would not please me mightily but I think they would be re-elected. It really bothers me to see people miss their opportunity, to have a chance to carry out reforms and instead throw it over to us and make us do all those things next year. Well, we will do them. We will do those things for them. In fact, I will send them Hansard every day to let them know the things as we bring them in.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Say goodbye to the member for Renfrew South, too!

Mr. Shulman: Well, I would like to turn to another matter, Mr. Speaker, and get away from The Department of Health. I would like to come back to the Attorney General's Department for a moment in reference to a bill which has received some publicity but which I have not introduced in the House. This is the bill which has been written up by several newspapers—the compensation for the innocent bill. In case anyone is not aware what this is about, this is a bill to compensate those who end up in jail and are innocent—not, not guilty—but are found innocent. First of all they are found guilty in court and subsequently, after appealing to a tribunal, it is found that there was an administrative or a Crown error and they were really not guilty, and there have been a number of cases mentioned.

Mr. Makarchuk: Obviously innocent.

Mr. Shulman: "Obviously innocent" is the phrase, and I thank my friend. But another case has just come to my attention which so obviously fits into this pattern; I wish to bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and through you, to the Attorney General, because I feel that a bill like this could save a few people a year from financial ruin—not many; I suspect there would be perhaps a dozen, perhaps two. But those few people, for the few thousands of dollars that would be involved, would be saved heartache such as we have seen every now and again in this province which is the type of thing that governments should be attempting to prevent.

I have a paper here from Orillia and I would like to read a quotation from the editorial, rather than going into long details of the case, because it sums it up very well. The newspaper is dated April 7, 1971, and it reads:

WHAT PRICE JUSTICE?

The classified ad section of a newspaper is not always the most exciting department to work in, but it so happened that on a dull day on February 24, 1970, Joan Woods, an attractive girl working at the Packet and Times accepted a small ad which was designed to become the most controversial and expensive in the history of Orillia.

The advertisement referred to a 1970 mobile home offered at a subsequent saving of $1,500 and was published under the name of Sunshine City Homes, Joseph T. Ageus, on West Street South. A complaint was immediately laid under The Combines Act and curiously enough it turned out to be no irate consumer but a competitor named Alex Richmond of Richmond Mobile Homes, also of West Street South, who laid the complaint.

There then arrived in Orillia a certain Mr. T. T. Begin from the trade practices branch in Ottawa, who, for two days, began a grand tour of Sunshine City's customers. Altogether, Mr. Begin flew to Toronto from Ottawa, rented a car and visited Orillia on no less than four occasions.

Mr. Ageus was subsequently committed for trial following a preliminary hearing in Orillia provincial judge's court. It is worth noting here that had he pleaded guilty, he would have been fined probably $50 to $100. However, the case was deemed admissible to the Supreme Court and after a two-day hearing early in March which involved a jury, four constables, sheriff's officer, court reporter, a judge and two lawyers, not to mention the star witness, government investigator, Mr. Ageus was found not guilty of misleading advertising after his lawyer presented evidence to prove that the purchaser had in fact paid the $1,500 when purchasing the mobile home. Altogether, reliable estimates put the cost of this extraordinary tangle of legal boondoggling at somewhere between $20,000 and $30,000. Alex Richmond, the complainant, never had to pay a red cent. The taxpayer footed the entire bill with one exception. Joe Ageus, after suffering seven months of slander, gossip and loss of business is now faced with legal fees of $2,700. What price justice?

Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems like an incredible case and indeed it is. Someone put an ad in the newspaper, offering to sell a home at $1,500 less than the usual price. We do not know who that someone was. It was a phoned-in ad. Mr. Ageus, the owner of the company over whose name the ad was put in, swears up and down he did not phone in that ad and when one looks through his records of ads, all of which are there, that one is not there. Someone phoned that ad in.

Immediately after the ad was phoned in, or immediately after the ad appeared, by some coincidence Mr. Ageus's chief competitor, a much larger competitor in Orillia, immediately laid a complaint that under The Combines Act he was offering misleading advertising. There then arrived an investigator from the Justice Department who spent two days with Mr. Richmond and with certain customers but never once took the trouble to come to Mr. Ageus to look at the facts and to hear the other side of the story. Then, having heard this one side of the story, he proceeded to lay charges against him in court which ultimately of course were thrown out because they were phoney charges.

Well, the family has suffered literally seven months of horror. I received a letter from Mrs. Ageus and I would just like to read a portion of it; it is very brief because it sums it all up:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

Thank you for your recent private bill on compensation for victims accused of a crime. I wish you every success with it and I am writing to Mr. Smith, PC, MPP, for Simcoe East, to say so. There are so many cases of people being ruined by being charged wrongly. This bill is too late to help my husband's case but perhaps it will help someone else. I had written to you last fall about the case of my husband, Joe Aegus, being charged with false advertising under The Combines Act and you had replied suggesting we contact our Ottawa MP because it was a federal matter. The case is now over after trial by judge and jury.

My husband was the first case acquitted under this Act by judge and jury in Canada. Of course, that is small compensation for the fact that (1) he was not guilty in the first place; (2) the charge was laid by a competitor with intent to ruin him; (3) the lawyer's fees of $2,710 plus loss of business due to being charged with an offence under the Criminal Code in a small-town city are just about enough to ruin him financially.

The competitor laid the charges. There is no question about that. That came out in court. That is in the transcript which we have.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): That is the allegation—

Mr. Shulman: I thank the member for the legal advice. They laid the charges; there is no question about that; that came out in court. No; that is in the transcript which we have, that came out in court.

Mr. Ben: Well, the member is doing good. I hate to see him do poorly.

Mr. Shulman: "We thank you again for your valuable time, (signed) Mrs. Joe Aegus."

Well, that sums it up. All right, perhaps someone made a mistake; perhaps these charges should not have been laid, but the fact remains they were laid. The man was innocent; the man was found not guilty and there is nowhere he can go for any help, nowhere he can go for any compensation.

If this bill were brought in—it has not been introduced even for first reading—but if this bill were brought in, I hope it will be brought in as a government bill. Let me say I have presented it to members on all sides of this House, to several members in the other two parties, all of whom approved of the bill and believed it was a good idea.

If this bill were to be brought in, the type of case which is represented here, that of Joe Aegus and similar cases which have been brought up in the past—Douglas Woods, McKenna—would receive compensation which very rightly is due to them.

I did not want this bill to suffer the fate of most bills brought in by private members, so I sent it to the new Attorney General and I explained to him what the purpose of the bill was. I explained it had been drawn up by a Conservative, well-known Toronto lawyer, Mr. Arthur Maloney, who, I believe, has the respect of the members of all three sides of this House.

It is a bill that has nothing to do with politics. No party is going to get any benefit from it one way or the other. It is good legislation. I think probably every member of the House will agree with me on that, and I ask the Attorney General to consider bringing this in as government policy.

If he does, it is not going to cost the government millions of dollars or $1 million a year. It is going to cost some thousands of dollars a year and it is going to save the type of heartache and the type of horror that happens to people like this. Again, I send this plea across to the Attorney General: Do something; bring this in; this is something which we all will be proud of having had a part of.

Now I want to turn briefly to the TAP system, because I have had a most disastrous experience with it. You have heard a great deal about the temporary absence programme which has been brought in by The Department of Correctional Services—great announcements in the House, the wonderful things that are being done,—and it is a good idea, and like so many good ideas, for some reason, the minister involved does not follow through.

I have a most tragic case here, which has just now been concluded, and about which I am still mad, because it shows how the darn programme does not work in the very type of case where it should work. A man by the name of John McKay, a patient of mine for some 15 years, a family man with several children and a wife, worked for Massey-Ferguson for 20-odd years, and had never been in any trouble with the police or anybody else. One horrible night last year, he went to the Rondun Hotel, had too many drinks and punched a policeman in the face.

He appeared in court and was sentenced to 15 days in jail. I believe he served nine days and was let out, and that appeared to be the end of it. Unfortunately, there had been a lot of attacks on policemen, and the Crown felt that this was too mild a sentence and that all sentences for people assaulting policemen should be heavier. They appealed to the Court of Appeal which in its wisdom raised the sentence to six months in jail.

This was the beginning of December, and Mr. McKay went to the sergeant of detectives and asked if he could have time not to go to jail until December 26, because he wished to spend Christmas with his family. The sergeant of detectives was a very humane man. He said yes, he would be glad to let it go until December 26, if he would give himself up then.

In the meanwhile, I wrote to the then Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) and I pointed out the circumstances of the case. I asked him if he would please consider putting this man on the temporary absence programme, because if ever a man deserved to go on the temporary absence programme this was McKay. He had never before been in trouble of any sort with the police or anyone else. He was not going to run away, he would go back to his work at Massey-Ferguson, and at night he would go to jail, and he would spend his six months spending the nights in the Don Jail and working during the day.

This way his family would not have to go on welfare and he would not lose his job. The minister acknowledged my letter and said he would look into it. On December 26 McKay gave himself up, and went off to the Don Jail. I wanted to hear what would happen, and a week later I got a frantic call from his wife: "He is not at the Don Jail any more. I cannot find out what happened to him."

So I phoned Governor Whitehead at the Don Jail to ask what had happened.

He said, "He has been shipped to Guelph."

I said, "What about the TAP?"

"It has been turned down."

"What reason was given?"

"No reason was given. We do not give reasons."

I said, "Well, do you know, can you tell me off the record?"

He said, "They do not give me the reason. I cannot tell. All I know is that they turned down his application and he has gone down to Guelph."

I was just incensed, upset, furious. Because if they really believe in rehabilitation in that department—I have grave doubts, I really do—here was the perfect case for TAP. I got nowhere with the government, so I appealed to a higher source. I went to Ron Haggart, who is a columnist in this city, and he wrote the article up in detail giving the circumstances of what had occurred. Suddenly action took place. Suddenly at Guelph, they called Mr. McKay into the office. They had read the article, and they said, "We had better do something about this." They put a new application into TAP and suddenly, by some magic, the application which previously had been rejected was accepted, which shows where the influence lies in this province.

In any case, meanwhile, unfortunately, Massey was laying people off, so he got laid off before he could be shipped down to start work again. That did not worry me too much, because I knew with his record he would have no trouble getting another job, so I got in touch with them and asked if they would let him out on the TAP programme to look for work. They said, "He can look for work all right, but he has to look for the work while he is in here. Every day he can look from nine to five. He can look at the papers, but he cannot go out and apply, but as soon as he gets the job then he can go out during the day to go to work."

At first I thought they were kidding, but they were serious. The man was granted the temporary absence; he was granted permission to go to work, but he was not allowed time to look for a job. They cannot seriously believe that any convict with the lowest IQ is going to accept that as real serious belief in rehabilitation. It is just sheer nonsense. The men running that programme should have their heads examined.

Finally, I called Massey and I pleaded with them. I told them the whole silly story and the only thing you can do is you have to blow up and explode or laugh. He laughed and said, "Mr. McKay is rehired as of today. We will recall him." So, bang, he was able to go back to work and the whole problem got settled that way, and he went on the TAP programme.

But what would we do if we did not have a fighting columnist like Ron Haggart in the city to write this sort of thing up? He would still be sitting in that jail down in Guelph, and the wild stories he tells about Guelph—well that is for another night. We will save that for another time, as my whip tells me my time is limited.

But the TAP programme does not work. I do not think it is meant to work. It is meant as a great public relations act and that is all it is. They let a few people out to take their pictures—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Do you want to wind me up again? But they do not seriously pay attention.

There are two other brief matters I want to refer to. One is the matter of alcohol in this province.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member for Thunder Bay is the first man. The member for High Park will not listen to him.

Mr. Shulman: I come from a dry riding, one of the very few that are left in the province; and residents of my riding voted "dry" just a short time ago, and I am the last one to quarrel with their wishes. However, I have come to the conclusion that the people running the liquor laws in this province have completely gone out of their heads. Either someone down there is trying to make us all look like fools, including the minister, the Legislature and the police, or else some lunatic is running the place.

The things they have done recently are most incredible. I have made a list of some of them here and I find them beyond belief. Within this past year, they have done the following things, the inspectors of the Liquor Control Board.

They walked into The Boiler Room one day and said, "There are too many tables in here; take some of them out." So the fellow said, "Okay, we will take them out right after closing time." "No, now. Make those people get up and pull the tables out." Sure enough, they made the customers get out of the chairs and they pulled out the tables and chairs.

Perhaps this was an over-zealous inspector who did not want to wait the 30 minutes until closing time. He felt those people had been sitting there long enough.

In the very same week, they went to Honest Ed's—and I mentioned this here once before; I am coming to some new items, but these are some of the earlier ones—they went to Honest Ed and he was selling hot dogs there at the same time he was serving drinks. They said, "You may not sell hot dogs any more, hot dogs out as of tomorrow or else licence out." Ed said, "What is wrong with hot dogs?" The inspector replied, "They are undignified, we do not allow hot dogs in any of our establishments. Hot dogs out."

Mr. Makarchuk: There may be something Freudian about the inspectors.

Mr. Shulman: The same week they went to Julie's, and they came up to Alex, who is the maitre d', and said, "Do you realize what is going on on the next floor?" He said, "My God, what is going on on the next floor?" "People are drinking standing up! They must not drink standing up. They must drink sitting down." The world is coming to an end, everyone is polluted—somebody should be committed. There must be chairs and tables and no one must drink standing up—always sitting down. And furthermore, that is not all, they must not drink alone, they must eat at the same time as they drink.

Mr. Young: No hot dogs, though.

Mr. Shulman: No hot dogs though. So he said, "Well, that is all right. These are people who have eaten their meal here, in the main floor." "Well, it does not make any difference. They have to eat again. It is a different floor."

Well, Alex was sure that he had misunderstood, but if you cannot drink standing up, you cannot drink standing up. So—

Mr. Stokes: Those liquor laws are really laughable.

Mr. Shulman: —they put up a big notice, there, "No more drinking standing up." Everybody had to sit down and they put in tables and chairs. But he said that he was sure that he must have misunderstood the inspector when he said they had to have two meals. So people were coming in for the first time and went up to the lounge and sat down and they said, "You have got to eat first." He said, "Okay." But for those people who had finished their meal and went up to have a drink, he found it a little difficult to believe that they had to eat again, so he telephoned up to make sure that was the ruling. It is a different floor, a different establishment. They have to eat again.

And that is the ruling today. If you go in to Julie's to have a meal and decide you want to go upstairs to the lounge and have a drink, you order again. You do not have to eat it but you must pay for it. Insanity!

That is not all. They decided, just three weeks ago, that the Greeks in our city were doing something terribly immoral. Do you know what they were doing? The inspectors went in there on a Sunday and people were dancing, and not only were they dancing, they were drinking. They were drinking and dancing! Well, they do that all the rest of the week, and it is all right, but on Sunday you may still drink, this is all right, and we do not mind you drinking, but you must not dance. Liquor and dancing are okay through the week but never on Sunday.

So Zorba, who ran the establishment, had a bit of difficulty in understanding, but he thought, "What the heck. These are the people who rule this country, and if they say you must not drink and dance on Sunday I guess they must have reason for saying so. We will continue the drinking and stop the dancing." So that apparently would solve the problem.

One of the other places, Nepantha, said, "Look, we do not serve liquor on Sunday. We do not want to serve liquor, so we will allow the dancing and stop the liquor." So they came back this past Sunday and said, "It does not matter, no dancing even if there is no liquor." So he said, "What has this to do with the Liquor Control Board if we dance and there is no liquor being sold here?" "It does not matter, if you ever serve liquor here—and you do other days—you come under our regulations and we insist that you do not allow any dancing on Sunday."

Mr. Stokes: Never on Sunday.

Mr. Shulman: "You do not allow any dancing on a Sunday whether or not liquor is sold. And if you continue to allow dancing on Sunday, which is perfectly legal, under the laws of this land, we are going to take away your liquor licence for the rest of the time."

What are the establishments to do? Are they to fight back? Of course, they gave up. But it was not just these establishments. In midweek, two other establishments, a place called The Scene and a place called Damon's Den were visited by these enthusiastic "Mackey's Insane Marauders" and they were given the same rules. "Liquor in an establishment puts it in a different category than if liquor is never served there. And if you serve liquor in your establishment on Monday, the following Sunday, whether there is liquor or not, you may not dance, or we close you up."

That is not all. They seem to have completely blown their brains about granting licences.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, the member means they have gone beyond that.

Mr. Shulman: This is not bureaucratic bungling such as we used to see so often in various departments of government and which we still see occasionally. Someone has gone completely off his rocker down there. That is the only possible explanation.

Mr. Peacock: The member has not heard about the $5,000 fine for the guy who did not serve the sandwich in Windsor?

Mr. Shulman: No, I am sorry. Oh yes, I did read about that. Some troop of agents provocateur came into an establishment and literally conned the waiter into selling them a beer. He did not sell them a sandwich at the same time and the establishment was fined $5,000. There is something wrong in our law in trapping people. This was not an inspector going in and seeing liquor served without food. He trapped them into doing it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Straight out of Frankenstein.

Mr. Shulman: Just three months ago there was another establishment in Hamilton where the inspectors from the same nutty department came and said, "You may no longer employ women in this beverage room. From now on you have got to employ men." The owner said, "But the women have worked here for years and the government says we should have equal opportunity and there should be no sexual discrimination." They said, "We do not care about those laws. This is the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. We run the establishment. You fire those women or we shut you up."

I want to quote from an article in the Toronto Daily Star by Jeremy Brown, about the fair way in which they give the licences, and I quote:

In 1969, immigrant Jean Claude Terrier, then 23, with $1,000 of his own and $3,000 in bank loans, started an establishment called l'Omelette, a restaurant specializing in omelettes. After 18 months of successful operation he was finally granted a licence by the Ontario Liquor Licence Board.

Last month he started a branch on Wellington Street East, near O'Keefe Centre, with the same name and the same cuisine. He had been advised by other restaurateurs that an applicant with a liquor licence who planned to open an identical operation elsewhere has reasonable grounds to believe he can open the new premises with a licence immediately, but the liquor board would not even allow Terrier permission to apply for a licence, and so far no reason has been given.

I want to interrupt here. It is not a question of applying and being accepted or rejected.

You have to apply for permission to apply. They refused him permission to apply. I go on with the quotation.

Last month, the Danish Food Centre Tavern on Bloor Street West, owned by Dan Cheese Limited, a company owned by 200 members of The Danish Cheese Association, opened with a tavern licence on its first day. Manager Bjorn Andersen admitted he was a bit surprised when the licence was granted, because the association itself had had no previous Ontario liquor licence.

Mr. Singer: What about Ontario Place?

Mr. Shulman: I am coming to that. Licences are given out capriciously, no reason is given when a rejection is given—places sit for months and years with no licence and no reason given.

Is this a fair way to run government? Is this a fair way to run one of our departments? I think the man who is running it, or not running that department—and the minister must now be responsible. I cannot believe that either the present minister or the past minister was aware of these things, or took any part in them, despite the many faults that these men have, one of their faults is not one of insanity, and this is simply—and there is only one way to describe it; I have used the word before—insanity.

I want to quote George Boukydis, president of the Ontario region of the Canadian Restaurant Association, who, as he put it, is extremely upset by the apparently arbitrary moods of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario.

The board published the names of five applicants for various liquor licences yesterday, including one on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Development for Ontario Place, which opens in two months.

They are hearing applications for restaurant lounge licences; they have not issued any of them for 20 years. I think it is unfair that Ontario Place applicants get lounge licences when they have not been available since 1950. I have repeatedly asked the board for a list of its regulations, and I have been consistently refused. We do not even know when the rules change.

Mr. Boukydis went on:

I am also upset about the fact that none of the five Ontario Place restaurants is operating and therefore, if licences are granted, they will be able to open up with liquor, something few private restaurateurs have been able to achieve.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if there is one department in this government where everything is wrong, it is this particular department. Our liquor laws have been made a laughing stock for years, for generations perhaps, but they have been raised to a new height in the past year, ever since the appointment of James Mackey to his new position. He appears to be out to embarrass the government in every way he can. I can only suspect that he must be a member of one of the opposition parties because he is making you look so foolish. You had better whisper in his ear very quickly that what the insurance companies are doing to work you out of office, he is doing to laugh you out of office.

I want to finish on a purely political note. I have tried, Mr. Speaker, in my four years in office never to get into political matters, but always to stay above that and only involve myself in matters which were for the good of everyone. But I think, since this is probably my last Throne Speech for this Legislature, I should be allowed one political indulgence and I would like to take that now.

I would like to talk about the political process and this time I will give the Conservatives a rest. I want to talk about my other friends to my right because I know it will please them to have this on the record. I will try to do what I can to make everyone happy.

Mr. Gaunt: There is one of them walking out now.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. As you know, Mr. Speaker, you have heard there is an election upcoming in this province—I understand it is to be on June 26.

Mr. Stokes: No, June 24.

Mr. Shulman: June 24?

Mr. Gaunt: Do not bank on it.

Mr. Shulman: I am hopeful it will be June 24. I hope it will not be put off.

In preparation for this election, in some of the ridings of this province nominations have taken place for various parties. I am sorry that the Liberals have not nominated in my riding yet. I am looking forward with some trepidation and relish to see who they send up to the meat grinder.

In any case, they have had nominations elsewhere and one of the nomination meetings took place out in Oakville. It was a sign of democracy in action and I thought that perhaps the members of the House would like to hear about it.

I must give the Liberal Party credit. They are getting huge crowds to some of their nomination meetings—1,000 people and more. It has given great concern to the other parties and great happiness to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) who is thrilled to see these great crowds come out, who finds this as a sign of democracy at its best and, perhaps, a sign that the Liberal Party is on the upswing and that it will form the next government.

We saw one meeting after another where they had 800, 1,000, 1,200 people, and it is very impressive. Quite honestly, when reading these figures in the paper I was very worried, because if they are able to do this, perhaps they are going to sweep the province. Perhaps they are going to take all 100-odd seats that are available, and who would be there to oppose them?

Anyway, I feel a little better now after the Oakville nomination, because a few reporters went down to cover it and one of them wrote a brief article, which I would like to read into the record.

The heading is, "ROBERT NIXON TOLD THEM 'THIS IS DEMOCRACY AT ITS BEST'." This appeared in the Oakville Daily Journal Record on Wednesday, March 3, 1971 at the bottom of the front page:

Charles Crisci of Milton wrote "Blake" in block letters on more than 20 empty ballots within 10 minutes last night at the Halton East Liberal Party's nominating convention. While the candidates were still speaking he was writing "Blake" on ballots, stuffing them into the pockets of groups of Italians and saying, "Okay, good, now do not lose that."

He regularly reported to a group of Blake organizers in the back of the hall which included ward 3 councillor Pete Watters. At one point, Crisci told them, "I got 200 of them." "Good," the Blake man responded.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Well organized.

Mr. Singer: Almost as good as Dovercourt, but they did not have to call it off.

Mr. Shulman: "Crisci also slapped 'Blake'—"

Mr. Singer: Dovercourt was the place where there were more ballots in the box than there were people at the meeting.

Mr. Shulman: It seemed to happen here—several hundred more.

Mr. Singer: Yeah, yeah!

Mr. Shulman: "Crisci also slapped 'Blake' stick-um labels—"

Mr. Singer: How about the nomination meeting at Dovercourt?

Mr. Shulman: Quoting:

Crisci also slapped "Blake" stick-um labels on Blake acquaintances, indicating in Italian that this was the man they were voting for.

During the time he was observed writing "Blake" on the 20 ballots, he was also scurrying around to various groups of observers, grabbing their ballots, placing the ballot on the back of the person or on his thigh and writing "Blake" before moving on to another group.

One woman was asked who she supported. "Black," she said. Why, she was asked? "He change," she responded. Her two elderly acquaintances were asked the same question, but they did not understand English.

At least two dozen other individuals were encountered in a random questioning of the crowd who could not speak any English at all and did not understand the language.

A group of about 20 teenagers from a Main Street pool hall in Milton sat together in the back of the room. They were all voting delegates of the Liberal Party.

One was asked how much money he was getting for appearing at the convention. He laughed and shook his head and would not say anything. "I do not believe you," the reporter smiled. The boy grinned back and nodded.

A second Milton pool hall youth was asked who he was supporting. "Blake." Why? "I do not know." For what position? "Liberals." No, what office is he running for? "I do not know."

The pool-hall group shouted interjections several times during provincial party leader Robert Nixon's speech and got a reprimanding from one of the Blake adult organizers to keep quiet.

When Rud Whiting thanked Nixon for his speech, most members of the pool-hall group started laughing and hooting, imitating Whiting's voice.

An Italian man standing alone after the hoopla was over was asked what he thought of the convention. He shook his head and said, "No. Uh, uh." What candidate were you for? "Oh, it does not matter. I do not care." He spoke English very well.

The conversation continued. The reporter asked him again who he was for to win the nomination. Again he replied, "I do not care. Either one. It does not matter. I am tired."

Several people responded with a point to their Blake stick-um label when asked who they were supporting. They could not pronounce the word, but they knew the label was there.

A young man shouting and carrying a Blake sign was asked what he thought of the convention. "Well actually I am in the NDP but this guy Blake is all right."

An elderly man named Percy Purdy headed straight for the liquor counter when it was opened after the voting had finished. "I have been coming to these things for years," he smiled.

He leaned on the orange counter with shaky hands, grabbed two shots. "Get your mixer down there," the bartender told him.

Robert Nixon told the crowd, "This is democracy at its best. Politics is not just a game."

Two men were asked who they supported. The first shook his head and said something in a foreign language. He gestured to the second.

"Ah, Italiano, no speak," the second said. Who are you voting for, the second one was asked. He pointed to his Blake sticker. Why? "Work. He want jobs."

The defeated leadership candidate David Butler said, "There is nothing to stop the packing of ballots except our constitution."

He said the important part of the campaign took place before the annual convention. He estimated that two-thirds of the delegates came as prearranged supporters of a candidate and one-third came "with an open mind."

Mr. Ben: The reporter was the president of the NDP association.

Mr. Singer: He was the fellow who ran the meeting in Dovercourt.

Mr. Shulman: The worst is yet to come, do not get upset yet; goodness!

Butler stressed the importance of the speeches at the convention, but then admitted that speeches could not persuade the two-thirds. "I do not think it is possible to convert those brought in under those circumstances.

"My own supporters were very aware of the issues. Lots of people are not proficient with the English language but anyone who joins us is eligible to vote. I have not bought a single vote."

Blake said the convention outcome "was a culmination of effort starting in January. We signed people up at coffee parties. A lot came in uncommitted and I tried to sell Liberalism and myself to them.

"I have tried to involve the Greek, Italian and Portuguese communities."

The candidate denied seeing Crisci signing ballots. And someone pointed out that that was not illegal, but helpful. A member of the Crisci family thought the reporter was "from the police."

One convention-goer said, "Two things have impressed me about this convention. Size and action."

Out in the lobby a young member of the Blake band said to another, "Who are we playing for again?"

The kids laughed and looked bored and laughed some more. None of them showed any interest in what was going on on stage.

When the line of Blake girls came prancing by they perked up.

"Now that is some reason for coming," one delegate said to his friend.

Mr. Newman: It that why the hon. member was there?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member because this has been the most humorous part of his speech—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state his point of order?

Mr. Ben: The point of order is that the rules prohibit the long reading of newspaper articles and letters.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker is well aware of the rules.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is another touch of humour.

Mr. Stokes: The hon. member for Humber is really enjoying it.

Mr. Shulman: Because of kindness I had not wanted to say too much about this matter. I do not want to embarrass my friends to the right, and quite honestly I felt a little better when I learned where they were getting their crowds and the conviction that these crowds had.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): What is the matter with "them people"?

Mr. Shulman: Nothing is the matter with "them people." It is a pity they did not know what was going on at the meeting.

In fact, rather than my making a comment on it I am going to leave it for the Daily Journal Record who take their politics very seriously. They wrote a lengthy editorial, which the member for Humber will be pleased I am not going to read, but I just wish to read the first and last paragraphs because they sum it all up so well. It is dated Friday, March 5, 1971, and the heading is "The Halton Liberals":

Standing on the platform of the big Halton Liberal rally this week, party leader Robert Nixon proudly proclaimed, "This is democracy at its best."

He then assured his audience that politics is not a game, not a plaything of people seeking power. He would have us believe politics is people and its involvement.

Mr. Nixon . . . may endorse the politics (and practices) of the Liberal convention—and the exploitation of the group of Italian delegates from Milton. We do not.

What we saw . . . was the worst side of our political system. What we saw are some of the reasons why the whole system is under attack today, particularly under the attack of a young generation that puts people before party. The Liberal Party included.

After seeing what we did on Tuesday night we are ashamed. Not for what we wrote. But because we watched people being treated like puppets and being exploited for the good of the party. Democracy at its best? Or worst?

And on that note, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my address.

Mr. Singer: He never did explain Dovercourt.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I enter into the Throne debate, may I first commend you, Mr. Speaker, for concurring with the women's liberation movement. I believe that this is the first time in the Ontario Legislature that page-girls have been present. You, Mr. Speaker, in your wisdom, have made some important changes in the selection of pages. This Legislature is now being served by pages from almost every riding in Ontario, and I think it is a privilege well appreciated by those who serve.

Let me begin by addressing myself to the problems of unemployment. I stated in the budget debate last June that I am personally opposed to the federal government's outlook in regard to the working man, and to the government policies in relation thereto. In particular, I cannot support any government policy of deliberately creating unemployment in order to cure inflation. I believe that inflation is caused—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Where were you when he was in Welland?

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Why do you not tell that to your leader?

Mr. Haggerty: I believe that inflation is caused not so much by people working for a decent salary and by a fair share of the goods and services of this province, but rather through their being unable to obtain employment. Such people—more than half a million of them—are forced to obtain income assistance through such programmes as unemployment insurance and various welfare schemes. However, the federal government, however belatedly, did show some awareness and took some positive correctional steps before the end of June, 1970.

My leader (Mr. Nixon) has already told, in his speech in the unemployment debate, how overtures were made to the Ontario government, notably by Mr. Young and Paul Gerin-Lajoie, who was then a member of the Prices and Incomes Commission, as well as by officials from Mr. Benson's department, and how these overtures were rebuffed by the then Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. MacNaughton) and his deputy Mr. Ian MacDonald, and others from the Frost Building.

Particularly, my leader has shown how counter-cyclical programmes were not adopted in the provincial Public Works Department at a time of full employment, so that there was no major public work to absorb unemployed construction workers when the slack began to show. Consequently, the Ontario government has been reduced to mounting a pitiful but showy programme of dead elm tree removal—not, mark you, where the trees are worst hit, along the little-travelled side-roads of this province, but rather along the main arteries where the signs emblazoned with the name of the new Premier can be seen by all.

It is like Pharaoh building his pyramids all over again, except that the Premier uses the device to get re-elected. The Pharaohs were dead before anybody dared say anything nasty about them, but the present Premier will get his answers as early as two months from now if he chooses to go to the people of Ontario on the strength of his performance to date, of which this elm tree programme is just one pitiful example.

As I listened to the present Treasurer and Minister of Economics (Mr. McKeough), I realized the government has replaced a cipher with a zero. In fact, he is beyond the zero; he is wholly negative and, more importantly, he comes over as negative to the people of Ontario.

When, at the Tory leadership convention, the Earl of Chatham walked over to the squire of Brampton, it was the kiss of death for the Tories in this province, for here was arrogance embracing indecision, and the people of Ontario did not fail to notice it. As my leader said at the time, it was a good deal funnier than "Laugh-In" on the other channel.

It is par for the course that the Treasurer should stand up in this House and blame everything on the federal government. For him to say that the Ontario government is not responsible is a false statement and one which will not be believed by the people of this province.

We all know that one of the growing dangers to the Ontario economy is companies which shut down one plant in order to operate another economically without regard to the human consequences. When this happens on the international scale, Ontario may be severely handicapped in doing anything about it, beyond demanding statutory notice of closure and all the safeguards that my colleague, the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte), has proposed.

When it happens as a result of a deliberate policy on the part of The Department of Trade and Development, however, there is absolutely no excuse. The manner in which the forgivable loans programme has been handled—I notice they are called performance loans now to fool the people again—is absolutely scandalous, and I say to the new Minister of Trade and Development (Mr.

Grossman) that if he is worth his salt, heads should roll.

In an effort to get back to the first principle, I turn to the work of Gray, the Owenite socialist who turned into the first disciple of "under-consumption" when he left the doctrinaire socialist field in 1825. He was a Benthamite, of course; or a believer in "the greatest happiness of the greatest number," but it is interesting to see how he moved into what we would now call the Liberal position. I should like, for the benefit of my friends to the left, to read into the record from pages 130 and 131 of "Critics of the International Industrial Revolution.":

Gray's lecture on Human Happiness starts off from the Owenite proposition that man's nature if not interfered with by evil influence, conduces to harmony and happiness. The principle that satisfies man's natural desire to live in peace with his fellows is barter, for example, the giving and taking of equal quantities of labour.

Properly applied this would lead to a condition of equality, whereas under the existing system the workers are robbed of four-fifths of their produce, which is then distributed among the nonworkers. And at this point Gray invokes statistics which demonstrate the rich man, in point of fact, pays nothing and receives everything, while the poor man, in point of fact, pays everything and receives nothing.

We put it to candour of every honest man whether such a state in society as this ought to be preserved. If the non-producers should argue that they live upon their own property, Gray rejoins that property not acquired by labour is held unjustly. Moreover, the present inequitable distribution of wealth coincides to further evils, for the competition among labourers presses down the rate of wages, while competition among employers lowers the rate of profits; were competition replaced by co-operation—as proposed by Owen—the whole of society would benefit.

As the matter stands, production is limited by effective demand, whereas it ought to be limited only by the satisfaction of material wants. The result is that the inhabitants of Britain are in the possession of powers by which they can create wealth without any known limits, and yet one-half of them are in the state of actual poverty. The argument points to lack of purchasing power as the cause of insufficient production.

In his later writings Gray quite consistently comes forward as a monetary reformer, while socialism drops out of sight. If inadequate purchasing power is at the root of the trouble, then the remedy may be found within the terms of private ownership and the market. In this sense Gray can be called a forerunner of under-consumptionists.

Well, in this age of cybernetics and computers, we have moved a long way from the dependence on workers' hands alone for laborious toil, but the consumption part of the equation is still there, although today it is complicated by the problem of pollution. It ought not to be beyond the wit of man to devise some means of building the costs of counter-pollution measures into the cost of structures and the general economic framework of our society.

As my leader said in 1968, it is only the extended production that technology has brought about that has made it possible, for the first time, for man to be able to afford to clean up his mess. We have to recognize that "cleaning up after" is a legitimate charge on the cost of goods and services, and we ought not to let anybody off the hook, or to sidetrack the issue until after the election by mounting a phoney legal battle, as in the case of Dow, where the province cannot hope to win. Court cases under existing and inadequate law are no substitute for new law enacted by this Legislature and firmly enforced thereafter.

I believe the problems of temporary unemployment and pollution in the public sector can be linked together by a massive publicly financed, labour-intensive hiring programme that would result in making Ontario beautiful again. It is clear that, as the factories become more and more automated and as fewer and fewer workers are needed inside the plants, an ever greater percentage of our workers must move over into the field of service of all kinds. I envision a great public sector of service that will continually maintain our countryside, as well as city streets, in an attractive state. And, as my leader has said, we can afford to do it, and we cannot afford not to do it.

Another attack on unemployment should be combined with a massive challenge to the lack of reasonably priced housing. Private enterprise can do the job if the public sector provides the services needed. The latest OHC report shows that one million new homes will be required by 1980, and of these 75 per cent will be within a 100-mile radius of Toronto.

Now whether this should be is another question. The Liberal policy is to decentralize growth around power points: Nanticoke, Lennox, Bruce and sites to be selected in the north. But the Toronto-centred-region plan, which is reliant on expressways and the "golden horseshoe," seemed to forget the vast areas of the province where the government has traditionally shown little or no concern.

Be that as it may, municipalities throughout Ontario have in far too many instances little or no sewage treatment capacity and what they do have is wholly inadequate in the light of their recent growth. I would commend to your attention the resolution on the order paper in the name of my colleague from York Centre (Mr. Deacon) which was debated today. This is essentially the approach a Liberal government would take to the question of providing adequate services.

You will notice also that my colleague, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), has carried this a stage further and related the service problem directly to the housing shortage. I think we have to relieve municipalities further, and at the same time lift a lot of names off the welfare rolls, by offering employment to large numbers of able-bodied men on the provincial payroll. There is no reason why a substantial federal component should not be built into such a scheme, as of course it is into welfare. Some kind of a job corps is urgently needed to preserve the dignity of that very great segment of Ontario unemployed which has retained its pride in the face of all adversity—people who would rather starve than accept handouts from welfare bureaucrats; people who are just longing to do an honest day's work given the chance.

Associated with the need to have a vast provincial involvement in pollution cleanup and services provision programmes, be it through direct employment, in a job corps or by guarantees to private contractors—whichever seems more appropriate in the circumstances—there ought to be a much clearer recognition by Queen's Park of the plight of municipalities in general in this area, and particularly of the lower-tier municipalities involved in the disaster known as Tory-style regional government.

It is often hurled at us across the floor that we supported the concept of regional government years ago and even wrote it into our platform. That may be true, but it is equally true that never in their wildest nightmares did Liberals ever envision anything like the horror story of the Niagara regional government. We would have run a mile.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on some of the editorials written on the Niagara regional government. Perhaps some of the members are not aware of them. From St. Catharines city council the headlines read, "St. Catharines contends regional government has failed".

The mayor has mentioned that some of the major inequities listed in the brief are that the overall regional council is too large and St. Catharines' representation too small. Transitional adjustments or the sharing of certain costs could cost the entire area and place the city in an unfair financial position—duplication of services and so forth. He goes on to say that tax increases—the brief also notes that property owners this year face a residential tax increase of nearly 16 mills and a commercial increase of 22 mills because of regional government. This creates a rather serious problem in the Niagara peninsula concerning regional government—he goes on to say that the average homeowner will be paying $50 or $60 more in taxes this year. It is interesting to note that it has been suggested by the St. Catharines council that they will be presenting a private bill to the Ontario Legislature to secede from the regional government in the Niagara peninsula. It will also be interesting to note which member on that side will present the bill. Will it be the member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch)? Will it be the member for St.

Catharines (Mr. R. M. Johnston) or the member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar)? It is a very interesting question.

I hope I am around to see that. Not only the city of St. Catharines wants to—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member could find a convenient point in the next two or three minutes to adjourn the debate so that we may adjourn at 10:30?

Mr. Haggerty: If you wish so, Mr. Speaker. I wish to—

Mr. Speaker: Whatever would be convenient for you.

Mr. Haggerty: All right. I will adjourn the debate then.

Mr. Haggerty moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I should mention that the first order, the reply to the Speech from the Throne, will generally be the routine this week.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON BILL 10

Mr. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food if he has undertaken any further communications with the Minister of Agriculture in the Province of Quebec, or any of the authorities in that province, following the proclamation of Bill 10.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Yes Mr. Speaker, I was in touch with my deputy minister last night, who has been in touch with the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Quebec yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Will the minister communicate to the House the nature of the communication and if in fact the government of Quebec is contemplating any action in response to the passage of Bill 10?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There is nothing more to report than that. We just told him what we have done. We discussed it with them last week when we introduced the legislation. I was in touch as well with the federal Minister of Agriculture last week before the bill was proceeded with. There is really nothing more than that to report.

There was no comment made about any retaliatory legislation being introduced in Quebec whatever. Discussions we have had with the various Ministers of Agriculture across Canada, and in particular with the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec through our deputies, because as members know we can only converse by somebody translating for us, would indicate that their position as far as eggs are concerned is that they felt they wanted to have some type of control over eggs coming into the Province of Quebec due to the fact that their producers were, in their words, being undersold by egg producers in other provinces.

They really have no desire to shut them out and neither have we, but I think one has to look at this whole matter of poultry products from the standpoint of realistic supply type management for the various markets, whether they be in Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia or wherever in Canada they may be.

We think that failing any type of meaningful legislation which would get at the root of the problem—and that is oversupply in certain provinces—this approach is the only type of control that is really meaningful.

Mr. Nixon: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Food then has no information which would indicate that Quebec is contemplating action which might interfere with Ontario's markets for our agricultural produce in that province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No; nothing other than eggs, Mr. Speaker. Eggs of course were the item of greatest concern to the Province of Quebec. As members will recall, I believe it was in June, 1970, when the Fedco, or the egg marketing co-operative, was established in the Province of Quebec it was for the sole purpose of trying to limit the number of eggs marketed in Quebec to provide some meaningful price level for the producers of Quebec.

There has been no discussion of any type of control other than that, but I would not be at all surprised to see some strengthening in the controls dealing with eggs coming into the Province of Quebec from other areas besides Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Essex South a supplementary?

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Is the minister aware of any retaliatory action being taken yet on an unofficial level—that is by the buyers of agricultural products in that province—against some of the products grown or processed in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: A few months ago, none other than my hon. friend the member for Essex South, I believe, brought to my attention that there was some concern regarding marketing of vegetables because of the single desk selling agency programme that was instituted by—was it the greenhouse board? The visit by the greenhouse board to the various food brokers in Montreal, I believe, relieved the concern. As a matter of fact, that very afternoon I got a telegram from those people who were concerned expressing their delight at the reception they had in Quebec and indicating that their concern had been relieved because of the discussion they had had with them.

I think perhaps the problem evolved in Montreal because they did not understand what single desk selling meant. I believe that once that was explained, to my knowledge everything was relieved and I have not heard a word of complaint since. If there is something new, it is news to me.

Mr. Paterson: Yes. Might I ask by way of further supplementary: There has been no knowledge come to the minister that any retaliatory action has been taken on canned goods that are available in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Brantford a supplementary?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Could the minister indicate if he has had any discussions with a group of egg producers from eastern Ontario who have hired a Toronto law firm to test the constitutionality of the legislation that was passed in this House?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No I have not, Mr. Speaker.

DRUGS DROPPED FROM PARCOST

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: Can he explain to the House why he feels it is proper for him to drop certain specific drugs from his Parcost approved list but not state publicly what these drugs are, so that those citizens who are availing themselves of pharmacists' professional services that do not come under Parcost could have that protection?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): It is not really a question of protection, Mr. Speaker. Parcost is an inclusive programme and not an exclusive programme. In other words, the philosophy behind Parcost is that we list a group from the practical point of view, a group of leading drugs sold by a limited number of drug firms because they are adequate.

In doing so we do not exclude all the other drugs on the market. When a drug is dropped it may be dropped for a vast number of reasons, and permutations and combinations of those reasons.

It may be that an inadequate amount of the drug is sold in this jurisdiction to warrant it being placed on a limited list such as Parcost comprises. It may be because a particular batch was found unsound. It may be because the management practices were found unsound. It may be because we simply did not get the application in from the firm on time.

So I do not want, Mr. Speaker, to be drawn into the defence of a concept which does not include Parcost. In other words, Parcost is not a total assessment of all drugs of all types sold at any particular time in Ontario. It is simply a practical book telling the medical profession and telling the public not what are bad but what are good, and listing available drugs sold in Ontario in large quantities.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Would it be correct to assume that some of the drugs at least are not listed because they do not come up to the minimum quality standards established by The Department of Health?

If that assumption is correct, then surely the minister's responsibility is to make the names of these drugs known for the protection of the citizens who might not be in communities where Parcost—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader is making a statement. He is not asking a question.

Mr. Nixon: —facilities are available to them?

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to reply to the question?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I would say that when one considers the field in which the federal government operates—namely, the assessment of all drugs whether they are largely or widely sold or not and their hazardous or otherwise characteristics—I do not think there is a need for us to impinge upon the discharge of that responsibility at a federal level.

Beyond that, the dropping of a drug is a question that may not relate to its quality at all. There are some drugs that are—

Mr. Nixon: In some cases it does. The hon. minister said so himself.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I can picture this occurring. But if I start opening up the assessment of every single drug that is assessed, then I open up this whole committee's work and would switch the programme around from a positive, inclusive statement of what is good into a total bible of what is bad.

Mr. Nixon: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned: Surely the assessment of what is an acceptable quality should be left to the federal Food and Drug Directorate.

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister feel that his jurisdiction in Parcost infringes or overlaps this specific authority in the cases where certain drugs are acceptable at the federal level and rejected by the minister?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I would agree that the acceptance of a drug on the basis of its hazardous characteristics or otherwise, happily is one that should be left, and is left, fundamentally with the federal jurisdiction.

All I can add is that insofar as we are concerned that committee will drop a drug not on the basis of having proved that it is unsatisfactory, but on a much wider basis in that it is not at all sure that the management and the operation in general is adequately supported in its supervisory staff, and this kind of thing.

Mr. Nixon: I do not know what that means.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Has an assessment been made by the minister of the department of all the drugs that were dropped in this latest listing of Parcost?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, an assessment has been made. But the word "assessment" is a very loose word.

Mr. Pitman: May I clarify this? Has an assessment of the quality of each drug that has been dropped from Parcost been made by the minister? May I go further? Are the reports available to the public?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: That is a twisted question again, Mr. Speaker. I do not mean "twisted" on purpose. I mean that a lot of these drugs are dropped, not on the basis of quality—

Mr. Pitman: What we are trying to do is to decide which ones are.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Parcost only deals with those which are adequate, effective and popular.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has the floor for a supplementary?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Are there any drugs that have been dropped because they were found to be of inferior quality?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I personally do not know of any, but there have been a number of drugs dropped because their quality may have been high but their efficacy may have been considered of minimal value and did not warrant being placed in Parcost.

There are other drugs that have been dropped where the confidence of the committee in the management of the firm and its procedures is inadequate to support their inclusion in the Parcost schedule.

Mr. Deans: Might I, by way of one final supplementary question, ask the minister if he would make himself aware of the reasons why the drugs were dropped? If there are drugs that were dropped because of inferior quality will he make the names of those drugs available to the public?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The question of adequate quality of a drug is still, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested, one which is happily and adequately dealt with at the federal level. Whether their quality is high enough or not high enough relates to their inclusion, or otherwise, in the federal index.

Mr. Deans: That is how the hon. minister finds out.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Right! From our point of view, we drop or do not drop a drug in that committee on the basis of the total overall opinion of the efficacy, the popularity of the drug and half a dozen other considerations, even including the confidence of members of our committees in the management and its general approach to its responsibilities as a manufacturer.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Does the minister believe that he has the legal authority to second-guess the responsibility of the federal government insofar as allowing drugs on to the market; because that is in fact what his committee is doing?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No Mr. Speaker, the federal government does not take this position either. The federal government is extremely gratified with the Parcost system. They equate on their index—I have forgotten what it is called—but their index is a very large and total index of all drugs that they know to be available to the Canadian people, whether it be one pill of its kind or a million of its kind.

They are not capable of doing what we are doing in Parcost. We are doing, on an inclusionary basis, an exercise that does not conflict in any way with their project in relation to hazard.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, does the minister believe that legal authority exists to discriminate as between specific drugs that the federal department has said are satisfactory to be marketed in Canada?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes Mr. Speaker, I think the jurisdiction constitutionally of this province and The Department of Health is adequate to allow us to have a very wide discretion in this field. But let me underline the fact that as between the federal Department of Health and Welfare and this department there is nothing but co-operation and admiration for the different jobs we are doing, one by one.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Speak for yourself.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, the federal people have told me they are extremely pleased with our Parcost programme.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

CONTROL OF GRAVEL PITS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Mines: Can he report to the House what progress his department has established in preparing legislation for the control of gravel pits; legislation having been promised on two previous occasions by his predecessor?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my only comment at this time can be that the matter is still under study.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Since the minister's predecessor promised the legislation for last fall and then this spring, can this minister not give us a more substantial undertaking that the House will have an opportunity to consider draft legislation within the next few weeks?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out just a moment ago, as a new minister, I want to look into all aspects of the problem. I intend to meet with both parties, both the operators of the pits and quarries and the municipalities, and in time we will have legislation brought before the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: In that time they will haul the country away!

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough.

PENSIONERS' FISHING PERMITS

Mr. Pitman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Lands and Forests whether he has received further letters of representation from pensioners who find that it is both inconvenient and difficult for them to get to the regional centres in order to get their fishing permits? Also, they do not wish the delay and possible loss of documents by dealing with his department through the mails.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought to my attention by our own members, and I hope that within the next few days I will be making a statement whereby it will be made much easier for those people.

Mr. Pitman: If I might ask a supplementary: Would the minister consider using a normal channel instead of those who are already selling fishing licences to get these permits out to old age pensioners?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in my statement which, as I mentioned, will be made within the next couple of days, this whole matter will be dealt with.

EXTRA PLACES AT UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Pitman: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of University Affairs.

Is it true that his department has requested the universities of the province to find places for some 3,500 extra units at the first year level at the universities?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): There are forecasts undertaken by my department, Mr. Speaker, and by the committee of presidents and we do anticipate a substantial increase in enrolment. I think the 3,500 may be related to the new requirement that entrants to teachers' colleges have one year in university. I think that is not the total increment in student population.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if the minister could indicate what the total increment is expected to be; how many units they will expect to have over what were projected; and how many of those will be teachers who will not have jobs at the end of June this year?

Hon. Mr. White: I will certainly get those figures, although I do not accept the implication of the last phrase.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the hon. minister when the colleges of applied arts and technology are going to be placed under formula financing, due to the fact he will soon be looking after these colleges under his department?

Hon. Mr. White: I would hope this could be done within the present fiscal year. That is to say I hope the plans will be made in the present fiscal year. The intention is to apply the same BIU value to colleges as to universities and rely on a factor to provide the necessary resources for different types of programmes.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that at Conestoga College they have not given any assurance to the staff as to whether they will be hired for the coming year until some policy on formula financing has been received from the department?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I have not been made aware of that.

Mr. Pitman: As a supplementary, I wonder if the minister would make immediate plans to indicate to the colleges of applied arts and technology exactly where they stand in this particular matter?

Hon. Mr. White: I think that should be directed to the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch), who has this responsibility at the present time.

Mr. Pitman: As a supplementary, could the minister indicate when he intends to introduce legislation into this Legislature which will place the colleges of applied arts and technology under his direction?

Hon. Mr. White: Some time this year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Time is running out!

Mr. Singer: Is the member finished?

Mr. Pitman: No. I wonder if I could ask the Minister of University Affairs again whether he has made any decision regarding the nursing colleges across the province, in view of the fact that they too are going to be brought into the colleges of applied arts and technology? Has the final policy been made; and if so have negotiations begun with the various nursing colleges across the province?

Hon. Mr. White: The government policy will be made known in due course.

Mr. Pitman: Could the minister assure this House that before government policy is announced he will make some efforts to find out what the will and desire of the nursing colleges actually is in this province?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, indeed I will. My sister is my primary adviser. She is at St. Joseph's Hospital where she teaches nursing and she preaches to me every weekend so I am keeping informed in this and other ways.

Mr. Pitman: Could the minister indicate in what ways other than his sister—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked sufficient supplementary questions.

Mr. Pitman: —will be the means by which he is going to discover the minds of those directing the nursing colleges across this province?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thought I would invite the head of the college of nurses to have lunch with me one day soon.

Mr. Pitman: Could the minister indicate whether he will be willing to have—

Mr. Speaker: I have ruled there have been sufficient supplementaries on this subject.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: This is getting into a debate. Has the member for Peterborough further questions?

Mr. Pitman: I have a further supplementary.

Hon. Mr. White: On that last question, Mr. Speaker, I have been the principal defender of nurses here for 12 years and I am not going to do anything to upset those nice women and girls.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

CLEANUP OF MERCURY POLLUTION

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

In light of the recent most positive statement made by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) to the effect that there is a known scientific system of removing mercury from our waterways, could the Minister of Lands and Forests reconcile that statement with the statement contained in a recent pamphlet called "Fishermen—about Mercury and Fish," that he recently tabled, which states—there are no page numbers in it, but states on the second last page:

The Ontario Water Resources Commission is studying the feasibility of dredging mercury deposits from lake and river bottoms. Other methods, such as physically covering mercury deposits or chemically deactivating them have been proposed but it is not yet known if any of these might be successful. Unless some method of stopping the movement of mercury out of the bottom sediments is developed, the mercury problem is likely to be with us for years to come.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Can the minister reconcile that statement, which is a direct negation of the statement made by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management? Is the point correct? Which minister is right?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): It is not a question.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a question to ask one of the ministers under whose authority that statement was made.

An hon. member: Ask both of them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has the floor.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question! On a point of order!

Mr. Speaker: It is a supplementary question or is it a point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to ask of the Speaker if the member for Brantford is recognized by way of supplementary or original question.

Mr. Speaker: Original question.

Mr. Bullbrook: I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Lands and Forests. Would the minister advise whether he, or any part of his ministry, was consulted in connection with the words of that pamphlet, in connection with that part of the lawsuit against Dow Chemical of Canada Limited requesting a mandatory order for them to remove the mercury from the bed of the St. Clair River?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this little pamphlet is a publication of our department, but there was further consultation between The Department of Health, The Department of Tourism and Information, The Department of Energy and Resources Management and our own.

Mr. Bullbrook: A supplementary: Will the minister please reconcile for the members of this House how his department can make a statement that there is no known scientifically proven method of removing the mercury and the request, through litigation of the department of the Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), to have a company in this province remove it forthwith?

Mr. Speaker: Well of course this is the same question in a little different terms that I ruled was not in order before. The member for Brantford has the floor.

COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Now that his department is responsible for compensating the commercial fishermen, can the minister indicate when the Lake Erie commercial fishermen are going to get full and adequate compensation for the damage they suffered as a result of mercury pollution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I cannot.

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary: Can the minister indicate when he can give an answer? We have been asking this question in the House just about every week—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. Makarchuk: But I have not got an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Any more supplementaries? The member for Oxford has the floor.

EXTENSION OF CAPITAL GRANTS

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Would the minister inform the House if the capital grant system inaugurated by his department will be extended to include the planting of trees and windbreaks to replace those that are currently being cut down?

Mr. Nixon: There is a good proposal.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No Mr. Speaker, we have not given consideration to that. The simple matter is that The Department of Lands and Forests provides trees for windbreaks at a very nominal fee of one cent per tree. I really do not think a person requires a capital grant when the cost of planting the trees is one cent per tree.

Mr. Nixon: That only replaces mature trees with trees four inches high.

Mr. Innes: A supplementary: Would the minister not agree that it seems feasible to replace the ones that he is currently cutting down with new trees?

Mr. Nixon: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of University Affairs has the answer to a question asked yesterday.

PENTAGON GRANTS TO ONTARIO UNIVERSITIES

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, in response to the questions raised yesterday by the members for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) and Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr) concerning university research financed by United States government agencies, I have obtained the following information:

1. The committee of presidents has recommended to all the provincially-supported universities that they accept research funds only for academic work that can be published. Universities do not as a rule undertake research of a classified nature, though many of the projects accepted are understandably rather too technical for a layman to understand.

2. A survey of the 14 provincially assisted universities reveals that at Brock, Carleton, Lakehead, Laurentian and Trent, no research has been financed by U.S. government funds. At Queen's the amount is nil or negligible. Guelph has received $20,600 from the U.S. Department of Health for research on pollution and Waterloo has $25,000 from two agencies for pollution studies.

Out of a total of over $6 million in research funds, Western receives $80,000 from U.S. government sources, including $62,000 from The Department of Health and $18,000 from NASA. York receives approximately $250,000 from NASA and from the U.S. Army and Navy for unclassified research, the results of which are available for publication. As might be expected, the University of Toronto has the lion's share of research projects funded by the United States government agencies, a total of $491,920 for unclassified research, ranging from a NASA-sponsored study of the molecular dynamics of atmosphere reactions to a Department of Interior project on the role of sludge worms in promoting entrophication.

I have a detailed list from the University of Toronto if the members wish to expand their scientific vocabulary. Reports are still to be received from McMaster, Ottawa and Windsor.

I think, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record guidelines for publication of research established by the committee of the presidents of universities of Ontario. This is a quotation from the Monthly Review of October, 1970.

The guidelines point out the importance for the universities and societies of publishing research results, to ensure maintaining universal accessibility to new knowledge and a free flow of ideas and observations. It is recognized that there may sometimes be legitimate reasons for deferring publication of research findings for a reasonable period, but this should be subject to an explicit agreement acceptable to the university, the researcher and the research sponsor.

There may also be the need to protect confidentiality of broad data used for research. Again, this should be subject to clear agreement on terms and conditions for publishing data in aggregate form.

On the basis of these considerations, the committee of presidents has recommended to all the provincially-supported universities in Ontario, and to all sponsors of research in universities, as a general guideline:

1. That neither sponsors nor universities attempt to enter into agreements which will formally involve universities in conducting academic work which cannot be published. Any exception to this principle should be subjected to the most formal review procedure between the university and the agency concerned.

2. That the sponsors be entitled to request and be granted a reasonable delay in publication where such delay is in the interests of the sponsor.

3. In instances where university researchers are to be given access to confidential data, the terms and conditions of their use be specified in advance.

This, I think, indicates once again Mr. Speaker, that the universities are able to manage these matters internally in a better way than we could do from a centrally based position here at Queen's Park. In the process, of course, they have kept their autonomy, which constitutes an independent source of observation and critique for society.

Mr. Speaker: In Mr. Speaker's opinion, this is the type of answer to a question which should be a ministerial statement. I will, therefore, add four minutes onto the period of the question time which was taken by this statement.

The member for Windsor West.

Hon. Mr. White: They cannot use the 45 minutes they have!

APPLICATION FOR ODC LOAN

Mr. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development, of which I have given notice: Has Ontario Development Corporation received application for either a conventional or performance loan from a firm located in Tilbury known as Rods and Wires Specialty Limited, or its parent, Stall Manufacturing Company?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question.

I am advised by ODC they have no record of any application for a loan by either of the companies mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

GRAVEL COMPANY PERMITS

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Mines: Is it correct that on Friday last he signed the permits to allow two gravel-taking companies to take sand and gravel from the bed of Lake Erie off Point Pelee National Park and that their areas have been moved further out into the lake, yet the total quantity in cubic yards that they can take has been cut by 30 per cent? Further, has the minister given them the right to explore other parts of Lake Erie for this same purpose?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paterson: A supplementary: Has the minister, or will the minister consult with The Department of Lands and Forests and the Lake Erie commercial fishermen before making any further moves in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will be reviewing the renewal of this licence in three months and I will certainly consult with The Department of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

LETTER FROM STUDENTS' COUNCIL

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs. Has the minister received a letter from Mr. G. E. Painter of the Althouse students council at the University of Western Ontario, in which Mr. Painter states that at the time of writing—April 15, 1971—"40 per cent of the students at this college have not found a position for the academic year 1971-1972." This is in reference to teachers, Mr. Speaker. If the minister has received such a letter would he care to comment on that 40 per cent figure in the light of the remark made by the former Deputy Minister of Education that there was no teacher surplus? Secondly, is the minister intending to attend this particular meeting, the meeting Mr. Painter requested that he or a spokesman attend at the college on Tuesday, April 27?

Hon. Mr. White: I am very sorry—

An hon. member: He did not even know the member was asking him a question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I missed that question.

Mr. T. Reid: I have a question of the rather sleepy Minister of—

An hon. member: Boy, what a deadhead!

Another hon. member: Another penalty!

Another hon. member: Instead of cutting dead elm trees they should cut the dead-wood over there.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of University Affairs. Has the minister received a letter from Mr. G. E. Painter of the Althouse student council at the University of Western Ontario—which I believe is in London—in which Mr. Painter states that at the time of writing, April 15, 1971, approximately 40 per cent of the students at this college have not found a position for the academic year, 1971 and 1972. If the minister has received this letter or has knowledge of this letter, would he comment on that 40 per cent figure in the light of the former Deputy Minister of Education's statement, as reported in the press last week, that there is no teacher shortage? Secondly, does the minister intend to accept the invitation from the Althouse student council to participate in a debate there on Tuesday, April 27, concerning teacher supply and demand in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have had letters on this subject and I really think I have had one from Mr. Painter, in which case a reply is being prepared for him. I would certainly be glad to enter into a dialogue—I do not know that I am in a position to debate the matter because I do not hold a view different from their own. I would welcome an opportunity to have such a dialogue at Althouse or elsewhere.

This is a situation not unique to the teaching profession. In other words, we observe that the rudimentary state of the arts in forecasting the need for members of various professions and vocations, coupled with the very considerable time lag, results in very serious imbalances between supply and demand.

Mr. Nixon: All the resources of OISE cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. White: I think we must find a way to predict needs for professional and well trained vocational persons in a way which we have not yet succeeded in doing. I am going to ask that this be done, either within my department or by the committee on university affairs, or perhaps by COPSE; I do not know yet. I do want to do that in the very near future so that these imbalances can to some extent be alleviated.

As I say, it is not confined only to the teaching profession, although one observes a critical imbalance in that profession this year.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, if I might: Would the minister care to comment on the steps that his predecessor might have taken eight years ago when he had joint responsibility for education and university affairs, to have forecast this type of total imbalance in the supply of teachers at the secondary school level and the demand for them?

Secondly, if that is too tough for the minister, what steps does the minister intend to take concerning the careers and future prospects of the 60 per cent of the students at Althouse College who do not have a job right now, a job promised or lined up right now?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think that my predecessor might have been criticized had he known eight years ago that Prime Minister Trudeau and the government in Ottawa were going to plunge seven per cent of our people out of work!

Mr. Pitman: What has that got to do with it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Answer the question.

Mr. Pitman: What a ridiculous point of view.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is all Edgar Benson's fault.

Hon. Mr. White: It has everything to do with it.

Mr. Pitman: Do tell us exactly how unemployment relates to the number of children in school?

Hon. Mr. White: Because of unemployment we are in the process of foregoing billions of dollars in gross national product and we are foregoing in this province hundreds of millions of dollars in government revenue.

Mr. Pitman: But the kids are still in school.

Hon. Mr. White: We have had to tighten our belts in a way that would not otherwise have been the case.

Mr. Singer: What kind of an answer is that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a supplementary?

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question? Could the minister indicate the exact relationship between inflation, Mr. Trudeau and the fact that 60 per cent of the young people at Althouse college are not going to have jobs next year?

Mr. Deans: Budget speech!

Mr. Speaker: This is not supplementary. The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

TOMATO PASTE PRODUCTS

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food regarding tomato paste products, of which 140,000 tons are being imported into Canada annually: Has the minister considered or explored the possibility of interesting Ontario processing plants—especially in Essex county perhaps—in turning out tomato paste products as a means of expanding our home tomato industry?

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): It is all Lester Pearson's fault.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I did not hear the product to which the hon. member was referring. We cannot hear it over here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: My question is regarding tomato paste products; tomato paste products!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: Has the hon. member the question now? About 140,000 tons are being imported into Canada annually. Has the minister explored the possibility of interesting Ontario processing plants, especially in Essex county I should suggest, in turning out tomato paste products as a means of expanding the market for home-grown tomatoes?

Mr. Breithaupt: Another four-minute penalty.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have given a great deal of consideration to that.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister did not know anything about it two seconds ago.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think there is enough time left in the question period to do that. I understand that the product is coming in from European countries where it is produced under labour rates that are much less than our labour rates, and it is simply not possible to produce the product in this country—so our tomato growers tell us—at those competitive prices.

A great deal of thought was given to this matter and we had hoped, quite frankly, that there could be some arrangements made whereby a good deal of that imported tomato paste could be replaced with home-grown products.

Mr. Nixon: Seize it and burn it.

Mr. Singer: If the minister only had a tomato paste marketing board!

Mr. Nixon: That will be Bill 11.

Mr. Singer: Good idea!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We would hope that something can be done. But we do not have that control or authority, for the simple reason that the Tomato Marketing Board say they cannot produce tomatoes at a price to meet the competition. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Paterson: Has The Department of Agriculture and Food done any surveys among the farmers themselves, say in Essex and Kent counties, to see if they in fact would be willing to grow extra acreage for the purposes of tomato paste production?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friends opposite know full well, we have marketing boards in this province, and included among them is the Tomato Marketing Board. That board has held a series of meetings, and I learned from public statements that have been made by members of the board that the price factor simply makes it uncompetitive; they cannot compete. They have no notion of lowering the price of tomatoes to where they can compete with these imported products.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. Breithaupt: Make succotash!

PURCHASE OF LAND ON MANITOULIN ISLAND

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to inform the House as to the progress of negotiations between the parks integration board, the ARDA branch, The Department of Public Works and the Ontario Paper Company with respect to the purchase of several thousands of acres of land on Manitoulin Island?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at the last meeting of the parks integration board. The boards are very much in favour of this land, which has a lot of recreation and timber values. At the present time we have asked public works to look further into the matter and this is where the matter stands. It is under very active consideration. As soon as we are in a position to give the hon. members information we will be pleased to do so.

Mr. Nixon: Will that be a park or two!

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Farquhar: Is the minister aware that the rumour mill is working overtime right now? It would be very pleasant to be able to advise the local people and resolve the local concern. Is he aware that if the negotiations are not successful, the government will have lost its last chance to acquire or obtain property on the island for public recreation, of which there is none at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I can fully appreciate the concern of the local people, but as the hon. member is aware—he knows that area very well—we are dealing with a tremendously large area, thousands and thousands of acres, with a large expenditure involved. Under those circumstances it takes a little time to be able to come to a final decision.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

LAKEHEAD UNIVERSITY FORESTRY COURSE EXTENSION

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs. Has the minister received representations from Lakehead University to extend the two-year forestry course into a complete four-year course? If so, what does the minister intend to do about it?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, yes, I have received these submissions from the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs and from the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman)—

Mr. Stokes: Has the minister had any from the university?

Hon. Mr. White: —and from interested parties at the Lakehead. The matter is under review at the present time, and I hope to be able to announce a decision within the next week.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

SWEEP PROGRAMME APPLICATIONS

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests. I wonder if the minister could give the House an updated report on how the programme SWEEP for student unemployment is progressing inasmuch as it affects his department, and whether there is still time for students, from the Port Arthur riding for example, to apply for those positions?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, we would be very pleased to receive names and addresses of students in the Port Arthur area who would be interested in working in the SWEEP programme.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary; May I take it from the minister's reply then that there has not been a rush for these positions and that there is an ample number still available?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the demand for employment far exceeds the amount of positions available. However we are still receiving applications, and as I mentioned earlier we would be pleased to look after those that the hon. member will submit to us.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sarnia.

ORAL REPRESENTATIONS TO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: Presuming that the Premier is aware that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council is the final court of appeal in connection with the setting of rates by the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and presuming that the Premier is aware that the corporation counsel of the city of Sarnia has appealed to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, am I correct in assuming that it is the policy of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, in matters of this nature, not to hear oral representations from the appellants or respondents in this connection?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been a limited number of appeals since I have been a member of the executive council. The policy has been that whether the appeal is from the OWRC—the majority of appeals, really, are from the Ontario Municipal Board—the policy has been, and I think properly so, not to hear oral evidence from anyone involved. The decisions have been related to the material that has been supplied to the executive council.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a supplementary question: In view of the comments recently published by the former hon. Justice McRuer in connection with appeal and trial de novo rights before administrative tribunals, would the Premier consider changing the policy to equate it with the normal judicial policy in connection with final appeals?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course we are going to look at everything that Mr. Justice McRuer has set out in his report. I should point out, though, I think perhaps there can be some difference established between a normal tribunal and the executive council of the Province of Ontario; and I might even interject here that consideration might be extended to whether appeals should in fact come to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. This, to me, is a matter the government will be taking a look at.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, do I understand—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period, as extended, has expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. White moves that the Legislature's committee on human resources be asked to examine the costs of post-secondary education as they are currently reflected in the estimates of The Department of University Affairs and The Department of Education and for which the Minister of University Affairs and the Minister of Education are directly accountable to this House, including the funds provided to universities, colleges of applied arts and technology and related institutions; and that the committee be encouraged to invite officials of The Department of University Affairs, The Department of Education, the committee on university affairs, the council of regents and other interested representatives to appear before the committee as the committee may decide.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments on the motion put by the Minister of University Affairs, which in a very real sense is complementary and supplements the motion put by the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) on Friday.

I am grateful that the Minister of University Affairs, unlike his counterpart on Friday, provided the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) with a copy of this motion at approximately 2:15 so that I could have a chance to make some short, but thoughtful remarks I hope.

The essential point we wish to make on this side is that there is now even more reason for the standing committee on human resources to have independent research staff resources available to it. The motion put in the House on Friday made it imperative, in our opinion, for that committee to be able to hire people whom they considered to be removed from the vested interests of protecting the various departments of government, and to have those people prepare studies for the committee independent of the civil service, and independent of ministerial control if you like.

I would like to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, because I think we may eventually have to have a ruling on this, that in the opinion of the Premier (Mr. Davis) in his remarks in the House on March 31, on page 60 of Hansard, that it should be possible, unless I misinterpret him badly, for the standing committee on human resources to hire, and have a budget to hire, independent researchers.

Let me put this into the record. The minister said this:

I would say . . . there is nothing in the initial resolution—the resolution establishing the committees—that precludes, if the need arises, if it makes sense to do so, the acquisition of staff as it relates to specific situations.

I am going to ask the hon. Minister of University Affairs if this is what he would like to have the committee do as well. The reason I put it this way, Mr. Speaker, is that in this House on Friday the Minister of Education equivocated on this very important issue of the standing committee having independent research staff, and the budget that must go with it, under its control. Because the minister stated, and I am reading this from uncorrected Hansard; I quote directly:

I think the organization of the standing committee on human resources itself, and the staff that it will require, will have to be determined by the committee.

Thus far, it looks as though the Minister of Education is agreeing with what the Premier said on March 31. But then the Minister of Education started shying away from the plea that we are making for an independent research staff. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Education stated this:

Keep in mind that there are very competent people on staff—

by which I believe he meant his department—

—who can be of some assistance if only you will bring them up and help to explain the operation.

He continues:

I can imagine that you would bring before you the head of the grants section to explain the grants system—

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member we are now debating a motion with respect to the committee on university affairs, not the motion that was introduced and passed by this House on Friday, and I would ask that he return to the motion before the House.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The point I wished to make very simply is that there seems to be a feeling of equivocation on the part of the ministry that the committee will not be able to have a budget and not have the authority to hire outside management consultants and accountants. So I would like to ask the Minister of University Affairs if, in terms of his motion presented before us today, he envisualizes and welcomes the committee on human resources—

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is this “envisualizes”?

Mr. Nixon: It is a new word; a very good word! Does the Premier not understand it?

Mr. T. Reid: Well I must say the Minister of University Affairs probably had his eyes closed during question period, and I am asking him to keep his eyes open and keep an open mind, if you like.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would just like to know what the member meant by “envisualize.”

Mr. Singer: It is a new word.

Mr. T. Reid: I said “and visualize” the possibility, and does he recommend that we have independent research staff for that committee so that we can check out some of the rather pernicious and misleading research that went on by members of The Department of University Affairs last year in preparing totally misleading documents; concerning, for example, the degree of accessibility of various low-income groups to the university system of the province?

The former Minister of University Affairs appeared in this House last year and presented this political document prepared by a civil servant to justify, in my opinion, his own beliefs in the matter of accessibility. I say to the Minister of University Affairs—

Hon. Mr. Davis: And because the member did not agree with it he did not like it.

Mr. T. Reid: —if I can get over the rather inane remarks being put forward by the Premier and speak to the present Minister of University Affairs, who I think might be a little more sensitive in this area, because he has less to protect—

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not right.

Mr. T. Reid: I say to him that we in the Liberal Party distrust the way in which the former Minister of University Affairs used the civil servants to do research of a political nature in this province, and our plea to the present Minister of University Affairs is to stand up in this place and say, in his opinion, it will be right and proper for the committee on human resources to have a sufficient budget and to have the decision-making power to hire independent researchers to assist us as private members of this House in examining the cost of post-secondary education in this province.

I make that point, sir, and I will leave it, but I will present an amendment to the motion at the appropriate time.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: What is the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) mumbling about? Speak up!

Mr. T. Reid: There are two other points, Mr. Speaker, that we want to put before the people of this province, and certainly to the other opposition members in this House.

We find that the motion put before us now, as the motion put before us concerning The Department of Education is still too restrictive to allow that committee to look into the interrelationships between various cost factors of education. I will point out, to give credit where credit is due, that in the motion that the Minister of University Affairs put before us today he recognizes the necessity to examine the cross-relationships between, say the community colleges and the vocational branches of the secondary schools near those community colleges. I say that we welcome that. It is a positive step and we will look into it.

I would like to quote, sir, from this motion, to underline a very specific word that is of concern to us. It says:

That the Legislature's committee on human resources be asked to examine the costs of post-secondary education as they are currently reflected in the estimates of The Department of University Affairs and The Department of Education and for which the Minister of University Affairs and the Minister of Education are directly accountable to this House.

There are two words that bother me. The most significant one is the use of that word "directly." I would like to know what the Minister of University Affairs means by that word, "directly"? Does this mean that if the chairman of the standing committee on human resources believes that something we in the opposition side wish to look into is not directly involved, that cannot be considered by the committee?

For example, tomorrow we are going to have the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation before the committee at 10 o'clock in the morning. Is the chairman going to look at this resolution and the one that the Minister of Education put forward and say that we cannot discuss those things that he, the chairman, believes to be only indirectly related to education and The Department of University Affairs—in other words, rule out areas, if you like, of private financing of universities?

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I would like know what the minister means by that word "directly." Perhaps that word could be deleted from it.

The other word that bothers me there—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Semantics.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to talk to the Minister of University Affairs, because he is listening.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So am I. What does the hon. member mean by the last reference?

Mr. T. Reid: Look, the Premier gave up that job; let me talk to his colleague.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not give it up.

Mr. T. Reid: I have a feeling universities might have someone here who has an open mind, unlike the last eight years.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will continue to address himself to the resolution on the floor of the House.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to address myself to the resolution and to the present Minister of University Affairs, who has a potential—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will address himself to any minister through the chair.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I believe that your ears are always open and I respect what you say.

The other point in the resolution concerns the wording, "currently reflected in the estimates of The Department of University Affairs and The Department of Education." Why that use of the word "currently?" I would like the minister to clarify what he means by that word.

Hon. E. A. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): It means "here and now."

Mr. T. Reid: I think it is a very important word. Mr. Speaker, I think we could end up with four meetings, for the next four weeks, of the standing committee on human resources in which we just debate these types of things. The chairman will say, "That is not current, that is not direct;" and we will say, "It is current, it is direct." What a waste of time!

I think the minister could clarify for us now, and in fact give direction to the chairman of the committee on human resources, so that the committee will not have this picayune discussion in the standing committee on human resources.

Mr. Speaker, the final point, which is of less importance than the other two points, is that there are such areas as the schools of nursing and their relationship to the universities and to the community colleges or the colleges of applied arts and technology. There are the agricultural colleges and their developing relationship with the colleges of fine arts and technology. There are these types of relationships which I hope are not excluded by the minister's motion put before us right now.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would conclude by saying that I assume the best of motives by the Minister of University Affairs, unlike some other people I know, he is interested—and I am going to give him credit for this—trying to get at some of the complicated cross-relationships or duplications between fragmented authorities in education and manpower training. I give the hon. minister credit for that.

Nevertheless, we feel very strongly on this side that the motion should be amended and so I move, seconded by the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman), that the motion—correct me if my wording is wrong, sir—that the motion placed be amended by adding the words: "And that adequate budget and independent research staff be provided."

Mr. Speaker: Mr. T. Reid, seconded by Mr. B. Newman, moves an amendment to the motion by Mr. White that the following words be added to the motion:

And that adequate budget and independent research staff be provided.

The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support that change in the resolution. I must say that I too am rather concerned with the way in which this motion has been set out. I would like particularly to hear from the Minister of University Affairs exactly what is meant by the term "currently."

I noticed, for example, that on Friday, April 16, on a motion from the Minister of Education dealing with The Department of Education, that the Legislature's committee on human resources be asked to examine the cost of education "as they are reflected in the estimates"—not "currently reflected," but simply "reflected."

In other words, we have two different motions—one with the word "currently" and the other without the word "currently." The hon. minister might say that we are equivocating and this is simply fiddling around with a particular term. But I think it is more than that. I am concerned that this committee does not simply become another estimates committee.

I would like to ask, if we are dealing with the estimates of 1970-1971, which are before the House at this present moment. They are the only estimates that can be before the House. The budget has not been presented; it will not be presented until Monday, therefore there are no estimates for 1971-1972. One must possibly assume then that the committee will find itself dealing with estimates which are long past and are virtually irrelevant.

If indeed the minister assumes that—he can scarcely assume that, because we are meeting on Wednesday, before the budget is presented. If we are going to be taking next year's estimates, one might well wonder what point there is in having a second estimates committee dealing with the same subjects, going over the same materials, the only difference being that we will have before it members of the various departments, particularly as expressed in this motion, "officials of The Department of University Affairs, The Department of Education, the committee of university affairs, the council of regents and other representatives."

But, Mr. Speaker, we have already been around that course. Two years ago we had just exactly that situation when we dealt with the estimates of The Department of Education in committee, and there were representatives of these various departments. I think that it is incumbent upon the minister to indicate exactly what is meant. What are we dealing with? It seems to me that it is totally outside the expectations of this side of the House if we are simply going over the estimates of the present year or even the past year.

Surely what we should be looking at is what has happened to the costs of education for the last 10 years. We know they have risen. We know that the people in Ontario are concerned about the rise in cost, and indeed for the next 10 years. In some sense we are overlapping what is going on at the present time in the commission which has been set up—the commission on post-secondary education, chaired by Dr. Douglas Wright, because they are dealing with that as well. One wonders why that commission has been totally left out of this motion as well; although I presume that in the rather narrow expectations of this committee we can scarcely be expected to dovetail anything we are doing with what is being done by that commission, which would have been going on for the last number of months.

At the same time, I do want to hear from the Minister of University Affairs exactly what he reads into the wording, the study and examining of “the costs of post-secondary education as they are currently reflected in the estimates of The Department of University Affairs.”

I am also concerned about the question of function, as I have stated, Mr. Speaker, for some time, on this whole matter of this committee dealing with cost of education. To deal with cost without understanding the functions of these institutions is pointless, and the present Prime Minister realizes that as well as anybody else.

For that reason I am a little concerned about the narrowness of the determination that we should be dealing simply with costs. I would say to the minister who introduced this legislation that we bring in people, not just from his Department of University Affairs and the committee on university affairs, but from the universities themselves, to come before us and tell us what is being done in terms of programme in universities and in colleges of applied arts and technology.

What is wrong in this province is that we do not relate the cost of education to the programmes that are involved in the educational process. What is outraging the people of Ontario is not essentially the cost of education. They just cannot see any general philosophy or direction or purpose for their educational system. Of course, most of all they are outraged by the way we collect educational costs, and I know that is beyond the purview of this resolution.

But I say to the minister that I would hope that he would mean that we could bring before this committee members of the administration of various colleges of applied arts and technology and members of the administration of teachers' colleges who are not even mentioned in this setting. The nurses' colleges might be useful, too.

I would certainly hope we could bring before this committee, people from the universities and the various departments of the universities, from the post-graduate departments of universities, from the extension departments of universities. Let us find out what the functions of these institutions are and get some kind of reaction as to what the function should be. Then we can determine whether the costs are rational and reasonable; or whether there is duplication, whether there is pointless activity, whether, indeed, these institutions are carrying out functions which have no relationship to what the people of Ontario want or expect.

I would hope that that is what we will do on Wednesday when we talk to the officials of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. I am not interested in going over the budget of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. I am interested in seeing what exactly that institution is doing in the various phases of its programme and how the activities of that institute relate directly to the needs of the teachers and the young people and the parents, the people of Ontario.

Unless this committee is going into that kind of an examination, I say we will do no service to the people of this province simply by trying to find headline-catching sums of money that have been spent by this university or that college of applied arts and technology. I am not interested in that game; I am not interested in that ploy. I am interested in seeing what is being done in education in Ontario, what it is costing and what value we are getting from the particular process.

I would hope that we can take a look, not just in terms of the estimates, but what is wrong with the estimates, Mr. Speaker. Why I worry about this particular resolution is that we can never find out what goes on within those estimates. As the Prime Minister knows we have been trying to find out what really has been going on between the various colleges of applied arts and technology and how it breaks down within these colleges.

I am afraid we will need a great deal more information. That is why I am attracted by the motion of the member for Scarborough East. We do need, I think, a great deal of research. We do need a great deal of information and statistics which are not available in the estimate books, either currently or past, to refer back to the problem I have already expressed.

So I appeal to the minister to be very specific in the next few moments as to what he means by this motion and what he believes will be the role of this committee, because his words will be listened to very carefully. We intend to use these words when we come before this committee in the days ahead, as he brings various people before that committee, so that we will not be restricted in asking the kinds of questions which must be asked, if there is going to be any real understanding.

Certainly, organizations have expressed their interest to me in having the opportunity to present themselves before this committee and of articulating what they believe to be the needs of this educative society. That is what they want to do. They are not interested simply in playing about with dollars and cents. They are essentially interested in showing how their function relates to the needs of education in the Province of Ontario. That includes the employment needs; it includes the needs of the spirit and the intellect for the people of Ontario.

So I call upon the minister to make some reaction to the remarks that have been made here this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment that has been placed before this House. I think we are living in a new age, and a new province. In discussion or dialogue with the young people of this province especially, one of the great frustrations facing this group is the red tape and the bind-up of our—

Mr. Singer: Revolution raises its head!

Mr. J. R. Smith:—present governmental system. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the new committee structures as they were being introduced to this House would provide a free forum of discussion. One of the most unfortunate aspects of our present committee system is the fact that it divides the committee into two factions. The adversaries are the opposition and, usually, the defenders are the government members. Mr. Speaker, we operate in this chamber—

Mr. Pitman: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Smith:—under the British parliamentary system, whereby the defeat of the government is considered a time for resignation. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to have really meaningful government, at the grass roots level, surely at the committee stage of our legislation there should be a free forum for all members of these committees to discuss and present constructive criticisms and programmes to the committee, together with those of the community at large around about us, so we can enter into these committees, whether it is for an afternoon, or a morning or a weekend or whatever it is, tour the province, and have available to us independent advisers and management consultants and so on.

This does not exist at present and so you get this sort of adversary position. We rush into the committees; the whips are there counting heads, checking off lists. All three parties, Mr. Speaker, are guilty of this. The notes go hither and yon through this building, "Bring in the members; there is going to be a vote." It is basic and elementary.

Mr. Peacock: Very eloquent!

Mr. J. R. Smith: This is wrong, because we do not get these grass roots positive suggestions coming forward. Mr. Speaker, one of the major things that really has stirred me was the appointment of a man I hold in very high esteem and regard—

Mr. Nixon: He is going to be a Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Singer: Put him in early.

Mr. J. R. Smith:—as one of the foremost educators of this century, Dr. McCarthy, to head this special committee. Because, Mr. Speaker, what really bothered me was the fact that here was a man—and I have full respect and confidence in him—who is investigating his previous department.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now not speaking to the motion.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of school costs and programmes, what we have done, what we are doing at present and where we are going are of the utmost concern to the people of this province. Unless we, as a committee, are going to be permitted to have independent, objective assistants—not just a secretary who is sent up from the Clerk's department to take down the minutes and a clerk who usually cannot even take it down in shorthand—we are hamstrung.

Basically one of our problems in our society and our parliamentary system is that we as members are ruled by the technocrats of the civil service. This is something that is discussed by everyone. It is not just here in this jurisdiction; this is something that is peculiar to many western jurisdictions—the power of the technocrats. It is no longer the power of the landlords or the scientists; it is purely the technocrats in the administrative decision-making part of our government.

To bring some rebirth, a ray of hope and promise into our province, the committees such as we have in this Legislature need the substance and backing and independent adjudication or thought of some of these resource people. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we are going to go back into the same old cycle and routine.

Mr. Pitman: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Smith: We want to have an exciting dialogue. I do not want to enter these committees in the position of defending my government, because there are many things—most of the programmes of this government and its concepts, its principles—for which I am very proud to be associated with our government and I am a defender of its leader. But I think that party politics should not enter at the committee stage for every hour, every minute of the debate. We are here to do the people's business; to speak for the people of our constituencies and the general good of the people of Ontario at large and this nation. Anything that can be done to provide us with assistance to help us reach a rational and just decision in our deliberations is to the benefit of all.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I hope that now all three parties have urged on the administration the acceptance of this resolution, that it—

Mr. Stokes: He did not get much support from his colleagues over there.

Mr. Nixon: —will, in fact, be accepted unanimously on all sides. It seems to me that the amendment is the crux of the whole new approach to the committee system. I have had the feeling in recent days that the administration would like at least the appearance of a new approach to effective committee discussion and examination of a number of programmes, either referred to it by the Legislature or initiated by the committees themselves. Still there is the statement that has been made by the Premier and backed up by the Minister of Education that the research into education costs is going to be conducted under the leadership of the former deputy minister, Dr. McCarthy. There are those who feel, quite rightly and very strenuously, that this sort of research conducted by one of the men leading in the development of the programme itself cannot possibly be as effective as it might be if the examination were undertaken impartially.

Certainly the thought that has been put forward in the last week during these continuing discussions on the committee system by the Premier, that there is ample staff available in the various departments that might come under consideration by the committees, is inadequate. While these people are well motivated, they obviously have a predisposition to argue in favour of decisions that they had a part of and to simply convince those who would perhaps remain unconvinced of the efficacy and efficiency of the programme as it presently is.

My own feeling is that if we are going to consider the committee system as workable and as effective and as meaningful, I would hope that the Premier opposite, and the decision made by him in the next few minutes, would be to support this amendment. I think it is offered with the expectation that it would be in the best interests of the public work that we undertake here in this House and in the committees that we are endeavouring to improve. I sincerely hope that it will be thus supported on all sides.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to enter the discussion? Does the Prime Minister wish to speak before the minister?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just very briefly to speak to the amendment. The Minister of University Affairs will reply to some of the other matters raised. It is not the intention of the government, obviously, to adopt the amendment to the resolution. Firstly, it is unnecessary; secondly, it is really within the scope of the committee to make these determinations. We went all through this argument some few days ago, and as I stated, Mr. Speaker, at the time the initial resolution was introduced, there was nothing to preclude the committee moving in the direction that is being discussed.

Mr. Stokes: The member for Hamilton Mountain does not think so.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just a minute.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, before the member for Scarborough East wished to make some further observations, I was in the process of saying that my remarks earlier in the session indicated very clearly that the initial resolution, or the resolution that we are discussing today, did not preclude the committee, if it so determined and wished, from moving in this direction. I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, it has to relate to the desire on the part of the committee, and the committee has to make this determination. I think this is obvious.

Mr. Nixon: The House should specifically give them this power.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest as I listened to the member for Peterborough, who tended to support this resolution, but who took, I think, a very different approach as to the function of the committee and the desire to get into the relationship and function of some of the educational institutions—not just related to cost matters—surely this is, hopefully, something the committee will do, because to me it is completely relevant and, with great respect to the amendment moved by the member—

Mr. Stokes: The member for Peterborough is always relevant.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly, I have always said that.

I have always said that, but I will not answer for the Minister of University Affairs to the member for Scarborough East as to an interpretation of the wording. I would only observe, having read it here, that it is abundantly clear there is no question as to what is included.

I would say to the member for Peterborough, when the term "current" is used, this is in the resolution partially to resolve the problem as it relates to the present position of the community college programmes within the existing estimates of The Department of Education which are in the process of transferral into The Department of University Affairs. So the resolution is so comprehensive that there can be no debate whatsoever, surely, as to the desire to have all of these institutions available for discussion by the standing committee. So, Mr. Speaker, as I say—and I had the words quoted to me by the member for Scarborough East—there is nothing in the resolution here, that has not been presented by the Minister of University Affairs. So the government quite obviously will not be supporting the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier missed the point too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No I did not.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: I would like to ask a question. I suppose it should be of the Prime Minister—perhaps it could be answered by—

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister, having spoken once in this debate, is not entitled to speak again.

Mr. Peacock: I understood, Mr. Speaker, that a question is always in order.

Mr. Stokes: We give unanimous consent.

Mr. Peacock: As there are no estimates now before the House, which year's estimates is the Prime Minister, or the motion, speaking of?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the rules permit me to answer that in the form of a question, I would say that my interpretation of it—and I would not, of course, indicate anything other than a personal interpretation, Mr. Speaker—is that it would include 1970-1971; and when the budget is introduced next Monday, this obviously would extend to 1971-1972.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further discussion? The minister has the floor to close the debate.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has said, the word "currently" was added to that particular sentence, which mirrors the resolution passed by the House on Friday, simply to make it obvious that, at the moment, these various types of post-secondary institution are in two different departments, that is The Department of Education and The Department of University Affairs. Quite frankly, I would have no objection to removing the word at all, if I thought it was going to stand in the way of a full and free investigation of this matter by the committee. I will be quite willing to do that, although with this assurance perhaps it will not be necessary.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Is it in the mind of the minister that we will be able on that committee to discuss virtually the cost of post-secondary education over an extended period of time, or is this the "currently" which is stated here and which I recognize is linked with what the Prime Minister brought before us just a moment ago in relation to the shifting of institutions from one department to another? Is that word "currently" not going to have a restrictive effect upon the debate in that committee?

Hon. Mr. White: When this was worded by my officials and I yesterday the initial draft had a word other than "examine". When I saw that word was different from that in the resolution passed on Friday, I said let us use the same word that was used on Friday. Otherwise, the opposition is going to be worried that we have in some way altered the nature of this examination.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: When we came to this word "currently" and I became aware that it was not in Friday's resolution, I said let us take this out too. It was explained to me that the word was in there simply to make it clear that these two types of post-secondary institution are in two different departments now. I will be very glad to remove the word, if it is going to keep the hon. gentlemen up late, awake, tonight.

Mr. Pitman: It will.

Hon. Mr. White: Or it may be that my assurance given to members now—that it will in no way inhibit your examination—may set their minds at ease. It certainly does not restrict the committee to this year or next year or last year. I quite agree that one cannot examine costs without having some kind of comparison over time and over space. I quite agree also that one cannot make an assessment of the appropriateness of cost without seeing what one is buying for those moneys, so in this way the quality, let us say the benefit from the cost, can be in some way examined, no doubt.

Mr. T. Reid: How about the word "directly?"

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I do not think—I certainly know it has no secret mysterious meaning—

Mr. T. Reid: What does "indirectly" mean?

Hon. Mr. White: I do not know if the example chosen by the member for Peterborough is particularly good, but surely if they want to question the OSSTF in some fashion, I suppose that is within their purview—I do not know; that is not my department, and I think I should not express a government position on it. But I would like to make some general comments here, Mr. Speaker, before this matter is put to a vote and I would like to set the background, if I may.

The member for Scarborough East's initial remarks cast some reflection on my predecessor in a way that I think may not have been parliamentary. However, I recognize that he needs no defence from me as the Gallup poll in last Toronto Daily Star would indicate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: From my earliest days in this Legislature I have been very interested in the work of committees, and I am going to substantiate that if I may take just a moment or two.

In 1960, which was the first session after the 1959 election, I found myself, as a complete neophyte, the chairman of the committee on government commissions. That was one of the better committees in those days because it was a newsworthy committee and we probed into liquor and prostitution on Jarvis Street. Mr. Farquhar Oliver was very interested in that subject and I think Mr. Reaume was very interested in pursuing that.

At any rate, it was a very interesting committee for one to head, and I recall vividly that the subject of night racing became a matter for discussion, at which time I invited Mr. Farquhar Oliver, seconded by—it may have been the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—at any rate, I invited these opposition members to express formally, in the form of a motion, the recommendation that night racing be permitted here in Ontario.

I was told that the committee on government commissions had never made a report to the Legislature. But that precedent, I thought, did not bind us, and in fact we did get the information to Mr. Frost, who was good enough to call me that night.

An hon. member: He having said there would be night racing in this province over his dead body.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Frost having said that there would be night racing over his dead body, called me that night and I pointed out to him that the committee felt obliged to give him this kind of guidance. And, as a matter of fact, within a period of just a few months, night racing was permitted.

Mr. Nixon: Funny he never took the minister into the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. White: So the next committee assignment I had was the standing committee on education.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House is very interested in this history of committee work, but I wish the minister would come back to the motion on the floor.

Mr. Peacock: He was much better as a neophyte.

Hon. Mr. White: I am trying to substantiate my claim, Mr. Speaker, that I am not going to be party to any attempt to muzzle legislative committees. It will not take me very much longer.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, what the committee does will depend on the committee and not the minister, I presume.

Mr. Pitman: Touche, touche!

Mr. Stokes: Do not bet on it.

Hon. Mr. White: As the chairman of the education committee—as my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition has been good enough to mention—we set up a very vigorous programme which thoroughly explored a wide variety of matters. This was done with the co-operation of the minister of the day and of the department.

Mr. T. Reid: Where did they get the budget?

Hon. Mr. White: Then, Mr. Speaker, you may recall that the following year, as chairman of the committee on conservation I set a new precedent and took the legislative committee through western Ontario where we examined conservation developments of every kind.

I find myself in substantial agreement with the member for Hamilton Mountain, although—

Mr. Nixon: Is the hon. minister going to vote with him?

Mr. Stokes: The minister shares his apprehension.

Hon. Mr. White: —the difference in the congressional system, with its checks and balances, and the parliamentary system must be recognized; and this essential difference must, I think, be reflected in the constitution and the operation of legislative committees. I do not think you want an elaborate explanation from me on that somewhat philosophical subject, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps at some later time we can get into it.

Having said that, let me point out that when I was chief government whip the amounts of money made available to several caucuses was very small, and in fact there was no money made available whatsoever to the Conservative caucus, not a nickel. There were very rudimentary services provided through Mr. Speaker's office, which seemed to me to be inappropriate, and—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. minister to come back to the motion before the House. He has not been on it for the last five minutes.

Hon. Mr. White: —now, Mr. Speaker, there are tens of thousands of dollars being made available for research within these caucuses, and the—

Mr. Bullbrook: He does not pay attention. I pay attention.

Hon. Mr. White: —and the amendment offered by the Liberal Party by implication, or inference—inference on my part certainly—would indicate that there were no such research funds or research staff, and in fact there are very generous funds.

Mr. Nixon: Very convoluted train of reason.

Mr. T. Reid: We do not get any money. We do not get any staff.

Hon. Mr. White: I for one would not want to establish some kind of alter government with the enormous cost or originating research and duplicating material of every kind available now from primary sources within my department and from other governmental agencies.

Mr. Nixon: Let Dr. McCarthy examine himself!

Hon. Mr. White: By that I mean, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a tremendous temptation for us to spend a great deal of money on original research when the material is available, if one cares to look for it, at a very small fraction of the cost.

Mr. Pitman: It is not available.

Hon. Mr. White: And so I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that large sums of public moneys are being expended within The Department of University Affairs, within The Department of Education—

Mr. T. Reid: One and a half million dollars.

Hon. Mr. White:—within the committee on university affairs, within the council of regents, and all of these sources are mentioned specifically in the resolution which I offered to the House; and so we find a second source of research in addition to the very substantial public funds being made available to the several caucus offices.

The member for Peterborough mentioned the committee on post-secondary education and thought that it should have been called. I think in fairness to them, Mr. Speaker, that this would not be appropriate. They are straining every nerve to complete an interim report early next fall; they are called upon by the terms of reference to have a second series of public meetings after that interim report is published—or I think it may be called a draft report, a draft final report—and they are trying very hard to have this report concluded for us early next year.

I think it would not be quite fair, Mr. Speaker, to call upon the committee while its information is incomplete, and while its ideas are half formed. I think the purpose can be accomplished by the committee by using these other sources without interfering with that particular project.

Mr. Pitman: One meeting with them might be useful. Just one meeting with them might be useful.

Hon. Mr. White: I certainly would not object if the members feel it is necessary and it is embraced by the phrase “other interested representatives.”

So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by pointing out the resolution is very broadly worded; that the history of the committees in this Parliament of ours has been to give very free rein; that very substantial public moneys are being made available now for research within the several groups mentioned here, and through the caucus offices; that there is no intention on my part to let a word like “currently” in any way impede the committee’s activities; and that I speak for the government in saying we welcome the observations and conclusions which this resolution will enable the committee to produce.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. White has moved that the Legislature’s committee on human resources be asked to examine the costs of post-secondary education as they are currently reflected in the estimates of The Department of University Affairs and The Department of Education, and for which the Minister of University Affairs and the Minister of Education are directly accountable to this House, including the funds provided to universities, colleges of applied arts and technology, and related institutions; that the committee be encouraged to invite officials of The Department of University Affairs and The Department of Education, the committee on university affairs, the council of regents, and other interested representatives, to appear before the committee as the committee may decide.

In amendment it has been moved by Mr. T. Reid seconded by Mr. B. Newman that the following words be added to the motion: “and that adequate budget and independent staff be provided.”

We will, of course, vote first on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment which was negatived on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 31, the "nays" 53.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. We will now vote on the motion by Hon. Mr. White.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye".

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day today I think it would be perhaps proper for me to report to the House in respect to a matter which was raised a week ago.

Last week I was asked to look into the question of the powers of the new standing committees of the House as authorized by order of the House dated Wednesday, March 31. Before specifically referring to the new committees, it seems desirable to review to some extent the powers and duties of the committees prior to the new order, with general reference to the committee system under the Parliamentary system.

Committees, both standing and select, under the Parliamentary system, as opposed to the congressional system, have always been confined in their activity to matters referred to them by the House. I draw your attention to the wording of the motion authorizing the committees in previous sessions, which said:

Which committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon.

In a limited number of cases this reference was automatic, for example, the public accounts of the province stood automatically referred to the standing committee on public accounts, as this was the purpose of the committee's appointment. Similarly, when in recent years a new committee was established on government commissions, after specifically referring certain boards and commissions to the committee at several sessions, it became a practice of the House to regard all boards and commissions as standing automatically referred to that committee on its appointment.

When the new committee on regulations was established by statute in 1969, that statute specifically provided that all regulations stand referred to that committee on its appointment, with certain limitations, but also provides that the committee, "Shall deal with such other matters as are referred to it from time to time by the assembly." It will therefore be seen that under the previous system, while the limited subjects heretofore alluded to were automatically referred, any other matter required specific reference by the House before a committee could examine or report thereon.

It has been alleged several times that committees instituted programmes on their own initiative. This suggestion is not accurate. Committees did, from time to time, have informal programmes, provided by the departments, for the information of members, but these were, as stated, informal, and could not in any way be described as investigations, nor did they carry any authority to report.

Coming now to the new committee setup, as authorized by the order of March 13, 1971, when the proposal for this new setup was drafted for the standing orders committee, last session, two distinct types of reference were recognized. First, the public accounts and regulations committee remain unchanged and reference is automatically as previously mentioned.

Secondly, to replace the previous government commissions committee, boards and commissions reporting through designated ministers were automatically referred to three of the four main committees, that is, the legal administration committee has automatically referred to it all boards and commissions coming within the scope of The Departments of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Justice, Labour, Municipal Affairs, and Provincial Secretary and Citizenship.

The human resources committee has automatically referred to it all boards and commissions within the scope of The Departments of Correctional Services, Education, Health, Social and Family Services, and University Affairs, and the natural and physical resources committee has automatically referred to it all those boards and commissions coming within the scope of Agriculture and Food, Energy and Resources Management, Highways, Lands and Forests, Mines and Northern Affairs, Tourism and Information, and Transport.

All other matters—and I quote—“may be referred in the discretion of the House.”

This appeared to be clearly understood when the resolution to authorize the committees was debated at considerable length on March 31, and unanimously agreed to. In any event, on re-examination, the provisions of that resolution do not appear to be open to any question; they seem to be abundantly clear.

To summarize in brief, the boards and commissions of the named departments are referred to the committees without further action by the House. Any other matter requires specific reference. However, I must say, and I consider this very important, that I can see no objection to a committee, by a majority, passing a motion asking the House for authority to investigate a certain matter, or have a specific matter referred to it. It would then be brought into the House as a specific recommendation from that committee and could be debated and decided in the House. If decided in the affirmative this would, of course, constitute the necessary referral of the matter to the committee.

Mention has been made several times of the action of the natural and physical resources committee on Wednesday, April 14. It appears on information from the chairman and clerk of the committee that no formal motion was, in fact, made. Simply, on the suggestion of the member for Huron-Bruce, it was agreed to ask the Ontario Food Council to come before the committee.

In any event, whether or not there was a formal motion, the Ontario Food Council is, I take it, one of the boards which comes under The Department of Agriculture and Food and therefore stands automatically referred to that committee.

On a point of order it was asked why the human resources committee did not report the motion passed last Wednesday. Had the motion been worded as I have suggested, to ask the House for authority, it would of necessity have been brought to the House as a recommendation from the committee for decision by the House.

However, as it proposed action by the committee without reference to the House, there was, I suggest, nothing to report. It is not the practice to report every motion passed in committee, but only those that make a recommendation to the House or require some specific action by the House.

Finally, the member for York South quite vigorously insisted I should state whether or not the Prime Minister has the right to make a unilateral ruling as to whether or not any matter is in order. The answer is obvious—neither the Prime Minister or any other member has any such right, but, when the Prime Minister or any other minister is asked a specific question in the question period, he has, of course, the right to answer such question as he sees fit.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If you will permit me, sir, in the statement that you put before us there are two matters which I think should be made clear. The first has to do with the assignment—

Mr. Speaker: May I point out the Speaker's rulings are not debatable and this is not the proper time.

Mr. Nixon: A point of order, sir?

Mr. Speaker: A point of order.

Mr. Nixon: To continue correctly with the ordered work of the House, I would draw to your attention, sir, that The Department of Trade and Development is not listed in your assignment of departments as listed here, or in the assignments of departments in the original committee resolution.

Mr. Speaker: That is indeed so. The Clerk advises me that undoubtedly that was not included in the resolution or in any referral order, and therefore is something that would require the resolution of the House to refer it before the committee. That is something, I think, that requires a little looking into.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Sounds like a conspiracy.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to have it looked up and advise the House what the situation is.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development was editing the first motion.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, would you explain whether it is possible for a committee to request the permission of the House to call one of the boards or commissions of the three major departments not assigned to appear before that particular committee—for example, Treasury, Public Works, or Trade and Development? Is it possible for any standing committee then to ask the permission of the House to have the boards or commissions of that department appear before it?

Mr. Speaker: It was unfortunate, of course. It was a very long statement and the hon. member for Wentworth did not have a copy of it. But, among other things that were in there was the statement that any committee, by a resolution passed, by a majority of course, could ask the House for either specific authority, or have somebody in it who may do so; but it must come from the committee to the House.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To continue with the Throne debate this afternoon—after the adjournment of yesterday—I was referring to the problems of Niagara regional government. Not only the city of St. Catharines has stated it wishes to secede from the Niagara regional government, but also the city of Niagara Falls would follow. The town of Fort Erie is also preparing a brief to present to the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) on the inequities of regional government.

Their major complaint is the red tape involved in trying to implement ecological projects in the town. Delay in approval of such projects no doubt will triple the original cost of the proposed programmes, originated in 1967. The present rigid budget set by the regional government municipalities, apparently endorsed by the Ontario Municipal Board, will stall and hamper all future and further development within the Niagara region.

The Niagara regional government has been instructed to seek assistance in the form of outright grants on ecological projects from the federal and provincial governments.

In a recent article in the Evening Tribune of February 19 the mayor of Welland says it is getting to be too much for real property owners to handle. Mayor Pitts of Welland explained: "The province gains 14 per cent a year in income and the municipality through assessment gains only two per cent; we are justified in going to the province for help."

What is needed financially for towns like Fort Erie—which is in such a mess now as a result of the former Minister of Municipal Affairs' (Mr. McKeough) centralist policies and arbitrary will—is a federal-provincial loan bank. The time is surely past when municipalities should enter the money market without the backing of the provincial credit needed to pull down the interest rates to a reasonable level. Where is the Province of Ontario Bank and what is its purpose, if any, today?

Mr. Speaker, further to the comments dealing with regional government, an article from the Fort Erie Times, April 14, 1971, states:

It was surprising, therefore, when Ontario Premier William Davis stated last week he was too busy to spend some time with members of the St. Catharines council despite their 9 to 2 vote to secede from a regional government system. Mr. Davis tactlessly offered to send down one of his underlings, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and made it quite clear he could not be bothered discussing something as trivial as the future of the city of St. Catharines. In fact it was not until the Niagara Falls mayor, Franklin Miller, told the press his city would follow St. Catharines' lead in seceding.

About two months or a month before this letter to the paper here, the Prime Minister with his colleagues were in St. Catharines trying to tell the local municipal officials that everything was going to be well if they went along with them. But apparently by this article the Prime Minister cares less about the problems of regional government in the Niagara peninsula.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): As a matter of fact the government does not care at all.

Mr. Haggerty: That is right.

I am faced with a barrage of complaints from my constituents who got caught in the high first-mortgage situation of 18 months to one year ago, and who now have a millstone around their necks to the tune of 12 per cent in many cases, in some cases higher, and not always compounded annually either. Not all these mortgages are renegotiable, or they are renegotiable upward every five years, but downward only with the greatest difficulty because of the weakness of the individual borrower in the face of the lender's strength. I see that the lenders are even taking a poke at Louis Rasminsky when he chides them about not following the lead set by the Bank of Canada.

I would like to read into the record this clipping from the Free Press Weekly of March 6, 1971.

Designed in part to stimulate business activity and employment, on February 23 the Bank of Canada dropped its interest rate to 5¼ per cent from 5¾ per cent just nine days after the latter figure came in force.

It has been interpreted as strong federal pressure on banks, trust and loan companies to respond with pared down lending charges as quickly as possible.

The prevailing prime rate charged by chartered banks to their most credit-worthy customers—a guide to other rates—went down only to seven per cent in nine months from 8½ per cent. Mortgage rates moved slowly down in the last nine months to about 9¾ per cent from just over 10½ per cent for conventional agreements and to 9¼ from 10¼ for those insured by the government under The National Housing Act.

If we try to force interest rates down by regulation we all know what will happen. The supply of mortgage money, particularly first mortgage money, will dry up. So the government has got to do much more than just have a token love affair with the five chartered banks; to establish a fair market for first mortgages, possibly with lower and upper ceilings, and mandatory renegotiation every five years at the outside, so that people are not crippled by 12 per cent mortgages or higher for up to 40 years.

In this connection, I wonder how many people realize that the total repayment, even of an NHA approved $25,000 mortgage, compounded annually at only 9¼ per cent with taxes, comes to the astronomical sum of $97,800 over a 40-year term? That is, almost four times the amount of the loan has to be paid back. That means that for many people, a modest home including down payment will involve a lifetime repayment of over $100,000.

In Toronto, where houses are running around $30,000 to $40,000 now, this figure is even higher. Ought we to be paying this kind of money for shelter? Ought this huge proportion of our incomes to be spent in this fashion? If not, what are the root causes of housing costs being so high? We can trace most of the problems to the taxation and municipal policies of the provincial government rather than to Ottawa.

My next area of concern is the failure of the government to work with industry to set provincial goals and priorities in production. I think that far more can be done than is presently being done in this regard. I have the example before me of the Japanese industrial-government committees. One result is that on the roads of Ontario today every fifth or sixth car you see is a Datsun or a Toyota, and these two brands have now caused Volkswagen to drop into third place in car imports.

The government should show leadership at Oshawa, Oakville, Windsor, Brampton and Talbotville, move in on the Canadian auto industry and tell the companies to stop their outdated practice of making essential items options. There are 20 or 30 items on a Datsun or Toyota that are basic on the Japanese cars. Yet the same items are optional extras on the Canadian cars.

Similarly, in television, even though the set may bear a department-store brand name, it is likely to come from Japan, perhaps mainly assembled there and finished here, or wholly assembled there. Name brands such as Sony and Panasonic have swept the home electronics market in both price and quality.

The third feature—service after sales—is also good because these companies have set up training schools for Canadian technicians.

Meanwhile, the government has shown no such leadership toward our own industry, and we find Dunlop closing and then Westinghouse ceasing home electronics production. The sad tale goes on and on.

In the same vein, I have this report on a predicted rise in the cost of steel of 24 per cent by Stewart S. Cort, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. This comes from the Buffalo Courier-Express:

Steel prices will rise 24 per cent in the next three years if present wage patterns are extended to the steel industry.

This was the estimate made Monday by Stewart S. Cort, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation in an interview with Iron Age, a steel industry magazine.

In outlining the consequences of present wage trends, Cort said, "We have taken the can settlement that has been made by the United Steelworkers," he said, "The way we figure it, the additional cost could require us, Bethlehem Steel, to institute across-the-board general price increases of approximately eight per cent a year through the life of the contract just to stay even."

New contracts of United Steelworkers of America with major can companies have been valued at $1.75 an hour, or 30 per cent over three years.

The price estimate would cover direct wage costs plus "the effect on the cost of materials and services," said Cort. Regarding the chances of warding off these costs, he makes no prediction, but he called attention to these factors:

Union demands: "The steelworkers look on themselves as being behind the parade and fully entitled to catch up."

Company resistance to demands: "I do not see where a strike gains anybody anything. We are less favourably positioned than we were in 1959—the year of the last steel strike. Anything is possible if we have to do it, but it is a different kind of world."

Government intervention to prevent or halt strikes: "You know, they have a very good reading on the financial condition of the industry. I do not think there is any misconception in Washington about this."

Government intervention to moderate demands: "One question in the government's mind is likely to be: How successful would government intervention of any conceivable kind be? Government really cannot afford to lay its power on the line unless it is pretty sure of being successful," he said. "I am sure the government is aware of the problems that all union leaders face today and they pretty well know the state of unity of the major unions."

Steel price outlook: "How can we be an island unto ourselves in an inflationary economy? The original January increases did not anticipate one cent of increase in wage rates beyond the existing contract."

Inflation and pollution clean-up costs: "The administration has decided that industry is not going to get any help in meeting their bill. The feeling is that you pass it on to the consumer. Well, I do not think some people realize what they are talking about because the bill is enormous," Cort said.

We all know how a change in the price of steel sets off another round of inflation. Yet we ought not to have a gun held to our head by management about counter-pollution costs. This jump in price to cover pollution measures would surely be a once-and-for-all deal. We should be firm about that.

On the other hand, I do not want to hear voices from the left arguing that the alternative is nationalization and socialism, because that approach has been proved bankrupt. Let me read members this March 6 report from Sweden. It is an eye-opener:

END OF A DREAM

The Swedish socialist dream collapsed last week when 30,000 servants were locked out by the government; doctors, dentists and local government officials went on strike; railways ground to a halt, and electricity and gas workers organized sudden stoppages that disrupted supplies at peak hours.

The government of Premier Olof Palme, the young man with a mission determined to bring yet more egalitarian socialism into a country where the state has already become a bad-tempered, domineering nanny, has lost the battle against inflation. It is in dire financial straits and being a minority government, depends in Parliament on the support of the 17 Communist deputies.

Inflation is rampant, and to fight it and pay for the mounting costs of the government cradle-to-grave services, the government has introduced a 17.65 per cent sales tax on all goods and services and an extra 10 per cent tax on gasoline, electric power, wines and spirits. The government has also doubled the employers' payroll tax, a device aimed at eliminating feather-bedding and making companies more efficient. This, in turn, has infuriated the unions which demand wage increases to offset new taxes and has lost Mr. Palme the sympathies of the business community which until 1969 was a tolerant partner of the Social Democrats.

Indeed, polarization has come to Sweden where the radicals are all found within Mr.

Palme's party and where outside it the great mass of Swedes are fed up with the taxation that kills all incentive. People retire early because it is not worthwhile to continue to work when after taxes, their take-home pay is little more than retirement pay. Married women find the combined income tax so high that a couple actually loses money when the wife works.

That almost sounds like the province of Ontario. So wives stay at home frustrated at having their skills sacrificed to the utopia that has now collapsed. The Swedes have never been idealists and the cries of the young radicals, who dominate the youth wing of the Social Democratic Party, for more equality leave them cold. The majority, who voted for the splintered non-socialist party, a split that brought Mr. Palme into power, desire the good things of life and this means better wages for lower-paid workers and more money in the pockets of those who make it.

To solve this dilemma, Mr. Palme had recourse to Gunnar and Alva Myrdal, that curious reincarnation of the gullible British Fabian couple of the 1940s, Sidney and Beatrice Webb. Alva Myrdal has indeed obliged with her report on equality in the seventies.

It would be recalled here that Gunnar Myrdal had to leave Sweden in 1947 because of his pro-Communist leanings, and while in Geneva at the United National Economic Commission for Europe, he never ceased to praise the great economic progress of the socialist countries of eastern Europe and the great economic difficulties of western European democracies. In 1969, he said in Winnipeg, "Labour strife in Canada will be greatly reduced when this country has achieved 100 per cent trade unionism," such as exists in Sweden where "a labour conflict would bring everything to a complete stop."

The conflict has come and Sweden still functions and it is quite probable that Alva Myrdal's projections will have no more validity than all those forecasts of her professor husband, who for years prophesied that communist Europe would overtake the west. Premier Palme has tried to graft a utopian concept upon a highly pragmatic country. He almost lost the last election. His own dream of becoming the Nehru of the 1970s, self-righteously exposing everybody else's wickedness, if it has not collapsed already in last week's labour strife, may well vanish together with the Myrdal utopians, when his minority regime faces the irate electors next time around.

Now switching to another topic, you will recall that it was we Liberals who demanded mine safety rules last year and we know what we wanted. We were right again and we were ahead of our time, as this report from the March, 1971, issue of Steel Labour, regarding the United Steelworkers' submission to the Saskatchewan Department of Mineral Resources shows:

In a mid-January submission to officials of the Saskatchewan Department of Mineral Resources, the steelworkers' union also urged certificates of qualification for people in supervisory capacity and a legal requirement that safety committees include union representation.

In a report to local unions in the province, following the one-day hearing, union spokesman Ken Smith pointed out that this had been the "first real effort to have a say in the amendments to the mines regulations" and it was clear that the safety committees had a big job to do before the next hearing. One of the objectives, Smith stressed, was to "force management to come and discuss union proposals in front of government representatives rather than dealing through the back door."

Perhaps, I should, Mr. Speaker, read into the records once again for the members to my left what the amendments were. I am sorry to see the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) is not here for he opposed such a resolution by this party on this side.

A safety committee shall be established for every mine, comprising equal representation from management and labour and the committee is responsible for ensuring that the safety provisions of this Act are complied with and shall forthwith notify the minister and the district mining engineer of any accident or injury to any workman occurring in or about the mine.

The other amendment, Mr. Speaker, was dealing with the mining Bill 2:

The engineer and any person authorized to act on his behalf and members of that safety committee, as defined in section 151(4) of the Act as amended, are entitled to be present and to examine or cross-examine any witness at an inquest held concerning a death caused by an accident at the mine or plant; and if the engineer, or someone on his behalf is not present, together with at least one management, and one labour representative of the safety committee, the coroner shall, before proceeding with the evidence, adjourn the inquest and give the deputy minister not less than four days' notice of the time and place at which the evidence is to be taken.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the NDP did not support these resolutions. I read again from this labour magazine regarding the safety programme:

The company proposed a co-operative safety at a joint union-company safety meeting held in December at Falconbridge. The company spokesman said that they were interested in developing a sincere effort toward co-operative safety.

Another article, Mr. Speaker, is from Steel Labour of January, 1969; I quote:

MINE SAFETY IS UNIONS' OBJECTIVE

No one has a greater right to initiate, to participate in and to exercise responsibility in mine safety programmes than the miner himself. The decisions which must be made, the investigations which must be carried out, should be made by committees of the miners' peers. It is the miner who is hurt. It is the miner who is killed. It is the miner who should have pre-eminent rights in mine safety.

To continue with it, Mr. Speaker:

The full mandatory recognition sought by union safety committees is that the worker advocated and participates in all aspects of safety programmes.

It is also noted, Mr. Speaker, in an article from a union paper, The Canadian Independent Labour News of February, 1969:

NORTH YORK HOSPITAL GETS SHOP STEWARDS AND SAFETY COMMITTEE

At a general meeting held Wednesday, February 19, the following employees took over their duties as shop stewards at North York General Hospital:

I will delete the names. It goes on to say:

The safety committee will be composed of six employees and six hospital representatives. They will make recommendations in an effort to ensure safe working conditions in every area of the hospital. The following members will represent the employees in the various departments—

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that we Liberals have given every thought to the labour problems in the Province of Ontario and we are forerunners in that field.

Mr. D. A. Patterson (Essex South): We have more than 50 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Now we are always being lectured from the left, so I am glad of the chance to turn the tables. Here is paragraph 10(a) of the NDP sub-amendment, moved April 7 by the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis):

The failure of the provincial government to establish a Crown corporation for mine exploration and development, and to force the pace of expansion through public enterprise and, if appropriate, engaging in joint ventures with private enterprise already active in the mining sector.

How does this jibe with the news report on the federal NDP in the March issue of Steel Labour?

"The federal government's proposal to establish a Canada Development Corporation is a disastrous retreat from the government's own proposals of 1963. The entire concept has been distorted and it is a complete sellout to private enterprise."

This was the first and heated reaction of New Democratic Leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas to a bill tabled in the House of Commons, January 26.

Will it be different, I wonder, when the mantle falls on daddy? Or will there still be two generations of NDP policy?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Where are the two points? Where is the relevance of the two points?

Mr. Haggerty: Just listen and the member will learn.

Mr. Deans: The member's research is poor.

An hon. member: The NDP might even give the member three or four points.

Mr. Deans: The member's research is really poor.

Mr. Haggerty: The member will understand it if he reads it in Hansard.

Mr. Deans: Read it in Hansard? I am listening to it. It is incoherent.

Mr. Haggerty: Turning to the question of trade unions, the February issue of the Canadian Textile Council Bulletin had this to say:

For years, the American unions have tried to tell us that they were always spending more money in Canada than they were taking out.

Here are the facts!

Since 1962, the federal government has required all unions to report to Ottawa upon their incomes and expenditures. The report under The Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act covers all receipts and all expenditures of the American unions in Canada. This includes what they spend on strike benefits, welfare, pensions—as well as fat salaries for their agents here.

This report, then, covering a period of only five years—from 1962 to 1966—shows that the American unions made a net profit on operations of over $50 million.

Here is the summary—

Mr. Speaker, I will not get into the total year by year expenditure, but the total income was $130,904,000. Total expenditures were $80,137,000. The net profit to the U.S. was $50,767,000.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Boy! No income tax on that either?

Mr. Haggerty: The report concludes: "We can do with $50 million here in Canada. Let us stop the handouts."

I have often heard in the House, Mr. Speaker, usually around election time, that the Liberals and the party on the other side here are rich or wealthy and so forth. But I can tell you this much: With this $50 million going to the United States, we can be darn sure that there is going to be a great amount of it come back to feather the nest of the NDP. The point that I want to raise, Mr. Speaker, is—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): We will be looking forward to it, as a matter of fact.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): If there is any left over, let us know.

Mr. Haggerty: There is a present trend in the NDP nominations to nominate union representatives, and the point that I want to bring up to the House here about all these persons, if they are to be elected to the Ontario Legislature, is: Are they going to act on behalf of Canadians or are they going to be directed by American unions?

From the other side, one thing that is now dragging the wage earner down and impairing his purchasing power is the revolving credit card. You will have seen in The Globe and Mail's business section this week that all the major banks are sharpening up their credit card practices to their own advantage and once again the workers will pay.

Unsolicited credit cards are the road to ruin for those who have no training in their use. Particularly serious is the revolving charge accounts of the big stores, on which sometimes over $100 a year is taken in interest. Regarding the Chargex type of credit cards, one bank says of its credit card: "This is the area where we obtain the highest rate of return in the use of funds anywhere in the bank."

Here is part of a speech given to the 1969 annual conference of the Charge Account Bankers' Association:

To generate the major sources of income, card-holders must use their credit cards more and more often, from more and more merchants, for more and more purchases, for larger and larger amounts and on more and more extended terms.

"Activate the credit cards," is the cry. "Write your income tax owing on this certified cheque and we will charge it." "Sign this vacation cash advance slip for the amount you want." "Just fill in this Christmas card bonanza form and forget your money worries." "Buy this direct-mail offer, on which we do not make any profit, but which turns your unsolicited credit card into an active one."

One man with a gross salary of $7,200 a year was found, on investigation, to have these monthly commitments: $93.50 for a new car; $38 repayment to one loan company; $68 repayment to another loan company; $26 to a department store revolving credit account; $25 to a bank credit card; $37.50 to another bank credit card; and $37.60 to a furniture store.

Together with his rent and his insurance, the young man was committed to $436.50 of his total take-home pay of $475, before he even bought a mouthful of food.

We must urgently control the credit card business and the use of credit cards generally in Ontario, so that people are not trapped in a web of debt in the process of helping keep the wheels of industry turning through consumption of goods and services.

My leader has made the position of this caucus quite plain on the question of automobile insurance. We favour a privately-operated no-fault plan with some retention of tort rights for bodily injuries above an amount to be determined. I am looking forward to seeing the government bill in this area, and am maintaining a file, so that at the appropriate time I shall be ready to criticize it constructively.

Of course, if, as may happen, the Premier is foolish enough to go to the people in June, then we will come back as the government and introduce our own bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am far from satisfied with the staff of the environmental health branch of The Department of Health. This branch has a staff of only 52 field personnel for the whole of Ontario. This is a time, for example, when the cancer rate among workers in the mining industry is soaring.

There seems to be no research going on anywhere to relate cause and effect here. A provincial programme that stresses research on the efforts of the inplant exposures and of the means of protecting workers is required now in the Province of Ontario.

For some time, Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking on the question of the Province of Ontario obtaining parklands on the north shore of Lake Erie. I have raised questions on different occasions in the House here. Perhaps I should recall to the members on June 20, 1969, on page 5953 of Hansard:

Mr. Haggerty—Enquiry of the Minister of Public Works: (a) Have offers to purchase been made by The Department of Public Works in connection with land acquisition for a park site in Bertie township in the county of Welland; (b) How long have the negotiations been taking place; and (c) when does the minister anticipate that the negotiations will be completed?

Answers by the Minister of Public Works:

(a) No. (b) Negotiations have gone on since December 14, 1967. (c) It is not known when negotiations will be completed.

Again, on October 20, 1970, I raised the same question with the Minister of Public Works:

Will the minister inform the House concerning the expropriation of some 300 acres of land for a provincial park, lying west of Point Abino on Lake Erie, in the town of Fort Erie, as to when this transaction will be completed?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would have to get the information for the hon. gentleman. I do not have it with me this afternoon.

And a supplementary question followed:

Mr. Haggerty: Is the minister aware his department committed itself once and then cancelled options to purchase the land in the area and that it has now left the door open for land speculators to be involved in the purchase of the options dropped by his department?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, again that would be information that I would have to get from the department. I am not aware of this happening, but I will find out and report back.

To this day, Mr. Speaker, I have not received a reply from the minister or from his department. It raises another question. This same announcement made by my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Morningstar) in September, 1968, said that the Province of Ontario, through the Minister of Lands and Forests, was going to buy a park site, in a location I have mentioned here, Point Abino. Until this day, nothing has been done.

I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker: When this next election is called—perhaps it will be very shortly—the Conservative government has not a chance in my riding. This is one promise that they have not lived up to, and they will hear more and more as we get into the campaigns in my riding.

There are some other small problems that I would like to discuss, Mr. Speaker, and one is the problem of the Welland Canal—the old Welland Canal, after the St. Lawrence Seaway was completed. The new canal, which will be completed supposedly by 1972, raises the question, “What are we going to do with the old Welland Canal?” The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority wishes to pass this responsibility onto local municipalities, onto the regional government, onto the city of Welland, or onto the local municipalities. In fact, I talked to the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) about the matter, and I know they have asked the provincial government if they want to take it over as parkland. I told the minister at that time about a year ago that I do not think this is the responsibility of the provincial government, nor is it the responsibility of the local municipalities. They should not have to bear the upkeep and maintenance of this old canal.

There are a couple of things that perhaps the government should be looking into: It could be used for recreational purposes under a national park; the other is that it could be used for transportation purposes. There are some rumours that the canal will be plugged off at both ends and of course it will be a channel that will have no water in it. Perhaps I should suggest to the Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) that a study should be made to see if it could not be used for a rapid transportation system in the Niagara Peninsula. It could connect with the city of Port Colborne, the city of St. Catharines, to tie in with Brock University, with the Niagara College, and with all the industries along the Welland Canal. I suggest that the minister take this as notice and get into a study on it. The other suggestion I think it could be used for—

Mr. Bukator: The Ontario Northland Railway may be good for that transportation.

Mr. Haggerty: That is right! What we need in the Niagara Peninsula is a rapid transportation system. It is one of the poorest areas in the Province of Ontario to get out of.

Mr. Makarchuk: Okay, we will arrange for the member's removal in the next election.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Is there any place you would rather be?

Mr. Haggerty: I can tell the member for Brantford he is on his way out. That is for sure.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): Where is the new broom?

Mr. Haggerty: The other suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that it could be used for docking facilities for an industrial park. These are some of the suggestions that I put to the House here. Perhaps some study should be done on it, but I do not wish to have it referred back to local municipalities and have them bear the cost of the maintenance of this waterway.

I was interested to hear the minister here the other day initiate a programme called SWEEP, a programme to initiate programmes for the students of Ontario.

There is an old saying that a new broom sweeps clean, Mr. Speaker, and on this side, this party has a new broom. We are going to sweep the province in the next election and we will be sitting on that side, carrying out the programmes that are needed to meet the needs of this community in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join in the debate, particularly after listening to the member for Welland South (Mr. Haggerty) verbalize his mental hallucinations through the Throne debate.

It is very interesting to see him trying in his dreary way to extricate himself from the boner he pulled while we were discussing the mining bill in committee, where we tried to introduce an amendment. We had an opportunity, because the Tory members were not present in committee at that time, we had an opportunity to move an amendment which would have provided the workers with some meaningful say—not much, very little—a meaningful say in the safety committees in the plants and in some of the things that go on in the plants.

Of course, the vote was lost with the assistance of the member for Welland South who voted with the Conservative Party—

An hon. member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Makarchuk: Now he comes to his defence and tells us that the resolutions he introduced when the bill was being read in the House. We have argued about it before and it was a patsy resolution. The member knows it and we know it.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Read it.

Mr. Makarchuk: We read it. The introduction of Gunnar Myrdal—they are trying to smear somebody of note as Gunnar Myrdal is an economist that is held in high esteem all through the world, in the United States, in Harvard and so on. They are trying to smear him as a communist or something like that. This is absolute sheer stupidity.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): He is bringing everything down to a new low level.

Mr. Makarchuk: We certainly expect something greater than that—the introduction of Sweden as a country that is really falling apart. They had a strike there and a lockout.

Mr. Haggerty: It is gone.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is the first one in something like 30 or 40 years. There is no mention of this. There is not a mention of the fact that Sweden has not had an unemployment problem for the last 30 or 40 years in comparison to what we have here in this country.

Mr. Haggerty: They have it now.

Mr. Makarchuk: Or the fact, Mr. Speaker, that at one time Canada had the highest, or the second highest, standard of living in terms of production per person or gross national product and has been displaced by Sweden. Under the Liberal stewardship we moved from second place to fourth place and now we are being surpassed not only by Sweden but also by Switzerland.

So I would suggest if the member is going to bring in these facts and other arguments, he should give both sides of the story. I am sure that then perhaps there may be some reasons to argue on this point. There may be some credibility. As it is what he is saying is nothing.

The attack on unions, of course, is the standard procedure. I would like to inform the House that Goldfarb Associates, who also work for the Tories, were doing a survey for the Liberals in our riding before they called the by-election. We had the opportunity of doing part of the survey for them so the results relayed are rather dubious. But one of the questions on the survey, besides asking about what they personally thought of certain candidates that we may run, was "Do you think unions have too much power or do you think unions do not have too much power?"

I would suggest to the member that we saw the results before he did, as a matter of fact, and the results the Liberals got are not the results that were the real results. But I will tell him this. The people did not buy that garbage.

Getting back to the government, I would like to congratulate it on the Throne Speech. It was, I think, the first Throne Speech that was brought in and demolished in two days. I think if anything it should be congratulated on establishing the instant credibility gap. This is part of the new wave, I presume.

I would like to comment on certain matters dealing with both social and economic matters in Ontario, I would like to quote first from Professor Leonard Gertler. I imagine the new Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) knows him or has dealt with him in the past but, in any case, he is the director of the school of urban and regional planning, University of Waterloo. He is writing in trends and possibilities for urban development in central and southern Ontario, a study that was commissioned by the Ontario Economic Council. He says:

We have an opportunity to shape the urban regional environment of Ontario in response of our needs and life styles. And we can do so with environmental advantages and built-in hindsight of our "frontier" position. But the pace of our development and our continental position suggests if we do not choose to do so as a deliberate and sustained public policy, that opportunity will be foreclosed and our province as a place to live may fall short of our aspirations.

What the professor is trying to tell us, of course, is that we still have time. He refers to us as frontier society in comparison to the United States society to the south. And he is telling us that time is running out; we do not have too much time left to do the things which have to be done in this province.

The leader of our party has covered the various plans—so-called plans, I should more accurately describe them—that the government has introduced in the House, the various designs for development for various areas, Toronto region and so on. And from all that we can gather only one thing, that unless we have a change of government we might as well stop talking about our destiny—it will be decided for us and it will be decided by the corporate sector of our society. The decisions there are not made on the basis of benefits to people but they are certainly made in the interests of profit.

I would suggest that some of us should perhaps look to the south. We have a very good social laboratory going on there, an example of what happens when the corporate sector sets the priorities and decides which way society moves. You have to be either completely insensitive or obtuse, or both, not to recognize that there is a very perilous future. And it is not a matter of just salvaging some sovereignty, to be able to say what is going to happen to us in our place, but I think it is the last chance that we have as citizens of Ontario to put the quality of life ahead of the quantity in life.

To the members of the government sitting opposite I will say this, that they have had their chance, they have been in power for the last 28 years or thereabouts, and they failed miserably. There is not a single area in provincial planning where one could look and say that they have really done something, that they have really moved ahead in any kind of consistent or organized way.

The only tangible result, of course, is that you have numerous reports which exist all through the province, which are handed out over here. You have the Design for Development, as an example, for the Niagara southern Ontario region.

I will just read some of the quotations in the report. It states the obvious. It is nothing new, but I think it should be stated. This is dealing with the Design for Development: Niagara (South Ontario) Region, and it says:

There is a high proportion of slow-growth industries in the region, particularly in Brant, Lincoln and Welland counties. The economic base of Haldimand and Norfolk counties lacks diversity. At the time of the survey of manufacturers, there was a reported shortage of labour through the region.

I may add that since the stewardship of the new leader of the Liberal Party has changed, that of course, that statement is not true.

The presence of several high wage requirement industries such as farm machinery manufacturers, particularly in Brant and Lincoln counties, has created labour recruitment problems for many other industries. This is especially true of medium-size establishments that are prepared to pay a moderate wage.

Again, the argument here is that there are social costs involved which accrue to a municipality or to an area where you do not provide the kind of service or you do not provide adequate pay for the people that work in an area. It also says:

There is a lack of co-ordinated development of public and private services and facilities. There is a serious problem of road congestion at Niagara Falls. Areas having prime recreational potential have been under-utilized. These areas are to be found throughout the region and include the Niagara escarpment, the Lake Erie and the Lake Ontario shorelines and the Grand River valley.

This matter has been raised in the House—the possibility of cleaning up the Grand River itself and of making it a recreational area. Again there is very little action. All the government is talking about is that it is going to build dams in this area.

There is talk, of course, of industrial development moving into the Nanticoke area, but the report says that the existing road, rail and harbour facilities serving the Nanticoke areas are inadequate.

And so it goes on, stating very much the obvious—that really the problems are still there, that as a result of the government we have had in power nothing has really happened, or changed.

As an example it says another of the problems is the student-teacher ratio:

Haldimand and Norfolk have the lowest proportion of children remaining in school until grade 13, and on this basis these counties should be given high priority for educational improvements.

And it suggests:

A lower student-teacher ratio could improve the quality of education by permitting greater individual attention, but there are exceptions.

And, of course—one of the first things that the new wave, or the new government did when it moved in was to try and chop this up. It is actively trying to increase the student-teacher ratio. The first thing it has done is to change that.

The report states the obvious. The miniscule recommendations in the report are either not being acted upon, or are being directly opposed as in the case of education.

It is very hard for us on this side of the House to feel that the government is really concerned about what is going on in Ontario. As our leader has pointed out, there is this crisis of leadership. I do not think that the members over there have really any faith in the people of this province.

Let me demonstrate by a speech made by one ex-cabinet minister right now—the member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall), who has a habit of talking from the hip and shooting from the mouth. Anyway he said, and this is quoted in the Toronto Daily Star of February 9:

Canadian ownership would not produce new customers, will not improve old machines and methods, will not make products salable, will not make salesmen more vigorous—

I am not sure to what he was referring there, but anyway—

—will not reduce costs, will not convert losses into profits and it will not create more jobs.

So there you have it, fellow Canadians. There is nothing you can do that somebody else cannot do better.

This is the kind of thinking that permeates the party that sits across the way. It is a case of what could be called a sort of mental sterility, and the Throne Speech adequately demonstrates it. There was nothing in the Throne Speech.

In terms of trying to order our own economy, order our own affairs, we have the member for Don Mills replaced by the new Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman); and of course there is an article in the March 17 Globe and Mail by Irvine Lutsky which says that: "The new minister has a very tough act to follow."

I suppose he was referring to the member for Don Mills because of the one-liners he was using. I would imagine some of them could, sometime, be entered into a book.

The role that the new minister will play in the cabinet, of course, has not been completely defined and we would like to see that it would take some kind of shape. In the Throne Speech he did say that he would be making a statement on what kind of shape. If I may quote from the Throne Speech:

Immediate steps will be taken to enhance opportunities for Canadians to participate in the development of Ontario. The government will give preference to Canadian-owned businesses seeking grants and loans under the various incentive programmes. To further encourage Canadian enterprise and ownership, a venture capital fund will be established to assist in the financing of small businesses . . .

We have been waiting for this statement—this imaginative statement—this new report from the minister. So far he has refused to come out with anything. I feel that that particular portfolio, imaginatively handled, can play a significant role in the life of the people of this province.

The minister's statement to the press—this is referring to the Globe and Mail article—did not indicate the minister is really prepared to act. Or is it the case that there is nobody in the cabinet that is really listening to what is going on? On the matter of Canadian ownership—of course, there is lip service paid to it in the Throne Speech. The government is going to call a conference on it and this is nothing more than an effort to try and defuse the situation.

The minister in that same article says that Canadians are concerned about control of our commerce, industry and trade by non-Canadians. He says something should be done and he will be presenting his own proposals to his colleagues. As I said earlier, one would have hoped that these proposals would have appeared soon. As usual with everything that the Tories do, they do have an out in this case—the minister does say: "Of course we do have to take into account that we cannot do very much in Ontario. It is a federal problem, so in case we do not have anything done we can always blame it and slough it off on the federal government."

I think we should make it clear to the hon. members opposite that it is not so much the concern about foreign investments as what really stems from foreign investment. It is the other factors and what flows from foreign control. These are the ones that are of real concern to the people of this province. I think we should look at the United States where society is corporately controlled; it is violent, it is dehumanizing and it is brutal. It is destructive of its environment and its own people. It is unable to resolve the inequalities.

If you look at reports, for an example, from Detroit; the murder rate—in the last six months, they have had something like 200 murders, which is fantastic—an unusual, rather grim story of what is happening to a society. You have growth, of course. They indicate that that is all they are interested in —industrial growth and not any kind of social growth.

It seems to me that the philosophy there is the philosophy of a cancer cell, that it continues to grow until it destroys the body within which it exists. This is something that we are not particularly interested in. We do not want to be sucked into that kind of vortex, into the American vortex. The arguments that have been advanced earlier by the hon. members on the other side that we need American capital have been demolished by the speech of my leader.

The figures, of course, have been supplied by the United States Department of Commerce. We should also bear in mind there are countries in the world that do not exist on or need foreign capital and they manage to get along very well. They have a higher employment rate. They limit the amount of foreign investment—an example of this would be Japan. I am reading an article from a leaflet put out by the Canada-Japan Trade Council and it says:

There is a strong feeling against foreign takeovers of Japanese corporations. There are constraints on foreigners achieving any voice in the management of these firms. Nevertheless each round of capital liberalization has brought an easing of the limitations of foreign stock ownership so that new automatic ceilings set on September 1, 1970, are as follows.

It goes on to list the ceilings:

The automatic maximum total foreign ownership of a company with stock listed on the Japanese stock exchange is now set at less than 25 per cent per enterprise. This should be compared to the number of companies that exist in Canada where ownership is completely foreign.

The rule concerning foreign stock ownership of restricted industries—that is principally public utilities and banks—has been maintained at less than 15 per cent. Also there are other restricted industries besides the banks which we have—of course we have our restrictions—but they do include things like mines, they do include things like gas utilities. These are the industries that we, in a sense, are prepared to sell out and have been selling out.

The other point is that the maximum limit for any single foreign investor is continued at less than seven per cent. The point here, of course, is that any corporation that controls about 30 per cent or 40 per cent of the stock, in effect, controls the whole company.

The Japanese have prevented this by ensuring that no single group or no single corporation or company controls more than seven per cent and therefore is prevented from having effective control over the company.

The other point on this is that Japan does not have an unemployment problem. In fact, it has a serious over-employment problem. In fact it is putting out an alarm. It says, "A shortage of labour in general and of young workers in particular is posing a major problem in Japan."

Compare this to our situation where our younger workers are almost completely locked out of any possibility of obtaining employment and our older workers—about 75,000 of them—are wandering around looking for jobs. The tragic part about this is that, of course, we have debated this matter in the House. As was said in the House earlier, we have discussed it. The workers are still out of jobs and the government has got itself off the shelf. The federal government was accused in certain cases, but there is no doubt in my mind that both governments are to blame in this particular aspect. It is a very serious situation.

In Brantford, where the White Motor Company is operating, something like 500 people were employed by the firm. They have not worked now for something like six months. When we tried to get some answers out of the Ontario Department of Trade and Development to find out what the company is going to be doing or what the plans are for the future, the government of Ontario did not know what was going on. It just refused to find out.

We had a case where Westinghouse—another plant—without consulting with anybody—decided to close down completely. It was another foreign-owned corporation. There are 275 people who will be thrown out of jobs. The reasons given were that the plant was operating at a loss because of the up-pegging of the dollar.

This, Mr. Speaker, may be correct, but I think it is the responsibility of the government to find out whether the company is telling the truth or whether the government is quietly acquiescing to a corporate giant. It would be interesting to know, Mr. Speaker, just how much money in royalties, managerial fees, consultants' fees and so on, were paid by the company in Brantford to the parent company and charged to the Brantford operation. Were these justified expenses? This is something that the province should know and we do not know.

It would be interesting to find out whether there were inflated prices paid for the components that were purchased from foreign corporations or from outside of Canada and then kickbacks paid to the parent company in the United States. This may not be so, but on the other hand it may be so. These are the things that an effective, alive and concerned Department of Trade and Development should find out and should have the answers to.

The point, of course, is that nothing was being done. When we tried to find out, we put out press releases and we asked that something happen; nothing happened! We could have examined and possibly saw to it that perhaps the plant could have been kept operating for a longer period of time. It may have needed some subsidies. It could have gone into manufacturing some other lines, but again there was nothing done on the part of that government sitting over there to try to save jobs.

When the plant was shutting down, I put out a press release. I suggested, following the discussions with Trade and Development, that a plant closure task force be established in Ontario. It would consist of economists and business, accounting and other specialists. It would be empowered to examine the books of corporations that plan to shut down.

From the information they would be able to decide if the company is telling the truth. I suggest that we should bear in mind the Hawker-Siddeley plant in Nova Scotia and whether it is a matter of a multi-national corporation deciding it can make greater profits by manufacturing somewhere else. The task force would also be in a position to recommend and take whatever action is needed to keep the plant operating, either manufacturing the original products or switching into some other lines. If necessary financial assistance, either in straight loans, equity loans or forgivable loans, should be made available by the government. Naturally the new wave did not move. The only thing that one could say about it was the fact that it was very calm in those days.

Another example of this kind of activity—the kind of action that is taken by the foreign corporation—is in the matter of Mason and Risch in Scarborough and Sterling Actions and Keys in Brantford. Both of these companies are owned by Aeolian Corporation in New York. The decision again to close these two plants was made in the United States. Over 200 jobs were involved.

Again we tried to question the government, the Ontario Department of Trade and Development, to find out what they are doing. Have they examined the books or is there a possibility that there could be some kind of rationalization or a consolidation of these two plants in order to save the jobs? Perhaps not all the 200 jobs that are involved but maybe 100 jobs. Again, nothing was done; the plants closed in the last few days.

How can we sit down here and hear this government say that it is responsible, that it is concerned, and ministers get up and talk about unemployment, when the possibilities are open to them to do something about it? When they can take action, they do not take action; they go along. They say that it is a matter of foreign ownership and they leave it at that.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have to set goals for this province; we have to decide and say specifically where we are going and how we are going to get there.

The Department of Trade and Development has developed econometric models of the Province of Ontario—rather the Treasury Department has developed econometric models. These are techniques for economic planning that have been used for at least 10 or 15 years in other countries. We have just started using them. But we do have a rather important economic tool for making predictions, and by varying the various inputs and so on we could arrive at some of the answers as to what the effects would be on the economy if there are changes in either public or private investment in the province.

As an example, we could find out certainly what tax cuts could do to the economy. We could find out what an increase in house building will do. We could find out what an increase in public construction could do, or what effect the elimination of grade 13 would have on the economy.

From what I can gather—and this is from the recent series of articles in the Globe and Mail dealing with the ODC or how growth fund subsidies conflict—it would seem to me that The Department of Trade and Development does not talk to the Treasury Department and consequently, shall we say, there is no horizontal integration in this government; and one arm seems to be going one way handing out money.

It is rather interesting to note in this article that in the eastern Ontario village of Summerstown they have handed out $278,000. The total population of the area is 71 people or roughly 14 families, which amounts to about $20,000 per family. Perhaps we should consider subsidizing the families by about $5,000 each; they would be very happy to move out of there and we might be spending our money in a much more useful and effective place.

There should be much greater emphasis placed on research in this province. The report of the science council is very critical of the research that is going on in Canada. I think the Ontario government has a responsibility to get involved and not just in the minor way that the Sheridan corporation is operating, but certainly through the universities and various public and private institutions. We should be spending money in attempting to find out the needs of the people of Ontario, finding out the things we can best do in Ontario with our natural resources and people who are available to us. We should try to be original instead imitative or just copying what somebody does just south of us.

The results of course will provide useful work for our talented and trained people; we can enhance our economy by applying new technology, and we should certainly fulfil the desires of the Ontario people to a better life.

A certain field where we should look is the field of public transportation. The equipment we have now appears to me to be more of a covered wagon with a stainless steel coating, and if anybody uses some of the trains, you will find out that they are rather heavy, bulky and noisy, despite the fact that they are new. Perhaps this is one area that the Ontario government should enter into.

We have manufacturing facilities in Ontario that can build this equipment. We certainly do a lot of research. A lot of countries—Japan again, for example, and France and Germany—are coming up with very new and very modern public transportation equipment. In Ontario we are doing very little. We have a certain expertise existing in this province in the field of STOL—this is, the short take-off and landing aircraft—and again the provincial government could possibly be involved.

We say that maybe it is a federal matter but perhaps this could be done in conjunction with the federal and provincial governments. I am sure The Department of Trade and Development have not even looked into that sector or discussed the matter to see how we could increase that kind of industry. We can even look into the matter of providing more effective snow-removal. After last winter I think some people would be very interested in finding out how we can become more efficient.

The matter of metal fabricating is another area which should be expanded. We have discussed the possibility of a Crown-operated smelter, either totally owned by the government or else operated in partnership with private enterprise. Perhaps this is a start; this will be phase one. The second phase would be, of course, to have these companies fabricate the metals in Canada.

A good example of this is that Inco takes Canadian copper and it takes Canadian nickel to Huntington, West Virginia, where it operates a fabricating mill which employs 3,000 people and contributes something like $40 million a year to the payroll of that area. This is the kind of money and these are the kind of jobs that should have been in the Province of Ontario. We certainly could use them.

We can examine and look into things like recycling of waste. There are certainly many more suggestions that we can provide, but the point is that most of these would provide substantial jobs—not the kind of pots-and-pans industries that the last minister was setting up around the province, which employ a minimal amount of labour and also pay minimum wages.

The other point that we should bear in mind here is that most of the industries in Canada—Canadian industries, small Canadian businesses—that are located in Ontario are located in major urban centres and they are prepared to expand. They will grow, provided they have the capital.

One of the things I did a couple of weeks ago was take a survey in Brantford. I mailed out a questionnaire to various industries and asked them, if money were available to them, would there be expansion of jobs and so on. The replies were very interesting.

Not all of them said they wanted expansion. Not all of them said they wanted to have anything to do with the government. But at least 30 per cent of those industries replied and said that they could use extra money and they could expand.

I will not mention the names, but I will read one of the letters.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Who could not use extra money? Use common sense; we all could.

Mr. Makarchuk: Why does the hon. member not go back to sleep?

Mr. W. Newman: I might as well.

Mr. Makarchuk: To continue:

Dear Madam:

Re business prospect survey—please find answers to your questions.

For all business the Ontario government policy is poor.

This is a manufacturing business.

We can see no effort at all to support small businesses in areas that are not designated for aid.

Investment capital shortage is the biggest obstacle to growth in our business. We are continually expanding already, but lack of capital restricts us to those investments which will not put any more workers on our payroll.

If government aid were available we would then be able to buy equipment which would then generate jobs. We estimate about one job for each $12,000 to $15,000 invested.

This is in comparison to the figures being kicked around by the last Minister of Trade and Development, who said that you need $30,000 to create a job.

The kind of aid we visualize would be a loan at low or no interest, say for 10 years, the total amount to be supplied by the government but with the condition that the recipient partly or wholly match the same amount during the term of the loan.

Again the companies are quite willing to put up their share of the money.

We are not in favour of any outright grants against the issue of shares to the government, for the following reasons: If the government holds a majority of shares the company in effect has changed hands. In the case of minority interest, and the company never declares a dividend, the taxpayers' money is down the drain. We feel that a loan will expand business, jobs, profits and the increased revenue from these sources should be ample remuneration for the government.

And they have a good point there. It is a lot easier and a lot more economic to keep people working than to have them on welfare. The letter goes on:

We now have five employees and can create one job for each $12,000 to $15,000 invested within one and a half years.

Thereafter a natural growth will create many more jobs. We estimate that a $75,000 government loan would result in about 10 to 15 jobs within five years. We are a manufacturing type of business.

The other questionnaires were very much in the same line. They did mention that there was too much red tape involved in dealing with the Ontario government. They say they would like investment that would pay, in this particular one, up to about 75 per cent of the total investment and they feel that they could provide jobs for 10 to 12 people.

Another one says, in answer to the question: "How satisfied are you with the present Ontario government policy toward businesses?"—they say they are poor. The reason for major obstacles to growth of business is a matter of market conditions. They could use capital and they would like to get the capital at eight to eight and a half per cent, something in the 10-year period.

Anyway, basically the answers are the same. The point is that there are businesses in Ontario right now—they are located in the urban centres, for good reasons—which can expand, which would like to expand, but the point is that they cannot get the capital that they require from the banks and the usual sources. And if they have to pay something like 10 per cent, then they just cannot operate at that cost. They cannot get that kind of capital and they are looking to the government to provide some assistance. The government is in a better position to raise this capital on the bond market and provide it to these people at lower than current interest rates.

I may point out that Manitoba has done certain things, and as an example has set up a small loans body for small businesses. These are businesses where the risk is high but the possibilities of growth are very good.

The other point I would like to make, and this is out of the Globe and Mail, and it says:

The annual report for the year ending March 31, 1970, tabled in the Legislature by Industry Minister Leonard Evans said loans receivable more than doubled in the 1969-1970 fiscal year, increasing by more than $69 million from the previous year.

The Manitoba government has given out something like $69 million in the matter of a year to businesses to promote business growth in the province in terms of loans, etc.

Now compare this to the total that has been given out by the Ontario Development Corporation, which is roughly $30 million. Taking into account the fact that our population is at least seven times as great, on the same ratio the ODC in Ontario should have been handing out something like $300 million in loans to increase business.

It should be significant that Manitoba is the only province in Canada where the unemployment rate has been cut back, and where the welfare rate has dropped, and where jobs have been provided as a result of a direct government policy to direct and encourage economic growth. It also is the only government that up to now has spoken up to Ottawa about the fact that the policies followed in Ottawa are to the detriment of the country, and it has spoken out very strongly.

I notice the last Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has come out with some public statement to this effect; and our friends to the right—for publicity's sake and nothing else of course—have also attacked the federal Liberal government's policy. But it is funny that when the federal Prime Minister appears out in the hustings they gather around him like fleas around a dog you know, congratulating him, shaking hands, reminding him how great he is, telling him what great policies he is putting through in the country; and then over here you see them coming out with their rather hypocritical messages that they are concerned about the growth, that they are concerned about the unemployment, that they are concerned about the lowering standards of living—

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Of course, the member is the only one who thinks about these things.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): You holier than thou!

Mr. Makarchuk: If members are so concerned, the only member who spoke up was the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). The other day he did so specifically. I have not heard anyone else criticize the policy and criticize the people who are implementing these particular policies.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): In fact, they are defending him.

Mr. Ferrier: They are defending Trudeau.

Mr. Makarchuk: And it is strange, when this—

Mr. Martel: By their silence they are defending him.

Mr. Makarchuk:—matter comes up, when the questions of lower standards of living or a matter of foreign investment comes up, the standard reply from the federal government, of course, is that if we raise the employment level, we will have to lower our standard of living, which I find very difficult to try to understand.

The other argument, Mr. Speaker, that they were using, was the fact that if we put our people to work, we are not going to have money to fight pollution. The third argument they used in Brantford was that we have to impose a totalitarian government in order to provide full employment. What really amazes me and annoys me is the fact that every civilized country in the western world has managed to lick the problem of unemployment. They may have unemployment up to a three per cent level, but it is a lot lower than that, and they do not have raging inflation. They do not have the problems, and furthermore they do not have the resources, that we have, but they do have governments that are prepared to get involved, governments that are dedicated to the idea that people should have jobs.

Government members are not dedicated. If they were, we would have seen some action.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): If all five of the hon. member's men got in as leader, they would still have fewer than 20 seats.

Mr. Gaunt: A little more substance and less froth.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): How many seats has the member's party in Quebec?

Mr. Ferrier: How many government leaders have tried to create unemployment like Trudeau has?

Mr. Makarchuk: If they were so concerned about unemployment, I would have liked to have seen them come up and say specifically what particular economic policies they would like to follow. But no; they come up with these remarks about the leadership campaign. It is a very good leadership campaign. We have got more people running there. We have some very excellent people running for the leadership.

I wish hon. members opposite had some people like that running. I notice that Mr. Hellyer may be contesting the leadership, besides the member for Grey-Bruce. I should not forget Mr. Hellyer's statement.

As far as by-election in Brant county is concerned, we will take care of that when the time comes, and I can assure members they are not going to get elected there.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): They are jealous about our leadership convention.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Why does the member not go down to Ottawa and straighten them out?

Mr. Ruston: They had Lewis there for years, and Tommy Douglas and they are not getting anywhere.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is funny, Mr. Speaker, about the devious ways that the Liberals went about before they floated this by-election in Brant county. I am referring back to the Goldfarb report. Some of the questions in the report incidentally were, "Do you think the NDP is contributing to separatism?" Again, the people did not buy that.

The last candidate in that campaign was a chap by the name of Derrick Blackburn. They asked the people these questions: "Please finish the following statement: 'I like Derrick Blackburn because—'" The other one was: "I dislike Derrick Blackburn because—"

Hon. members are really interested in issues in that! It is quite obvious they are really interested in issues. They are not concerned about personalities! They should be ashamed that they use those techniques—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Makarchuk: No wait—using those techniques to try and float a campaign and fight a campaign ignores the gut issues. They ignore the fact that there are people unemployed in Brantford, something like 4,000 people. The fact that they have destroyed their dignity and the fact that they have destroyed their self-respect: they do not really care.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): The hon. member has helped them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will address the House through the Chair.

Mr. Makarchuk: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Through you, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has—

Mr. Ruston: With a member like that in Brantford, no wonder they have unemployment. The member scares all industry out.

Mr. Makarchuk: —the statements that they have made about unemployment, Mr. Speaker, I consider as completely hypocritical.

An hon. member: That is irrelevant.

Mr. Makarchuk: And what we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is that we intend to move over there and when—

Mr. Gaunt: I told the hon. member he was afraid of us, otherwise he would not give us so much attention.

Mr. Makarchuk: —we are going to plan our economy, the planning is going to be done by the people, for the people, because that is what government is all about.

We are not going to let them play patsy for the corporate sector. The corporate sector will have to take second place to the needs of the people and the needs of this country.

Mr. Speaker: I think that it being so near to 6 o'clock, I will consider it as such and allow the next speaker to have full flight without interruptions.

The next speaker is the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson).

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to have this opportunity to participate in this Throne debate.

First and foremost, I want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Davis)—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Clerk Assistant conduct the count?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): It is so unusual to see the member for High Park.

Clerk Assistant: There are 17.

Mr. Shulman: Okay.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The member for High Park is in his place.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Gilbertson: First and foremost, I want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister on becoming—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member for High Park ought to be in Ottawa trying to choose the new leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Gilbertson: —our new leader. Also, those members who—

Mr. Shulman: That is not until Saturday.

Mr. Gilbertson: —were so fortunate in receiving cabinet positions. I wish each one of them every success.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): We were pulling for the hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. Gilbertson: I feel that the government's calling of a special debate on unemployment has given us all the opportunity to have a good look at how we can assist in improving the economy of our various ridings. As the representative from Algoma riding, I am naturally not only concerned about the general economic conditions and welfare of our country and province, but also very deeply concerned about that of my riding.

I realize that the government is doing a lot to help out the economy with various grants and loans. But I cannot help thinking that we do overlook the little, energetic individual who wants to try to initiate a business. I talk to many such energetic, hard-working people who have projects they would like to get off the ground—

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex-South): That is right!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): We will look after them.

Mr. Gilbertson: —but, unfortunately, it is almost impossible for the small guy to get started in business these days.

Mr. Shulman: It will be easier after the next election.

Mr. Gilbertson: That is what the member for High Park thinks.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Is the member saying that it is going to be more difficult?

Mr. Gilbertson: I think we must stop to realize that it is this type of person who has helped build our province and that we must give them the sort of encouragement that they deserve.

Mr. Sargent: Get to the honeymoon again!

Mr. Gilbertson: I feel the establishment of loans of a few thousand dollars at low interest would be the answer for these people. By helping a lot of individuals, we would be giving the economy a giant shot in the arm. A great deal of assistance to a great many small businessmen can be as important as a great deal of assistance to one big industry.

I also hope the government will see to it that the small industries that are trying to get established in Algoma get the grants they are requesting so that they can start operating soon. In line with this, I also hope the government will give Algo Craft in Thessalon and other industries in my area the necessary money to keep their very worthwhile projects going.

Mr. Gaunt: How is the bridge coming along?

Mr. Gilbertson: Why?

Mr. Gaunt: That bridge has been coming for 20 years.

Mr. Sargent: That bridge will make a good election theme.

Mr. Gilbertson: You will be hearing about it. Just listen.

Mr. Sargent: Next week?

Mr. Gilbertson: Mr. Speaker, in Algoma and other northern ridings, you cannot have all your eggs in the one basket.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): We want some eggs though.

Mr. Paterson: At the price of eggs?

Mr. Gilbertson: You must have a variety of things to do.

Mr. Ferrier: You must have some eggs, though!

Mr. Gilbertson: In the summertime—Mr. Speaker, I hope that you will keep order in the House and keep the opposition lined up.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: In the summertime, we have a large tourist trade because of our area's many attractions, but I think we must also consider building up the northland as a winter vacationland.

One thing that has helped our economy and revitalized the winter recreation is the snowmobile. Some call them the ski-doods, but there are so many different varieties that I will just call them snowmobiles. Practically every family in the northland has a snowmobile and some even have two or three. I feel that one thing the government could do would be to help in making trails through the woods so that the lakes would be more accessible for those people who like to go ice-fishing.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, it could be a good summer work project for students.

It might also be a good idea for the government to concentrate a little more on restocking the lakes and on making fish available for privately owned fish farms or fish ponds to buy. For example, it would only take a day or two to dam up little creeks and make private ponds on privately owned land that would be ideal for speckled trout. This project would not be too expensive either, and it would certainly benefit the tourist industry.

We could also build up the north's economy through capitalizing more on two of our delicious resources—blueberries and maple syrup. Now, these things may sound insignificant but, as I said before, it takes many little things to help build a strong economy. In addition, in many other enterprises you have to spend a lot of money in order to harvest them, but blueberries grow wild and are there for the taking.

We could employ many of the students looking for summer jobs in picking the acres of blueberries in the north. They could then be sold at roadside stands along Highway 17 and other northland highways and also in other parts of the province where there are no blueberries.

Mr. Speaker, some of the members were wondering when I was going to get to the maple syrup. Well, I am going to get to it now.

Mr. Gaunt: What is the wholesale price this year?

Mr. Gilbertson: All right, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps next week I will be bringing some samples for the members.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: Mr. Speaker, that should help to sweeten up the opposition.

Mr. Shulman: What do we do for the government?

Mr. Gaunt: Takes a lot to sweeten us up.

Mr. Gilbertson: The maple syrup could be sold both in liquid form and as a sugar candy in various souvenir shops and places of business along the highways. If they were packaged attractively as Canadian souvenirs, I am certain they would be snapped up by the visitors from the United States and other parts of our own country.

Mr. Speaker, so far I have been dealing with the northernmost parts of my riding. But there are other sections which are more adapted to farming, and this is something I feel students could also get involved in during the summer. This would be both very educational and financially rewarding. You know, the people say that the younger generation are not like they were years back, like the fathers and the mothers of the past—but I do not believe that.

I think that the young people are energetic and enterprising and would like to be able to do things on their own.

Mr. Stokes: I think they are a lot smarter.

Mr. Gilbertson: And I think with all the land we have got in Algoma that is not being productive now, it would be a good thing for a lot of the students. We hear that there are going to be thousands of students travelling on the highways this summer and going to and fro looking for work. I think we should try to initiate something to help these young people to do something for themselves.

While I am talking about student summer employment, I want to praise the government for its efforts in assisting students this summer through its hiring of 14,000 students and its summer activity programmes. I think the employing of 2,000 of the 14,000 students in cleaning up our environment is a very constructive idea.

Many people today, I reiterate, say the boys and girls today are not like they used to be, that they do not want to work and that they just want to use the summer months for fun. But this is not true. There are many young people today who are every bit as energetic and conscientious and hard-working as their parents were in their youth, and who want to pay their own way. That is why I am so pleased that the government is spearheading programmes that will foster their initiative.

Mr. Speaker, I am also very concerned about shoring up the economy of Blind River. I have voiced my concern many times about the need to establish industries to replace Domtar, which ceased operations a couple of years ago. I know that two or three small industries are trying to get established in Blind River and I hope that we can see this accomplished before very long. The people are getting very anxious and the economy has gone rapidly downhill—

Mr. Stokes: The government will not help them.

Mr. Gilbertson: So I am hoping, Mr. Speaker, that the government will help as much as it possibly can to get something going in Blind River. I hope that the cabinet ministers are listening to this—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): They are all listening.

Mr. Gilbertson: —because they are the ones who can do something about getting the show on the road.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): That is what the hon. member told them last year. They are not listening at all.

Mr. Gilbertson: Now I appreciate what has been done.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: There has been considerable done but there is more that needs doing.

An hon. member: He is right; he is right.

Mr. Gilbertson: And I am sure the cabinet ministers are listening and will do something about it.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Where are they?

Mr. Martel: They might be listening. They have been doing that for three and a half years.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): They probably are where the hon. member's leader is.

Mr. Brown: In Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Probably. Which leader is the member talking about?

An hon. member: They are doing as much for him as they are for the fishermen.

An hon. member: Or for housing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: I must say that the people in my riding appreciate the many projects the government has undertaken there. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have been very concerned about this situation. This government has also given great assistance toward the construction of a new composite school for central Algoma which should be completed within a year or so.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member for Thunder Bay is leaving too.

Mr. Gilbertson: I am also pleased about the various road projects that have been completed and those that are currently in the mill. These include the construction of Highway 631 from White River to Hornepayne which will give the people of Hornepayne an outlet to Algoma.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see more passing lanes built on the grades on our northern highways. This is something I hope the government will include in its reconstruction of Highway 17 from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury. One place where this would be particularly valuable is at Laird Hill about 20 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie on Highway 17.

I hope the Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is in the House. If he is not I hope he gets the message anyway.

An hon. member: He is not here.

Another hon. member: He is out to dinner.

An hon. member: If he has not got the message before, how does the hon. member think he is going to get it now?

Mr. Gilbertson: This is a rather dangerous spot because of the long grades.

While I am speaking about transportation, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out the need of Algoma for small airports. I understand that the government is already helping in this area by assisting in the construction of airports in the north. This will mean people from such American cities as Detroit, Grand Rapids and Chicago, as well as many other places, will be able to fly up to our area for the weekend.

Until now many of our American neighbours have been unable to make weekend excursions to our area because of the long hard drive. But with quick plane trips now being possible, I am certain we will get many more visitors and this in turn will also help boost our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to use this opportunity to bring the need for a health clinic for central Algoma to the government's attention. At present we have two small hospitals, one with about 10 beds and the other with about 20 beds and each with only one doctor in our area. One is in Thessalon and the other is on St. Joseph's Island.

This simply is not sufficient medical care and I feel a central clinic would help meet the health and welfare needs of our people. I would like to see such a health clinic, which would have three doctors and a dentist, built in central Algoma.

Mr. Martel: Have the Indians build it.

Mr. Gilbertson: Another health service that my riding and all of the province needs badly, Mr. Speaker, is more facilities for the chronically ill. In this regard, I am pleased that the government is giving serious consideration to the question of extending OHSIP to cover all nursing homes.

An hon. member: For five years they have been giving serious consideration.

Another hon. member: Wait until they get into the planning stage.

Mr. Gilbertson: For 28 years the government has been giving good service to the people of Ontario.

An hon. member: Why has the hon. member got that list of things he needs then?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: I do not believe any government is ever going to see the time when everybody's needs are completely supplied.

Mr. Brown: Just wait until the New Democrats get in.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): We are going to wait a long, long time.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Do not hold your breath.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): We have been waiting 28 years for that new government and it has not got in yet. There must be something wrong with the government.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): All good things come to those who wait.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gilbertson: Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn briefly to the important area of education. We have heard a lot of criticism from the opposition—

Mr. Deans: It is justifiable.

Mr. Gilbertson: —both the NDP and the Liberals, about the cost of education.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): And the member for Hamilton Mountain (J. R. Smith).

Mr. Gilbertson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to these critics that their children would not be growing up to be such fine young men and women, well equipped to meet the challenge of life, if it were not for our province's fine education system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Did the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) write that paragraph?

Mr. Brown: No, the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gilbertson: I would like the opposition to know that this is my own homespun speech.

Before the former Minister of Education initiated the idea that there would be equal educational opportunities for everyone, no matter where they lived in Ontario, there was a lot of criticism from people in small towns and rural areas, complaining that their children did not have equal educational opportunities with those in the big cities. I must congratulate the former Minister of Education on his bold step, which has made Ontario's educational system one of the best in the world. Now that the challenge of meeting the postwar baby boom has been met, The Department of Education has moved to cut down expenses while still making certain that the quality of education is not decreased.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that this will be a very productive and worthwhile session and I know that the government will continue to assist my area, as it will help all of Ontario, during the session.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is why the unemployment rate is so high up there.

Mr. Sargent: A successful year.

An hon. member: Now we will get the facts.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, sometimes one wonders really what is going on here in the House—and I speak of the lethargy of the government in these opening weeks of the Legislature. There has been the reshuffling of the cabinet; some new faces, but the same old group groping for answers during the question period.

We are all concerned there is nothing on the order paper. We had government members voting with the opposition, we had cabinet trying to frustrate the work of the committees, and after considering all this, I said to my colleague, the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) today, "What do you suppose the strategy of the government really is? And he replied, "Well, in my considered opinion there is no strategy. They simply do not know what they are doing."

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Why does the member not stick to the text? Go back to the text.

Mr. Good: This is perhaps the most astute assessment of what has gone on in the first three weeks of the Legislature that I have heard from anyone.

An hon. member: Welcome back.

Mr. Good: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government realize the hopelessness of their confusion and go to the polls as quickly as possible, and let someone go over there who can accept the responsibility of government.

Mr. Speaker, there are really only two matters with which I want to deal this evening. The first matter which I would like to discuss is the section on municipal government reform. Let us consider the idea that the underlying or generic nature of urban problems is usually that they involve a great deal of uncertainty and risk. To me the uncertainty with municipal problems and government problems is of three basic types.

First there is the uncertainty of the knowledge of our environment; this would involve the social and economic and physical conditions that affect the people of Ontario. There are also the functional areas of the environment, such as transportation and housing, which also affect us very greatly.

Undoubtedly this uncertainty usually results—I am sure the members of the cabinet would agree—in the politicians saying we need more studies, we have got to find out what the problem is so that we can deal with it. The social and economic problems of our urban society are very difficult to research and come up with definite answers. Scientific research, of course, is much more definite but things that deal with people are much harder to ascertain.

The element of change, of course, is inherent in our social problems and these demand bold and positive solutions. We cannot afford to operate this province within a straitjacket of the status quo. It is, however, these problems which most seriously affect the quality of life in this province, and in many areas I feel we have had enough studies and the time is here for bold, new action, which we have not been getting.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, there is the uncertainty as to the future intentions or potential actions of related fields of choice. By this I mean that, for instance, if The Department of Municipal Affairs does "A", how will that affect The Department of Treasury and Economics? Or more specifically, how will The Department of Treasury and Economics react to some action of The Department of Municipal Affairs?

This basic problem usually results, I suppose, in the bureaucrat or technocrat saying we need more and better co-ordination. This, of course, is very true. However, I think it is a very basic problem, one which has no easy solution in our present provincial government structure, but one which must, and will, have to be faced and solved if the province is to develop in an orderly manner, and the environmental problems are going to be met.

When The Department of Treasury and Economics brought forth phase 2 of its Design for Development, the Toronto-centred region, it was immediately apparent that many previously announced schemes and potential developments did not fit into the concept of its plan. I am sure The Department of Treasury and Economics, as an example, had no hand in the Ontario Housing Corporation land assembly in Waterloo county, nor of course did they have any hand in the planning of Century City, northeast of Toronto.

Presently, we had the condition where almost every minister in government is trying to get into the act of giving handouts from his department. Municipal Affairs has recently started new programmes of the old age tax reduction grants and the grant of tax reduction for farmers. They also administer the basic shelter tax reduction programme.

The Department of Trade and Development looks after Ontario Housing Corporation and senior citizen housing, as well as the questionable Ontario Development Corporation. The Department of Agriculture wanted to get into the 25 per cent rebate to farmers—and these, Mr. Speaker, are just a few. Is it any wonder that the people of Ontario are confused as to where to go for their help when they need it, and also confused as to who is actually doing the planning of our future here in this province?

What we really need is not a patched-up programme of more handouts, with one department trying to outdo the next, but a complete overhaul of our taxation system and a guaranteed income with built-in work and educational incentives to replace the multitude of social and welfare benefits now being promoted by each department. It must be apparent too that we do in fact need more co-ordination among the departments.

Thirdly, we have the uncertainties—and I think this is very important—as to the value judgements or value commitments when decision-makers make a decision in their particular area or policy, and these policy choices, as I say, affect one department and the other. For example, I can hear one minister say to himself, “Well now, what would be the trade-off for me and my department doing something which could be detrimental to the political life of another minister, or even negate the effect of another programme?” This, I am sure, must cause the people who are doing the analysis for the government to say, “Well, we have to have more policy guidance.”

In any government I feel that the process of solving these problems must be one which recognizes the high degree of uncertainty. Local government structures must adopt and innovate; flexibility is essential. This requires, then, that implementation of provincial government policy in the forms of new legislation must meet the needs of the municipality as well as be acceptable by the people of the community.

Too often, Mr. Speaker, this government in recent years has forced new legislation onto the people of Ontario that had no degree of community acceptability and did not fulfil the purpose for which it was actually intended. The government accepts advice from policy analysts which, I feel, has not been shaped and modified into the proper framework so that it can be implemented and help the people of the province.

It is apparent that the government of Ontario lacks the control mechanisms that would be responsible for adapting the various programmes to its own internal needs and the needs of the people of Ontario. And here I would like to give an example: An internal need of the government might be to create with meaningful and complementary incentives within a department of government. If, for instance, it were the overall goal of a certain department of government to prevent the destruction of older homes and to increase the inventory of such older homes, which are being torn down by the thousands within the province—if this were an overall goal of one department, then it is apparent that the provincial market value assessment programme, which gives low assessment for housing that is poorly kept and run down and higher assessment for housing that is well-kept and would bring more on the real estate market, then it is in fact an incentive that is detrimental to the overall object of maintaining older houses for refurbishing. So we have many instances where one department of government is in fact creating situations that work against another department.

I would now like to look closely at the efforts of this government at municipal reform thus far. The need for reform is apparent to all of us. We know that as our cities have grown, annexation has not been a satisfactory solution in many areas. The urban tax base is inadequate. Property is not the proper basis for such a high share of education costs and other social charges. We know that services are needed in many towns and villages which cannot afford them, and this was proved and shown yesterday during the private members' hour.

The fact is that the government of Ontario has distorted the whole programme of municipal reform. I feel that the studies, the government proposals and the legislation have concentrated too much upon boundaries—where they will be, the number of tiers of government, the division of responsibility between these tiers, the abolition of special use boards and commissions, the appointment of the super-mayors and chairmen in regional government and the retention of control by Queen's Park over almost every phase of municipal operation.

In my view, I would like briefly to state what two major concerns of the proposed municipal reform should be, first, the development of local government management structure which will have the capacity and would be given the power to adopt and innovate, rather than the capacity to function only under stable and fixed straitjacket control from Queen's Park.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: A point of order.

Mr. Whitney: Is it proper that members of the opposition should turn their backs on the whole Legislature and engage in a conference while the business of the Legislature is going on? I am very sorry; I apologize to the present Speaker, because I have no fault to find there, but I do notice—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What about the conversation going on right in front of the member?

Mr. Whitney: I do notice that two members of the Legislature were staring at the wall—their backs to all the rest of us—and they were engaged in a conference. I must say that I do not think it is the proper thing to do in this Legislature; that that sort of thing should take place.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): The opposition should resign.

Mr. Good: Let me reiterate. The two major concerns of the proposed municipal reform should be the development of a local government structure which will have the capacity and would be given the power to adopt and innovate, rather than the capacity to function only under the straitjacket control from Queen's Park.

Secondly, I feel very strongly that government reform at the local level must include financial and tax reform with sufficient analysis done, prior to the implementation, so that the people involved will know what the cost or savings, if any, will be when they are asked to accept municipal reform.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): There have been no savings up to the moment.

Mr. Good: No. Dealing with the first point, let me say the need to develop local government management structures which have the capacity and authority to innovate and be flexible to changing conditions—for example, Mr. Speaker, the elimination of special purpose boards and commissions—has been recommended by everyone from Jones to Fyfe. All commissioners who have made studies of the restructuring of local government have found enough weaknesses and disadvantages in the use of special-purpose bodies to recommend their abolition.

However, it can be proved that the government of Ontario has not given the necessary attention to what would be needed to improve the management capabilities of local government councils and administrations where, in fact, the special functions must ultimately rest, if the boards and commissions are going to be done away with. One wonders if, in some cases, the fragmentation of the local government resulted years ago from the inability of local government, because of Queen's Park control, to manage and control a complex system in the midst of a changing environment. To overhaul local government and to neglect the total reorganization of management structures could be a grave shortcoming.

Mr. Speaker, I contacted the municipal organization and administration branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs and was told that no special studies are in progress to consider this key component of local government reform. There is, I was told, an on-going departmental committee that, from time to time, considers changes in municipal administrative structure. With the monumental task that confronts each regional government in the province, one can hardly believe that no reports are available and no in-depth studies have been made by the municipal organization and administration branch on this important subject.

The municipal research section of The Department of Municipal Affairs, however, is starting some research to ascertain if municipal governments need restructuring or, perhaps, only strengthening. Because of this lack and uncertainty it would appear that it will be a long time until special purpose bodies are eliminated and the control is placed back in the hands of elected officials. Now, if the reorganized municipal government is to have any real meaning, it must be given sufficient authority to adapt to changes. Flexibility at the local level is something that the provincial government has not permitted. This lack of local authority is put forward very clearly in the recent brief presented by the city of St. Catharines to the provincial government and I would like to quote briefly from it:

Reference has already been made to the need for a review of the total government structure, greater interdepartmental co-ordination and improved management skills. We have also indicated the need for a redefinition of the role of "the city" and its relationship with the province. Since our organization deals from time to time with most government departments and agencies, it is not possible to set out here all administrative practices that merit review. It may be useful, however, to give two or three examples.

We are concerned with the duplication and time required in processing subdivision development to the stage where homes can be provided.

Another example of an administrative procedure that could be improved is that which is involved in processing a local improvement sewer up to the time of installation.

And two appendices are attached to this report which spell out in detail the 20 or 25 sets that are required before these procedures can be met, simply because of the adamant position of The Department of Municipal Affairs that their hand must be in every turn of the cog of the wheel at the municipal level.

These two examples are good illustrations of the cost and time involved in obtaining approval of a relatively simple matter, through a complicated system of duplication and red tape. The cost incurred by the developer, due to delays, is passed on to the homeowner, while the costs of processing are passed on in the form of both property and income tax. Surely these procedures could be simplified and streamlined considerably. These are areas where greater authority should be turned back to local government, which should work within standards or guidelines established by the province.

Another area which should be improved is that of shared-cost programmes. It is understood that there are close to 100 different forms of grants available to municipalities to assist in the cost of various specific works or services, administered through various departments of government or agencies. Considerable administrative costs are involved at the local and provincial levels in processing applications for approval.

These shared-cost programmes also tend to create artificial, rather than true, priority programmes of works or services. Municipal governments are naturally attracted to programmes for which there are large provincial grants.

There are several advantages to the elimination of the present grant-in-aid programmes in favour of unconditional grants.

It would considerably reduce administrative costs at both levels of government.

It would allow local councils to establish true priorities on the basis of need and with this increased responsibility there would result more direct accountability to the public.

There would also be considerable savings in accounting and policing costs. At the present time, audit forces from various government agencies are in the municipality almost continuously, attesting to the accuracy of grant claims. In so doing, they are also covering the same ground as is covered by the local auditors in the conduct of their examination.

Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) made much of the return of local autonomy under new regional governments, but in practice this autonomy has not materialized. Instead of giving more authority back to the municipalities, it appears that Queen's Park is centralizing more and more.

A Liberal government in Ontario is committed to the extension of local authority, and its first task will be to create a framework within which the local municipality can operate with more flexibility. This, of course, is something that the socialists could never accomplish as their whole ideology is based on central government control.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): What woke the member up? What about the rest of these guys; they are not paying attention.

Mr. Good: As long as the government is paying attention, that is the main thing.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): As long as the minister is listening, that is the main thing.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member's own colleagues are not listening. I am trying to.

Mr. Good: In discussing the second matter, we must not only discuss the need for municipal tax reform but also the need for in-depth studies and projections in matters of financing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: These studies and evaluations should and must accompany any proposal for municipal change.

Now we are all aware of the fact that the present government has changed its Minister of Municipal Affairs for the simple reason they want to cool this whole subject across the province. There is no doubt about it. But believe me it is far from cool in many areas.

The biggest complaint when the regional municipality of Niagara was created was that there was no indication of what the cost would be. No one knew what the creation of a regional police force, for instance, would cost. As a stab in the dark The Regional Municipal Grants Act offered $1.50 per capita grant for police purposes. We all know how this amount was far from adequate, and because of the financial difficulty experienced the government was forced to rescue the whole operation. Similarly, the administrative costs and the levies on the area municipalities were unknown quantities, and this, more than anything else, has caused the present problems in the Niagara Regional government, resulting in St. Catharines wanting to opt out of the region.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk now about the government proposal for Waterloo county.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): The member is all in favour of it?

Mr. Good: Last October, during the consideration of the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs—

An hon. member: I do not know which is worse, the Waterloo government, or that bridge down in Port Dover.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Waterloo government is going to be his Waterloo.

An hon. member: It is his Waterloo, all right.

Mr. Good: I do not think so.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): That bridge will be the government's Waterloo.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I will miss the member for Kitchener.

Mr. Ruston: That bridge in Port Dover is the one.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): The Premier will not have to worry about that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, yes, we will.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Kinsmen Club are filling their hats on that.

Mr. Good: Last October during the consideration of the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs—

Mr. Innes: Has the Prime Minister picked out his seat over here?

Mr. Good: I suggested that when the government proposal for Waterloo county was released, the minister should be prepared to back up his proposal with the necessary facts and figures which would show the people of Waterloo county the advantages of his particular proposal.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Good: Now to date, Mr. Speaker, the greatest criticism of the proposal is its lack of detail. I know the minister will probably defend this by saying that this is intended so that the local people will have a chance to reply to this proposal.

Well now, listen to this; I know Mr. Speaker, and every cabinet minister across the floor knows, that except for some minor boundary changes which the government might allow—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What would the member think if they did not have a chance to respond? He would really get excited then.

Mr. Good:—the basic pattern of the legislation has already been established.

An hon. member: Get on with it. I have work to do on my speech.

Mr. Good: Let me repeat this. There is no indication, and we have no reason to believe, that the regional government legislation creating a two-tiered system—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Participatory democracy, as invented by Pierre Trudeau.

Mr. Good:—of government in Waterloo county will be any different from that in the regions of York, Niagara, Ottawa-Carleton or Muskoka.

Knowing this, which you know and which I know, the proposal has glossed over many essential facts and details which should have been made known at the time the proposal was submitted in the middle of March.

Now the people of Waterloo county need municipal reform; their elected councils have been working hard for many years to bring about this reform. I have supported it, and I still support it, but I think that the government of Ontario is not being totally honest by not divulging the exact details of how its proposal will affect the financial pictures of each of the newly created areas.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It will.

An hon. member: Quiet there.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Who needs it?

Mr. Good: They will—just listen. There is only one page in the proposal devoted to the explanation of the financial matters. This one page in the proposal deals with the regional levies and the provincial grants—and the matter of transitional adjustments is only given one brief sentence. I consider these items to be of the utmost importance. On checking with The Department of Municipal Affairs, I find it unbelievable that no one as yet has figured out what the equalized assessment for each of the new areas in the proposal would be.

Mr. Speaker, the proposal declares that regional levies will be raised from the area municipalities in proportion to each area's share of the regional assessment; what the minister probably meant was each area's share of the ratable equalized assessment. Surely, one would have thought that to substantiate the effectiveness of each new area boundary The Department of Municipal Affairs would have taken tests on the assessment base of each of the new proposed areas. Well, when I inquired, I found that no one could give me any figures on this matter. No one knew what the new equalized assessment would be on these new proposed areas.

We all know it too well through what happened to county school board implementation, that the levies were made on equalized assessment and they can, and do, and did create hardships in some areas of the larger county school board regions. The Waterloo Board of Education has always had trouble in this regard, and we know that the equalization factors are not a foolproof method of levelling out levies from one jurisdiction to another.

To substantiate this further, and especially for the interest of the previous speaker, may I just point out a headline of April 13 in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record: "Four Townships Face Further 20 Per Cent Hikes in School Tax Costs." This is after 20 and 15 per cent increases in the last year—simply because the government's equalization levies do not work.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): But it is appealable. The member can appeal it if he does not like it.

Mr. Worton: Where is the member going to get the money from?

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat my utter amazement that The Department of Municipal Affairs has not done preliminary work to ascertain what the equalized rate of assessment would be in each of the proposed new areas. It is unbelievable that the government would ask us to comment and accept the proposal on which they have not taken any tests to see if these new boundaries do in fact serve the purpose.

Mr. Worton: The member had better check up on that stuff.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is the member going to be doing a year from now?

Mr. Good: Without this information there can be no meaningful assessment—

Mr. Gaunt: We might be running an election.

Mr. Good: —of the new government proposal. We know, Mr. Speaker, that it costs the province almost $50 million in supplementary school grants to bring some degree of equity to a chaotic situation when regional school boards were set up.

Unfortunately, the province is not ready to bail out the city of St. Catharines, which is now paying 47.6 per cent of the regional government costs of Niagara region when they have, in fact, only 29.9 per cent of the equalized assessment.

Mr. Innes: How about that? No wonder the hon. minister will not go down there.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have been there. I was there three weeks ago. Very pleasant. And does the member know something? We will win that riding.

An hon. member: And does the Premier know who will win his riding?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We might win all but one seat. Every riding but that of the member for Huron-Bruce is up for grabs.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Does the member see how we get along over here?

Mr. Good: The regional levies, based on assessment, are only part of the picture. Let us look at the paragraph in the proposal dealing with the provincial grants. "The region would be eligible to come under The Regional Grants Act."

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member had better read Hansard to understand your meanings.

Mr. Good: Now, this could mean that the basic unconditional grant in cities would increase from $6 or $6.25 in the case of Kitchener, to $7.50 per capita. In rural areas, the increase would be from $5 or $5.50, depending on population, to $7.50 per capita.

Over a month has gone since the proposal was released and no one—

An hon. member: How long?

Mr. Good: No one has come forward from the minister's department, not even the minister himself, to explain these important items. How on earth can the minister expect reasonable and rational comment on his proposal when no one gives the local people any information? My guess, Mr. Speaker, is that the government purposely tries to keep everyone confused and in the dark until after the event takes place.

Continuing with the provincial grants, a very important part of The Regional Municipal Grants Act is the density grant which is $5 per capita to certain qualifying municipalities. Would you not agree, Mr. Speaker, that a $5 per capita grant is a very important item? This grant varies with the population density, and to be figured out, the number of acres in each of the new area municipalities must be known. Mr. Speaker, you will not believe this, but once again when I contacted The Department of Municipal Affairs—

Mr. W. Newman: Listen and find out.

Mr. Good: —I found that no one had thought it important enough to figure out the acreage of the proposed new area municipalities.

An hon. member: How about that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No wonder the member for Scarborough East used the word this afternoon—"envisualized."

An hon. member: That is a new one.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I think this is just so important that the Premier should listen to what I have to say. I am going to repeat—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am listening very carefully.

Mr. Good: The grant varies with the population density, and to be figured out the number of acres in each of the new area municipalities must be known. You will not believe this, Mr. Speaker, but once again on contacting The Department of Municipal Affairs I found that no one had thought it important enough to figure out the acreage of the proposed new area municipalities.

Mr. Innes: That is par for the course.

Mr. Good: How could anyone expect a municipality to accept or reject the proposal when no one knows whether or not, for instance, the new area municipality of Galt-Preston-Hespeler, with a population of 62,000 would qualify for an additional $310,000 density grant?

The same situation prevails in other areas of the county and until some answers are received no intelligent assessment of the proposal can possibly be made.

Mr. Spence: Hard to believe.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, to offset and to make up for the complete lack of co-operation by the province I have asked the heads of municipal councils in our area to use their own treasurers and other administrative people to figure out for themselves the answers that should have been supplied with the proposal by the government of Ontario. This government has so frustrated the good intentions of so many people and I consider this subject so important that may I respectfully solicit the minister's co-operation in this matter, even at this late date?

Presently the county of Waterloo has a very good system of co-operation among existing police forces. With the establishment of a regional force we will, of course, be eligible for the $1.50 per capita grant under The Regional Municipal Grants Act. Many of us are hoping that this will almost or fully cover the extra operational expenses for a regional police force. But surely we should be able to expect some provincial financial help with the setting up of the structures and the necessary communication equipment?

Another matter of considerable concern to each municipality in the region has been that of roads. The problem here of course results from the fact that The Department of Highways and Transport may, under The Highway Improvement Act, delegate to the regional municipality responsibility for any roads which may presently be in the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways and Transport. The regional municipality then has no alternative but to hand some of these roads down to the area municipalities.

Now the Minister of Municipal Affairs in his proposal says this—

Mr. W. Newman: Which minister? Tell us which minister?

Mr. Good: The Minister of Municipal Affairs in his proposal says—

Mr. W. Newman: Which one?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There is only one.

Mr. Good: —that a great deal of negotiation and co-ordination with The Department of Highways will be needed but that it can be worked out. This is what they told Niagara, too. We certainly hope that the regional government in Waterloo will not be saddled with having to take over the large mileage of provincial highways that the Niagara regional government had thrust upon it and which caused part of its problems.

An hon. member: They did a pretty fine job in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Good: I realize the government proposal is open for discussion by the inter-municipal committee and the municipalities. However, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly that until such time as proper and definite information is given concerning the equalized assessment and the grant system no intelligent evaluation can be made of the government proposal. At all costs, we want to avoid a duplication of the dissatisfaction that has arisen in the city of St. Catharines.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Disaster.

Mr. Good: This, I think, can be accomplished if the minister is prepared to sit down and discuss it in complete frankness with the necessary data at his disposal to let the people of Waterloo county know the answers to many of the problems that bother them at the present time.

In an article published in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, April 2, 1971, I recommended that a study of the financial aspects of the regional government proposal be made by the treasurers of municipalities in the county. It is gratifying to note that the inter-municipal committee appointed to study the government proposal has set up three sub-committees composed of experts from within our own county to look into the planning, administrative and financial sections of other regional government legislation. I have offered my services to assist in any way that I can when these committees start to study existing legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the extra effort being put in by the people of Waterloo county to compensate for the lack of detail provided by the province, will mean a better and more effective regional government for Waterloo county.

Mr. W. Newman: What do the members want? What do they really want over there?

Mr. Good: If the hon. member would listen he might learn something.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): The member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) has not achieved much for his riding.

Mr. Good: The second section I would like to deal with briefly is water supply for a growing municipality. The supplying of fresh, pure water to our growing cities in the Province of Ontario is of vital concern. Where such a city is situated adjacent to a large body of water the problem is somewhat more simple; however in dealing with cities such as Kitchener and Waterloo, or in fact the whole "golden triangle" area which includes Galt, Preston and Hespeler, and Guelph as well, the supplying of water is becoming an increasingly difficult problem.

Over the past 20 years it has become evident that the large quantities of water needed from the ground to supply the growing cities of Kitchener and Waterloo has caused the water table to drop an estimated 11 feet. In the back of everyone's mind, of course, is the thought that some day our area will require a pipeline from one of the Great Lakes to supply an ever-increasing need for fresh water. Whether this pipeline comes from Lake Huron, Georgian Bay or Lake Erie has been one great controversy, with the thought of water from Lake Erie being very repulsive to the people of our community.

For years the public utilities commission in both cities of Kitchener and Waterloo has lengthened its pipelines and gone farther and farther into the rural areas for new sources of ground water. Various studies show that short-term and intermediate sources are still available from ground water supplies, but that eventually a pipeline would be required.

It was in August of last year that word came from the Ontario Water Resources Commission that the community must make up its mind by September of last year whether or not it would accept a pipeline from Lake Erie. The reason behind this hasty decision was that savings could be realized if the intake being built by Hydro at the present time for their new station in Nanticoke on Lake Erie was enlarged sufficiently to supply both Hydro as well as the pipeline. It was, of course, not realistic to suggest that suddenly the community should be ready to make this decision, when in fact it was really OWRC's responsibility to put in the intake for Ontario Hydro at whatever size they considered necessary to take care of future water requirements for this area.

Local leaders, of course, refused to be hurried into a snap decision for Lake Erie water. It is interesting to note that when the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) presented a speech at the annual meeting of the Grand River Conservation Authority early this year he acknowledged that the pressures of last fall for a quick pipeline decision were in fact an unreasonable request.

It now appears that there is a reasonable period, perhaps 15 years, when our area can be satisfactorily supplied by ground water development reasonably close to the city. This alternative, which is quite acceptable to the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo, carries with it, however, great concern on the part of the farmers of Wilmot township who have seen their water tables diminishing year after year.

The concern of the Wilmot resources association and also that of the township of Wilmot council and the local federation of agriculture has been dealt with by the OWRC officials in the following manner. These people have been assured that their rights for adequate water supply are being protected. Before the city is allowed to pump any water it must do so under permit. The permit restricts the pumping to a certain amount for each well. Any interference with an adequate water supply resulting from the taking of water under permit requires the permittee to restore the supply in a manner satisfactory to OWRC or to reduce his taking so that the interference is eliminated.

On the surface this appears to be quite a reasonable approach. We know that in the interest of full development of water resources we must be prepared to permit interference with certain supplies as long as that supply is subsequently restored. If this were not allowed, then of course the ground water development would be to the extent that the poorest well in the area would allow.

To restore an uninterrupted supply, the city or the water commission, whichever the case may be, is required either to deepen the well for the farmer, put in a deep well pump, drill him a new well at another location, or as a final resort give him a water supply from the town or city's water as it goes by his farm. After much dealing with the people who had been affected by the taking of water by the city, I find that in spite of what appears to be a reasonable approach to their problems they are far from satisfied.

When one discusses with them the actual disruption to their way of life caused by the interference with their water supply, one begins to understand that additional safeguards must be provided immediately. In the case of test pumping or regular pumping under permit, a farmer will notify the city of an interruption to his water supply. In some cases, a few days may elapse before very much is done.

This, of course, means hauling of water, sometimes for a considerable distance. It means the disruption of facilities around the farm, a pipe probably brought in to the house from a water tank in the yard, taking cattle various places to be watered or bringing water to them, bringing in additional equipment, disruption of fences and grass in the area, and in some instances it has been shown that the death of livestock has occurred from lack of water caused by this disruption.

While it sounds very reasonable to say that water must be restored to the farmer, there are many inconveniences and costs borne by the farmer over and above the restoration of his water supply.

Mr. Speaker, the first recommendation of Mr. McRuer in his latest report on the royal commission inquiry into civil rights, states that section 18 of The OWRC Act should be amended to make it clear that the commission is liable to restore the lands, buildings, etc. of a person who may have been disturbed. The commission should also be liable to pay compensation for any damages to property which cannot be repaired. I stated to these farmers, long before this report came out, that compensation given under our new Expropriations Act should also apply to farmers who have been hurt by interruption of their water supply.

It is coincidental that Mr. McRuer also covers this point in his recommendations. He says that provisions of The OWRC Act and all other provisions of the Act dealing with matters relating to expropriation which conflict with The Expropriations Act should be repealed.

On closing, I would like to make this suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I personally feel that our Expropriations Act which we passed in 1968-1969 is very good legislation. May I respectfully submit that this government should look very carefully at the idea of extending to individuals who have received damages because of interruption to their water supply the same compensation as would be received under expropriation? Presently, OWRC acts as an adjudicator between an aggrieved farmer and the city but nowhere is there any provision for any compensation, other than to have the interrupted water supply restored for use by that farmer. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is important that this must be extended to cover damages received by that farmer because of the interruption to his water supply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, one had to admire on Saturday night the latest star of the television screen, namely the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis), the method in which he expressed his deep concern for the unemployed people of Ontario, and the way he again tried to deviate from the failure of the provincial government to act and laid the sole responsibility for unemployment on the federal level. Certainly I agree that the federal level and Pierre Elliott Trudeau are primarily responsible for the crisis which exists in Canada today. When a federal government deliberately manipulates and precipitates a recession, one has to ask oneself what kind of idiots the people of Canada have elected to govern the affairs of this country.

One merely has to look at the Prime Minister and his attitude to understand how a government can adopt a policy which affects people in every field. It includes those groups who are always hardest hit—the young, the recent immigrant—but this time around it includes a lot more people. It includes professionals; it includes skilled tradesmen and university graduates. There is just no one who has been missed. And through it all, you know that a financially hard-pressed, indifferent, arrogant, cold, 18th century aristocrat flits around the country, making tremendous news copy with outbursts against the Lapalme workers, the Talbotville workers, and, in the House, the odd fuddle-duddle. To show the height of his contempt—

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): He is talking about the Liberals' leader.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Not our leader—the Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All the Liberals defend him.

Mr. Ruston: And 60 per cent of all the people of Ontario—

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if that is not adequate, the demonstrations that the press has gone around performing would do it! I think the height of contempt shown by Trudeau was when they were going to have an emergency debate and he went skiing. They were going to debate unemployment. He had had a full weekend before, just previous to that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: At his age I am not sure.

Mr. Speaker, if I could get back into the swing of things, we are going to hear all kinds of apologies. They have been apologizing for two and a half weeks, three weeks, except for the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) What I want to come to is what has the government done? Despite all of the warnings of what was coming by economists, the fact that the federal government refused to budge, the provincial government, that motley group over there that calls itself a cabinet, did absolutely nothing except create 1,200 jobs cutting dead elm trees along Highways 400 and 401—

An hon. member: What is wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a great improvement.

Mr. Martel: I would hope the Prime Minister would stay because I have some letters to his office on projects that would have created 16,000 jobs! I wish he would stay here and answer.

An hon. member: He is going out to paint some more signs saying "William Davis is responsible for the elm tree project."

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Another hon. member: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a great improvement.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): More signs saying "William Davis."

An hon. member: It is a good project.

Mr. Martel: In fact this government was so oblivious to what was going on with the people who were becoming unemployed, that the supersalesman who now sits in the back row, if members will recall last fall, was spending $800,000, I believe it was, advertising "Where else would you rather be?" I suggested that the $800,000 that was spent—

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Right here!

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): And it is still true as far as the member for Sudbury East is concerned.

Mr. Martel: —and I will just tell the hon. minister—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It is absolutely true as far as he is concerned.

Mr. Martel: —except for the 800,000 people and the 220,000 in Ontario who are unemployed. The government might have utilized that money to employ some people, rather than for some phoney advertising campaign for the next provincial election, that is what it might have been doing. But the government ignored the people of the province.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: But that is a lie.

Mr. Martel: Ignored them in totality.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Nonsense!

Mr. Martel: And what we find in this House, Mr. Speaker, as we go on, is that the Tories spend half of their time trying to find election issues. If you will recall last year it was the Benson white paper and the deep concern the government had for the small businessman. It did nothing then and has not in the last eight years.

And then, this year it is the unemployment crisis, and the government does nothing about that. And when we talk about Indians it has reasons why it cannot help them.

An hon. member: We are helping them in my riding.

Mr. Martel: And it goes on and on, as it looks for reasons to go after the federal government to hide its own lack of action, and that is the problem. If this government can create the atmosphere that the federal levels are responsible, that enables it to maintain the sitting on its hands which has gone on for the last year and a half while the unemployment crisis has developed.

Mr. Gilbertson: That is not what the Indians tell me up in my riding.

Mr. Martel: What do the Indians tell the member up in his riding?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The hon. member opposite has the floor.

Mr. Martel: I will not tell the joke, but it ends with a lot of oompah, oompah, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Better not.

Mr. Martel: What positive action has the government taken to date? Twelve hundred jobs cutting down dead elm trees on Highway 400.

An hon. member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Martel: They might have taken time out of that five-ring toy circus that went around the province and held meetings that were all closed to the general public and they might have looked at the situation of unemployment.

The then minister, the new Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. McKeough), made the point in the Soo that by summer we will have the unemployment resolved. That was while the circus was touring the province.

I believe that the policy of the Tory party during this whole session could be best compared to an overdrawn bank account. It is empty.

Mr. Speaker, starting on May 19 last year, I wrote the super-salesman, and now the man who has followed him, in an effort to resolve the worst housing crisis in Ontario, in the Sudbury region. A minimum of 3,300 families are on the waiting list of the Sudbury housing authority—a minimum. There is a vacancy rate of zero in the Sudbury area.

I am going to read to you, Mr. Speaker, some of the correspondence I had with that department to show you the manner in which they tried to put off resolving this problem. Better still, I will finalize this part of my talk on housing, Mr. Speaker, with a letter that I addressed to the Prime Minister, on February 2, asking him to resolve the housing crisis in the Sudbury area and reduce unemployment.

We need at the present time at least 4,000 units. Using the figures of the new Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman), those 4,000 units, using 4.7 men per unit, would have created in the neighbourhood of 16,000 jobs. That is more, Mr. Speaker, than the entire bureaucracy of the minister has been able to create to date. More in one project—one project of building 4,000 units of housing, more jobs than this whole government has been able to create for the unemployed, because the figure is about 12,000.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): I was listening to the hon. member for a while. I thought he was going to say something.

Mr. Martel: Well I am. I wrote the minister's predecessor on May 19, 1970, Mr. Speaker, and I suggested to him that he might consider some condominiums in an effort to resolve the housing crisis, and I am just going to quote an excerpt:

I want to draw your attention to several facts with respect to the critical housing shortage in the Sudbury area. One of those facts is enclosed in Mr. Alt-Fuldish's letter, that being that at present there are over 3,000 families in Sudbury who live in hotels and motels. Certainly no people can expect to live in this type of expensive dwelling and support a family with dignity.

Besides this, and of equal if not more pressing concern, is the fact that the mining industry in the Sudbury area in the next year and a half intends to increase its work force considerably. Let me point out that United Steelworkers of America indicated that it is anticipated that within a year and a half to two years the number of men employed at Inco would rise from the neighbourhood of 17,000 to 23,000. I simply do not know where the housing facilities are to come from to resolve such a situation. It appears to me as though Mr. Alt-Fuldish has probably hit on the matter or a method for resolving the problem we are confronted with.

Some two months later I got a reply, a rather evasive reply, from the director of the Ontario Housing Corporation in which he stated:

As you mention there are some 3,800 applications on file as of July 16, 1970. While the OHC programme under way in Sudbury will provide 406 additional family and 206 senior citizen dwellings of rent-geared-to-income housing, it would therefore seem clear that the remaining need will be considerable, even if one makes allowance for the fact that some applicants will refuse units for various reasons.

Well that was put off, and on July 28 I wrote the chairman of Ontario Housing another letter and in it I stated:

It is indeed unfortunate that the initiative for development must come from the city, as is outlined in your letter, because in fact at the present time it would take roughly 4,000 units to meet the need, and one must also take into account the fact that Inco will be bringing in a good number of employees in the immediate future. What is even worse is that if the city should decide to request an additional number of units there would be a two-year minimum time lapse from the time these were requested to the time they were completed. This will not relieve the situation. What would be needed is the immediate construction of the required number of units to at least house the people who are on the waiting list.

Well I got another reply and I must say it was another rather evasive reply. So on November 30 I wrote the minister's predecessor a rather lengthy letter:

Recently I questioned you regarding a satellite community in the Sudbury area and subsequently I wrote to you re this matter. The situation is critical. No housing is available and rents continue to rise as a result of the shortage. This problem is so great that it warrants immediate attention. I am not certain how much attention or study has been given to my request for a satellite community; I am aware that much planning would have to be undertaken to establish such a venture.

Therefore, I would like to draw to your attention that there is a solution at hand. Some years ago a "nickel basin" planning study was conducted re the Sudbury basin. Since then Blezard, Capreol and Hanmer townships have come together to form Valley East township. There is in existence an official plan for this very large township. In 1971 construction of a water and sewage system will begin.

In other words, with an official plan in effect zoning the entire area, with considerable amounts of land available and with sewer and water to be undertaken within six months, I believe that much of the planning is completed.

Therefore, I would urge that your department consider purchasing much of the land and undertake the construction of the variety of subdivisions in the community primarily for sale to people. These could be condominium, row housing, etc., dispersed throughout this rather large township of Valley East.

When one considers that your department has been active in such projects in other areas, such as Bramalea, then I would urge as strongly as possible that you be involved immediately in the Sudbury area.

I realize that the Ontario Housing Corporation is doing a study of the area and its needs. I am concerned, however, that the reply to this request will be that OHC has to wait for a request from the municipality before it undertakes geared-to-income housing.

As outlined above, I am talking about the government undertaking action to alleviate the crisis here by purchasing land, building through whatever agency is responsible and then selling to prospective tenants. If the municipality should desire some geared-to-income housing, they can make their request known. I am specifically interested in housing the 900 men in Inco staff village and the over 3,300 families on the waiting list in Sudbury who need accommodation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that was followed up with yet another letter from the OHC and in that letter I was advised that the sewers and water would not be started; the sewage system would not be ready until December, 1972. Well, I checked with the Ontario Water Resources Commission people, as I got to know most of them over the past three and a half years in working on the sewer and water project in the valley, and they indicated that they thought they would have a delay. But through a series of tests they assured me that the sewage system in Valley East township would be completed no later than December, 1971. So that excuse was out the window.

Then, Mr. Speaker, something rather fascinating happened, because the companies in the area got a little fed up with my b'aming them solely for the housing crisis. I felt that they should have contributed through their profits and so on, because they were bringing in the employees to develop the houses. I still feel they should. But, interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker—and this will probably twig the government a little—four years ago the officials of the International Nickel Company and Falconbridge Nickel Company met with officials from the Ontario government and advised the Ontario government of their five-year plan for expansion. And what did the government do? It sat on its hands, knowing full well that there was no accommodation available for the expansion by the companies at the time of the proposals to the government. And what did they do to alleviate it? Nothing! Absolutely nothing!

And I wrote to the minister again and someone was finally sent in from the Ontario Housing Corporation and we have had some major discussions now.

What did the hon. minister do for four years, or the government? What did the government do, knowing of this expansion programme to ensure that there was going to be housing for the people in the Sudbury area? Absolutely nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I read in the newspaper about the Prime Minister's dead elm tree project. On February 2, while the member for London North (Mr. Robarts) was still Prime Minister—

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister without Portfolio): A damn good one!

Mr. Martel: Oh, it was a tremendous programme. It showed tremendous competence in developing that programme.

Mr. Gilbertson: A good healthy job for them to cut those trees down.

Mr. Martel: The imagination of the bureaucracy of government—

Hon. Mr. Potter: It should have started sooner.

Mr. Martel: —really came to the fore in that.

Anyway, on February 2 I wrote the then Prime Minister of Ontario. If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, during the debate which evolved around the Throne Speech the Minister of Trade and Development asked the leader of the New Democratic Party "if he wanted houses, like tomorrow, to get under way."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not ask if they would like it.

Mr. Martel: Right, this is February 2. This letter was—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I asked if they thought we could give it to them.

Mr. Martel: Not like tomorrow, but this letter was dated February 2. The original letter was dated May 19, 1970. That is just around the corner one full year.

I wrote the Prime Minister and I said:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

Recently I read a press release regarding your efforts to create employment in the Province of Ontario. I would like to put forth and request that you consider the following suggestion.

In the Sudbury area at the present time there are over 3,300 families on the waiting list for housing. The situation is critical. Rents continue to skyrocket and the vacancy rate in the Sudbury area is approximately 0.03—

At that time. It is now zero I am told.

I have exchanged a good deal of correspondence with the hon. Mr. Randall and the Ontario Housing Corporation with respect to a major project to be undertaken in Valley East township to alleviate the housing crisis which at present, in the Sudbury area, has to be the worst in Ontario if not Canada.

Such an undertaking would not only create jobs but would fill a great need. I have even suggested it not be a subsidized programme of geared-to-income housing but rather that the government undertake to service the land and immediately build houses. The government could then sell the houses to these many thousands of waiting families without the province losing the funds—

If that is what they wanted.

—which I can appreciate are rather short at the present time.

I would envisage a project of some 3,000 units at minimum. You can well imagine the number of jobs that this would create while at the same time solving the housing problem.

I have sent an entire file to the Ontario Housing Corporation outlining the reasons for my suggestions. Hopefully you will have a representative of your staff check out the possibility of such a project.

I have a reply somewhere. It is rather sparse. Yes, here it is. I got a reply two days later.

Dear Mr. Martel:

Thank you for your letter of February 2. Your suggestion is of course not greatly different from that of our HOME programme but it does offer a slightly different wrinkle and I shall be glad to have this examined.

Mr. Speaker, this department and this government has created 1,200, maybe 2,000 jobs at maximum to resolve the unemployment problem.

Using the minister's figures of 4.5 or 4.6—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Four point four.

Mr. Martel: —per house, on 4,000 units, Mr. Speaker, that would be 16,000 jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member agree with the figure?

Mr. Martel: Four point four?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Martel: Oh, 4.4, 4.5—what is the difference?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member agree with it?

Mr. Martel: No, I know the hon. minister is trying to lead me into a trap because the hon. minister and my colleague had a little argument the other day. I forget the actual ratio. I am using the minister's figures for the benefit of the doubt.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's leader said it was 0.07.

Mr. Martel: I am using the minister's figures and if we want to use his figures to his advantage the hon. minister now has an opportunity to create 16,000 jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just asked if the hon. member agreed with it. I just wanted the hon. member to confirm them. I have a great deal of confidence in the hon. member's ability.

Mr. Martel: Do not run a red herring into it. The project is there. The government knew four years ago. The government has been requested for almost a year to resolve the housing crisis there. It was asked 2½ months ago to use some of its capacity for resolving unemployment and at the same time to resolve the housing crisis and what has it done?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Martel: What is that? Might the hon. minister tell me what it is that the hon. minister is doing to resolve the housing crisis in the Sudbury area?

Mr. Makarchuk: Tell us Stanley Grossman.

Mr. Martel: I will take my seat if the hon. minister wishes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is Allan J. Grossman.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): What about the Minister without Portfolio?

Mr. Martel: No, nothing—a lot of platitudes. What do you see in the paper regarding Toronto?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): If the minister cannot do it, why does he not resign?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The opposition could not get along without us.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: November 24, from the HOME plan: "374 condominium dwellings at the intersection of York Mills and Victoria Park." Is that not nice? Toronto. You have got a vacancy rate at least in Toronto. You do not have one in Sudbury.

The Toronto Daily Star, December 10, 1970: "300 condominiums, North York."

Monday, August 31, 1970, from the HOME plan: "1,416 condominiums, Crescent Town project in East York." What is the government doing for the rest of the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member just told us we were not doing anything about cleaning out—

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, the minister does not understand very well.

Mr. Sargent: He never did.

Mr. Martel: Those are 1970 figures. The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is the government is building houses in Toronto where there is a vacancy rate and we have an area where there is no vacancy rate and there are families living in basements.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the member saying we do not need houses in Toronto?

Mr. Martel: I am saying we need houses in Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker, do you realize that there are people in the Sudbury area who are living in old converted buses and in the back of station wagons? Five hundred people in a hotel, 950 in Inco staff village living in rooms 10 x 10, two per room, with their families 2,000 miles away in the east coast, and there is not a facility to bring them here.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Shame!

Mr. Sargent: Shame.

Mr. Martel: And the federal government and Inco, through Manpower, advertising to those people from the east coast, "Come to Sudbury, there are lots of jobs, there are houses; they are expensive, but there are houses."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Is the minister not ashamed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member see my face red?

May I ask the hon. member a question? I have not listened to all of the correspondence; I was in and out of the House. I just began to realize he was talking about housing. In a nutshell, is the hon. member telling this House that there is serviced land available in Sudbury and the Ontario Housing Corporation is not taking advantage of it to build housing?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am telling the hon. minister that sewer and water will be started in the Valley East township. There are nine contracts ready to go now. The first sewage lagoon will be finished by December of this year, and I am saying that if you people were really sincere you would build the houses so that they would be finalized at the same time that the sewer and water would become operative, and people could bring their families from the east coast to move in with them.

We would not have all of these men living in the most deplorable places and they would have their families with them. They have been used by the federal government and there is just no place, Mr. Speaker, that they can bring their families, absolutely no place. There is vacancy rate zero.

The other problem that has been created as a result of this is that rents for dingy little apartments are $200 and $175. I had a woman phone me on the weekend, Mr. Speaker, she has got five kids, she is on welfare, she is getting $319 a month—$200 is rent. She is using half her food allowance to cover the rent.

Mr. Deans: Shame!

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Shame!

Mr. Martel: And I can name case after case. In fact I wrote the Minister of Social and Family Services two months ago and I suggested—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ruston: Sit down; the member for Sudbury East is giving the speech.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member invited me to engage in this dialogue with him. Am I right?

Mr. Martel: Right.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister wishes to ask a question he may do so. Otherwise, the hon. member for Sudbury East has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He invited me, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I do not care what he invited you to do. The rules of the House do not allow it. The hon. minister may ask a question, otherwise—

Mr. Makarchuk: I would not take him up on any invitation.

Mr. Speaker:—the member for Sudbury East has the floor.

Mr. Makarchuk: Watch out for some of the invitations he gives.

Mr. Martel: I wrote the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Wells) recently to have this investigated because nearly everyone who is on welfare is having large sections of his welfare allowance, over and above that allowed for rent, being used up to cover the rest of the rent. I know family after family on diets of porridge and bread and very little food of sustenance.

What did I get? You talk about the heartlessness of that group over there. What did I get for a reply? Not from the minister, but the deputy minister, Mr. Borczak, who told me: "Oh! You are wrong."

He did not even have it investigated. I checked it out to see if I was right. He did not even have the decency to phone the Sudbury offices—whether they be provincial, municipal or district welfare—to find out if I was right. He sloughed it off. The last letter I wrote to him he did not slough off because I do not like it when I get home on the weekend and find a mother on $319 welfare paying $200 a month rent. Those kids do without!

If you wish me to illustrate another case, there was a woman who came from Elliot Lake. Her husband left her. She came to Sudbury to work at the university for $265 a month, cleaning. She cannot find a house. She has her four children boarding with another family. She pays $160 for their room and board. She took an old house, just big enough for her and an older child. They were kicked out last week because they are tearing the house down for urban renewal. She has to pay $60 a month to store her furniture. So she has now taken a second job. She cleans offices at night from 6 until midnight. Now there is a woman who demonstrates tremendous courage.

I wrote The Department of Social and Family Services for a little bit of assistance to cover her drugs and her hospital. The department said that she was earning too much money. She is earning too much money. The fact is that it is more than $300, but the fact also is that she was paying $160 and did not have her family with her, the fact is that she had to take a second job because she did not want to have her kids see welfare, and you could not even get a supplementary assistance out of this government for a woman demonstrating that kind of courage so that her children would not see welfare. Now what kind of a government is this?

Mr. Deans: This government.

Mr. Brown: Lousy.

Mr. Sargent: Why does the member not get to the heart of the subject?

Mr. Martel: The whole thing boils down, right from the beginning, to the lack of housing. If we had houses—

An hon. member: The hon. member needs a tranquilizer.

Mr. Martel: I do not need a tranquilizer. I live with it.

An hon. member: That is terrible.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): He never had it so good.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I never had it. I want to tell you, the situation is critical in that particular field. I would like to tell you something else, Mr. Speaker. One of the big unions up there—the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union—came down to Toronto and for two years—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member used to be able to keep himself under control.

Mr. Martel: —they have been trying to develop a piece of land with 152 acres so that people would have houses. Houses would be there for their workers. The red tape of that minister's department is so bad, and it is so difficult to get money, that they eventually gave up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which minister's department?

Mr. Martel: The minister's department. The housing department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not my department. I just sit in the Legislature for it.

Mr. Martel: The bureaucracy runs it. The point is, the Mine Mill union offered the government 152 acres of land. Two years ago they tried to develop the land so that there would be no housing crisis for their members. Do you know what? The town of Lively—and you know who controls the town of Lively—had the sewer and water but they could not get permission to cut into that sewer and water. You know who owned that land, eh?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member talks with his hands.

Mr. Martel: At least I talk.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Yes, and he talks with his hands too.

Mr. Martel: That comes by background.

Mr. Deans: The member opposite should be glad he has moved.

An hon. member: The member is not doing too badly with his mouth.

Another hon. member: Who controls Lively?

Mr. Ferrier: Is the member prejudiced?

Mr. Martel: Who controls Lively? I am sure the ministers all know who controls Lively—The International Nickel Company.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know who controls Lively. Tell us.

Mr. Martel: The International Nickel Company!

They do not want the water cut in there and the sewer cut in there. It would disrupt their service. It would disrupt them controlling another town.

Mr. Ruston: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development will have to be quiet.

Mr. Martel: I just want to quote from a brief that was presented to the Ontario Housing Corporation recently by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union:

It is quite evident that Inco decided to put its weight behind private speculative builders and entrepreneurs to fill the housing gap. Falconbridge, on the other hand, opted for a company-oriented plan that would deliver better houses and lower rents with an employee option to purchase after five years.

Inco-supported new housing units have been commanding rents of $170 to $200 a month plus services. Falconbridge units have been renting at $147 to $190 a month plus services.

Private speculative builders have been selling three-bedroom houses for prices of $21,000 to $27,000; carrying charges per month run from $225 up.

When it is realized that 75 to 80 per cent of the Sudbury basin's wage earners receive less than $8,000 a year, it can be readily understood why the present answers do not satisfy the question.

According to the local CMHC experts, 2,200 units per year for the next four years are required to meet housing needs, arising from the projected expansion of Sudbury industry.

That is what is projected. That is what is needed over the next four years. We are not talking about the backlog yet.

The $30,000-up housing needs are more than satisfied. It is in the $14,000 to $25,000 bracket where the real shortages are found.

The fact is that 75 to 80 per cent of Sudbury wage earners cannot afford to own or rent even that kind of private housing. The private sector of the building industry simply cannot fill the bill.

That is crucial! If the private sector is not going to do it, then the government must.

Public low rental housing is indispensable for the big majority. In a survey of 2,000 apartments last December, there were only eight vacancies. (These were probably filled before the ink was dry on the report.) Last year, of the approximately 850 rent-geared-to-income units under the Sudbury Housing Authority, some 4,300 applicants competed for the right to occupy. We note in the remarks of James Snow, MPP, at a housing symposium, in Sudbury, June 10, 1970, the following: "1970 may see OHC emerge as the biggest single producer of housing on the continent . . ."

I guess we are still waiting.

Mr. Ferrier: Not much of a prophet!

Mr. Martel: To continue

This year it is expected that OHC will complete eight per cent of the semi-detached production, 60 per cent of the town houses and 15 per cent of all apartments in Ontario.

How far short did we fall?

Hon. Mr. Snow: How far short?

Mr. Martel: To continue:

At the present time the average rent paid by families in Ontario Housing is $84.

Compare that to what the welfare recipients or the wage earners in Sudbury are paying in the private sector. Compare that.

Mr. Deans: The minister blew it again!

Mr. Martel: Now they offer an interim measure, this union.

As an interim measure we propose that Ontario Housing Corporation take emergency steps in conjunction with district municipalities to meet immediate and pressing housing needs.

We strongly believe that the present satellite communities, which lie close to a man's place of work, are the most rational type of community. Schools and shops are close by. Costly roads and transportation are cut to a minimum.

There are large areas of empty and good building lands adjacent to mines, mills and smelters. Much of it is owned by the mining companies. We propose Ontario Housing acquire this land which should be made available at nominal cost, develop and service it. Most of it should be reserved for private sale to workers to build their own homes under CMHC standards.

In this regard, the Sudbury Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, local 598, have some 155 acres of land available for such a development. This land is excellent for building and lies adjacent to the Creighton mine. We are particularly interested in this land being developed in anticipation of the housing needs in the immediate future for Falconbridge's Lockerby mine. We are ready to discuss any practical proposal that would benefit our members.

There you are, Mr. Speaker. We have offers, we have land, we have supplies, we have unemployed people and we have a government that knew for four years that the industry was going to boom. What is the minister going to do about it?

If you think that is the only problem that has developed as a result of the expansion, there is yet another very serious problem that has developed in the area, that of hospitals. There are two problems: there is a long-term problem in the Sudbury area and a short-term one. The government's recent announcement of some $21 million to three hospitals will partially alleviate the long-term problem—and I say partially, in that the original plans called for $30 million of expansion in 1967, not 1971 when the population has gone up almost 10,000 but based on the figures for 1967, while the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, using its axe, has blithely cut its way through $9 million, which was necessary in 1967. And when the proposed hospitals are finalized in 1974, Mr. Speaker, we will be confronted with hospitals that were inadequate in 1967, that had their budgets cut by $9 million, that have seen population expand considerably. Consequently, we can anticipate that our long-term problem will not really be resolved.

If we look at the statistics in the government's own little book, this treasure chest that the former Treasurer was so proud to display back in January, I think points out the dire need for beds and for doctors in the Sudbury area.

I refer to page 82 of this wonderful document, table 38, "Hospital Services for Northeastern Ontario." If we look down the list, we see that Algoma with a population of 113,000 in 1966 had eight general hospitals, 736 beds, and 65 beds per 10,000 population. Cochrane had 97,000 population, 10 general hospitals, 608 beds and 62 beds per 10,000 population. Manitoulin had 10,000 population, two general hospitals, 73 hospital beds, and 70 beds per 10,000 population.

We look down at Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, and we see interesting statistics. Sudbury had a population in 1966 of 174,000, six general hospitals, 866 hospital beds, and 50 beds per 10,000. Let us compare that with the provincial average.

The Province of Ontario had 6,960,000 people, 272 general hospitals, and 67 beds per 10,000 population. In other words, based on the 1966 figures, as outlined in the Design for Development, the Sudbury area was 17 beds per 10,000 shy of the provincial average.

Hon. Mr. Potter: That is a pretty healthy part of the country to live in, is it not?

Mr. Martel: Seventeen beds per 10,000 shy of the provincial average. I think it is a disgrace what the government has done, because it has just cut back on a $30-million expansion; it has chopped off $9 million—and that was to satisfy the needs in 1967, and this is 1971. Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gilbertson: The member is stretching it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am not stretching it. I have the hospital's report before me. I am delighted that the member put his foot in it. This is from the report of the Sudbury and District Hospital Council on the status of hospital construction in Sudbury as of March, 1971. What does it say in here? It says:

Within the $21 million constraint, the hospital council has agreed with OHSC that the money should be allocated on the following basis: building of New Laurentian, $14 million; renovation of Sudbury General, $5 million; renovation of Sudbury Memorial, $2 million.

Additions and renovations at the Algoma Sanatorium had to be temporarily postponed. Originally in 1967 it was agreed that the council funds would be shared as follows; Sudbury General Hospital 23 per cent; Laurentian 48 per cent; Sudbury Memorial Hospital 25 per cent; Sudbury Algoma Sanatorium 2.37 per cent.

This apportionment is still the accepted basis of sharing except it is now applied over a longer period and will include the postponed phase of expansion at the Sudbury Memorial Hospital and the Sudbury Algoma Sanatorium building programme.

These are not my figures. They come from the hospital council and they are the latest figures. It indicates that because they chopped $9 million we cannot even meet the needs in 1967. The population will expand considerably and we have got $9 million short now. What is it going to be like in 1974? We are not going to have the problem resolved.

What is even worse is the short-term problem. I checked with some doctors in the Sudbury area over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, and one of the orthopaedic surgeons at the present time has 100 cases waiting. Some of them have been on a waiting list for over six months. The heart specialist in the Sudbury area, Dr. Field, has 74 patients on the waiting list. Some have been on for over six months.

The eye, ear, nose, throat specialist has over 100 patients on the waiting list and cannot get them into an active treatment bed. One general surgeon has over 100 patients on his waiting list and the average for 12 doctors is somewhere around between 40 and 70 patients, the majority of whom are on a waiting list which has been six months long already.

I made a suggestion here two weeks ago to the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), and suggested that it just might be possible for the government to provide funds so that the hospital commission in Sudbury could rent some portable classrooms on a temporary basis, renovate them, put bathrooms in them. We could take 10 or 12 of them and have each of these rooms hold six convalescent patients, which would then free the active treatment beds.

We know that some of the people who are in active treatment beds will be there for three months, and need not be. I had a case from the orthopaedic surgeon the other day of an elderly woman who broke her hip, and he anticipates that she will be in hospital for three months, whereas, if we would take—

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): How old is she?

Mr. Martel: About 70. What difference does it make how old she is?

Mr. Kennedy: Quite a bit.

Mr. Martel: When you have got this type of statistics, Mr. Speaker, from at least 12 specialists in the Sudbury area, it means that there has got to be an emergency programme undertaken. I suggest that we rent portable classrooms, renovate them—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Did he consult the member for Sudbury in this?

Mr. Martel: —as they have done at Cambrian College. They did it at Cambrian College for classrooms and they did a first-rate job. We could get the floors all carpeted, we could put in washroom facilities and put them right at the Algoma Sanitorium which has plenty of space, and having them face to face, Mr. Speaker, with a hallway built in, we could run an entrance right into the hospital.

At the Algoma Sanitorium there is medical care already and there are kitchen facilities; there is the whole gamut which would be necessary to take the active treatment patients out of the Memorial, out of the General, and out of St. Joseph's and have them taken to the Algoma Sanitorium and in this type of facility where they can convalesce and thus could relieve a lot of beds.

As I stressed, some of the patients who occupy active treatment beds could be removed. In the interim we might have five or six patients, active treatment patients, who could be treated in that one bed over a period of two months. All it is going to take is to have the government make a minor change to cover convalescent treatment and provide a little funding.

What are we going to do? Are we going to allow people with heart conditions, with the need for orthopaedic specialist treatment, for neurosurgeons and the whole bit, to go on waiting six, seven, eight months before they receive active treatment? The government sits again and it will consider it. I heard the member for Algoma praise the government—they were thinking about it. That is a real benefit to people who lie around at home for five or six months waiting for treatment to know—imagine the comfort in knowing that the government is considering it! They have been considering it for five years and it must be of some solace to them to realize that it is being considered.

I would have been moved if they had said it was receiving active consideration at least. That would have meant two or three years from now. I can only implore the Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Speaker, to continue to pursue it and possibly, invite him to visit the area and bring back to the government the extent of the crisis which exists.

One final point, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with that, of course, is the lack of doctors. There is a tremendous shortage and I want to quote from an article written recently by a Dr. Gross. I see the minister was not quite sure, but I want to quote from an article written by a doctor, commenting on an editorial which appeared in the Sudbury Star on April 1, 1970, so it must be rather recent insofar as the shortage of doctors is concerned. He quotes:

The present situation primarily as far as the family physicians are concerned is simply tragic. At the present time, 48 general practitioners in metro Sudbury serve a population of 150,000. One general practitioner for every 3,125 people, the general practitioner population ratio being one per 1,500 to 2,000.

So we strike out again and so has the government. The only way the government is going to resolve it is the same way that it is going to resolve the high school teacher shortage in northern Ontario and, that is, to build a faculty of medicine somewhere in northern Ontario so that people who are educated in northern Ontario will stay in northern Ontario.

It has been proved in England that graduates from a teachers' college tend to stay within a jurisdiction of 50 miles of the college of education from which they graduate. I am sure the same applies here, and I am sure the same applies in the field of medicine. Consequently, the only solution is the establishment of a faculty of medicine in northern Ontario.

In talking over this matter with the doctors, of those 48 general practitioners,

I am told at least 24 are originally from the Sudbury area. That being the case, we have to rely heavily on doctors from either Europe or from southern Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I can only urge that the government give this active consideration.

I want to deal directly with the Throne Speech for a moment. On page 8 it says:

To accomplish this objective, the existing Departments of Highways and Transport and the facilities and services of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission will be brought together in a Department of Transportation and Communications. The new department will develop and employ ways to move large numbers of people and goods and stimulate the economic growth of the province, while being more sensitive to the environmental and aesthetic sensibilities of our people.

That has come a long way for this government—a long, long way. It was two years ago, and then last year, that I called for one department, The Department of Highways and Transportation, or call it whatever you might. Interestingly enough, after the shuffling of the cabinet ministers over there—everyone moved one seat to the right—we had a Department of Highways and Transportation.

Lo and behold, before the ink was even dry we now have a Department of Transportation and Communications. We are really moving over there.

I doubt the sincerity in which it is done, because if the government is developing a Department of Transportation and Communications I fail to understand how it could have developed last year a communications network, a line to The Department of Mines, which was supposed to provide adequate information for people in northern Ontario.

The government creates a Department of Transportation and Communications and leaves the communication section back in The Department of Mines.

Where is the sincerity in this supposed realignment of portfolios and responsibilities when, with a new Communications Department it does not bring in the Northern Affairs offices? I think it just spells out the frantic effort by that government to convince the people of Ontario that it is doing something.

All it is is window dressing; it is a sham—more window dressing.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They do not look frantic; they are asleep.

Mr. Martel: They are not asleep; they are dead.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that is unparliamentary.

An hon. member: That is what the opposition thinks.

Mr. Bullbrook: Got to watch that fellow.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, two years ago and then again on May 6, 1970, I made the following suggestion to the then Minister of Highways, and I am quoting from Hansard, page 2425:

Last year you recall, Mr. Minister, I spelled out that this department must adopt an entirely new approach and adopt a new philosophy for highways. Possibly that is coming, but I am convinced that they have to get involved in a philosophy considering the complete transportation avenues and modes in general. I am disturbed, Mr. Speaker, when the deputy minister talks about the diversification and overall policy of transportation and then you see the Ontario Northland Railway turned over to the ombudsman for the north. Then air transportation stays with the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Highways ends up with GO and highways. How can we really talk about an overall transportation system involving highways, and so on, and the various modes of transportation when we continue to keep the transportation means fragmented?

So I see the government has come quite a way in accepting the proposals we advanced for the past two years of making a complete Department of Transport. It has moved transportation and highways together and has taken Ontario Northland and thrown it in with The Department of Transport and Communications, except it has left out the communications development which it had.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech goes on to say, "The government is going to use the new department for the economic development of the province."

Well, what has it been doing for years over there with respect to the economic development of the province? And, I ask, how does this government intend to do it?

Again quoting from what I have said earlier:

What do I mean by goal-oriented philosophy and how do we achieve our objectives? The most basic tasks of the provincial government are to stimulate and guide the economic growth of the province and to consider and influence the distribution of the income of the province among socio-economic groups and regions. To conduct these tasks effectively, it is essential that all of the policy measures available to the government be co-ordinated toward a consistent comprehensive set of goals.

Transportation is one of the most important policy variables in the determination of the regional growth patterns.

Well, the government has moved that far. However, because of its own haphazard number of plans with respect to the development of the province I am afraid that no one believes it. It has a study which I had here earlier called, Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario. After five years of study the government has told us what is wrong in northeastern Ontario. It has got one as well for northwestern Ontario, and it tells us all the problems that are in northwestern Ontario.

Then, of course, the crunch comes, Mr. Speaker, in this whole document. A number of my colleagues have quoted from that one famous paragraph:

Because of the location within the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence megalopolis the Toronto-centred region probably can increase its economic role in processing resources which currently originate in northern Ontario and move to major markets in the Chicago-Detroit-Cleveland industrial area.

I think what that does is indicate that all of its studies are not worth a row of beans. If the government's transportation policy is to be linked with that type of development, heaven help us! We are in for some rather bad times, because not only has it not got the policies, the plans or the interest, it has not got the ability to do it. Whether it be the Liberals or the Tories, they have got to rely on the whims of the free-enterpriser who is going to locate only where he wants, when he wants and when it is most economically sound to him. If we rely on that, then there is absolutely no way that we can have sound economic development, because we cannot rely on their whims. It is about time governments got off their knees in front of the corporate giants and said, "Look, gentlemen, this is good for Ontario, it is good for the people of Ontario, and we think you should locate there, and by God if you do not want to, we will do the job for you."

I just put a couple of examples forward. The former Minister of Mines and the federal government played a great game; they gave Texas Gulf $20 million to locate a smelter in Timmins. We paid them to locate in Timmins. Now why did we not just tell them to locate in Timmins? "It is good for our people. You have a $2 billion orebody that you are sitting on; you are going to make your return. We need it because the gold mines are closing. We strongly suggest you locate there." And if they do not want to follow the suggestion, then let them go and the government can move in and develop the smelter. Because if we gave them $20 million and a smelter cost $50 million, all we needed was another $30 million and we would have owned the smelter. One does not have to be much of an economist.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, an interesting thing that happened just recently. After the government announced its great plan for northeastern Ontario, we had occasion to enter into a debate with the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers). Just before going on television the hon. member for Sudbury indicated to us that the Liberal Party, at its last convention, had turned down a resolution moved by Mike Meehan, a solicitor in the city of Sudbury, with respect to developing natural resources in the area from which we are extracting. Interestingly enough, when the hon. member for Sudbury got on television, he made the following point: "When we form the government we will develop the natural resources at their source." How is that for duplicity? The resolution was defeated at the Liberal convention and the member of the Liberal Party is spouting policy that they would develop it at its source.

An hon. member: They overruled it.

Mr. Martel: Well, I guess he became the new leader or something overnight, but that is the type of duplicity we hear all the time from over there.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Oh, come on.

Mr. Martel: Well, I suggest to the member for Downsview that he go and ask them to rerun the tape and he will see that his—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Well, it is interesting. The Liberals have got instant policy. It is like the handbook; they have got instant policy wherever the situation prevails. Make-up a new policy if it is convenient.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if I might, I want to tell you the crunch to this.

Mr. Singer: Tell us about the policies passed at the NDP convention about taking over all the resources. Tell us about that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, what was interesting about that situation was that the member for Sudbury was trying to corral the member for Nickel Belt because at that time, if you will recall, the white knight—

Mr. Singer: Tell us about the NDP policies.

Mr. Martel: Does the member want the floor?

Mr. Singer: No. Tell us about your policy.

Mr. Martel: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, it was just about that time that the white knight was trying to defend the provincial government's policy about allowing Falconbridge to locate a smelter in Quebec, and Sir Lawrence—

Mr. Makarchuk: You mean Lawrence of Ontario?

Mr. Martel: —Lawrence of Ontario was trying to blame the federal government, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Where is the member's leader?

Mr. Martel: I do not need a leader. All I need is the hon. member for Downsview to be quiet.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Downsview having asked his question 17 times, will now give the speaker the floor.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I want to make that point, that in effect what was going on on that occasion was that Lawrence of Ontario was blaming the federal government for allowing Falconbridge to locate a smelter in Quebec. And we had argued the point. My colleague from Timiskaming had contacted the Minister of Mines; he was blaming the federal people and the federal people were saying no, they had no involvement.

And what the member for Sudbury, of course, was trying to create was the impression that the Liberals would have kept it in Sudbury, by God, if they had been in power, but they had turned it down at their last policy conference, so how could the member for Sudbury have kept it in Sudbury, when he was making instant policy, because it was great political stuff on the news media.

Mr. W. Newman: The member would not pick on someone who is not here, would he?

Mr. Martel: We said that we told them they had to locate there. I make that point again. We would not play games with them; they would locate where it was beneficial for the people of this province; that if private capital did not want to do it, we would do it for them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I suggest that if you watched the Prime Minister in Manitoba in The Pas after a Tory government had given $90 million away he moved in rather heavily to protect the interests of the people of Manitoba and he did not back off.

Mr. Singer: When are the NDP going to take over all resource industry in Ontario?

Mr. Martel: We are not going to take them over; we are going to develop new ones. We have not suggested we will take them over.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I am enjoying it here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I am doing well enough. What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that if we are going to get involved in a policy of transportation which is going to open up this province for the benefit of the people in it, there are occasions when you are going to have to take the gloves off with the entrepreneur who develops solely when it is economically feasible for him, which might not be good for the province.

He might also want to locate only where it is good for him and not good in areas such as I mentioned—Timmins—where a smelter must be built. In this overall policy we have to deal with two or three things; one being highways, the other railways. These are the two I want to speak about only very briefly.

In highways, Mr. Speaker, if I can find my sheet here—there we are—

Mr. Singer: Laxer wrote that next page.

Mr. Martel: I do not know the man.

Mr. Singer: The member should get to know him. He passes resolutions at your convenience. He goes to all the resource industries—

Mr. Martel: Does he? At least he is democratic. At least they are democratic.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if I could continue.

Mr. Singer: Probably not.

Mr. Martel: Two things I think are vital. We have to improve the quality of roads. I want to make a couple of suggestions, and it is unfortunate the Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNanughton) left. I happened to go to Nova Scotia this past summer. With two-lane highways that they have down there to speed up traffic—which ultimately cuts costs of transportation—they have paved all the shoulders and they put passing lanes on all of the hills, so in effect when you are driving along if a truck and you are on two lanes the truck driver just pulls over to the curb where it is paved and he allows you to go by and he continues at his speed.

If we had this type of highway development we would find that transportation would move much more rapidly, thus reducing the time factor in transportation and ultimately reducing the cost of transportation. We would also, as a result of that, Mr. Speaker, be able to reduce the destruction of our highways because in the final analysis, the destruction of highways is a result of moisture in the roadbed. If the roads were paved right to the edge of the shoulder, there would be very little moisture that would get underneath and we would ultimately reduce the destruction of roads—

Mr. W. Newman: The member's leader said to cut down on highway expenditures, now he is—

Mr. Singer: Will the member tell us how he is going to—

Mr. Martel: It is helping! They are paying their share according to the statistics that are available anyway.

We might also consider, Mr. Speaker, some innovations in highways that this department has refused to do. I have suggested for the past 3½ years that we should start to use slag from the various companies for road base, but we cannot even get an examination of it.

Mr. Singer: The member's innovations are not acceptable.

Mr. Martel: The CNR is hauling slag 1,200 to 1,300 miles now—

Mr. Singer: How much is the member going to pay to take over International Nickel?

Mr. Martel: —and has found that the roadbed for trains does not shift at all with slag. I suggest that if we were to try slag as a road base, which provides good expansion if there is ice and water, we would then be in a position, Mr. Speaker, probably—

Mr. Singer: How much is the member going to pay for Falconbridge?

Mr. Martel: —to determine if we could ultimately cut down the repairs which occur every four or five years. This is another improvement we could consider.

The last I am not going to comment on because of the lateness of the hour and simply because I want to talk about another subject for a few minutes so I will leave transportation.

There is one subject I want to discuss, Mr. Speaker, very briefly and it is almost a comedy—this little strike in the Sudbury area of 35 to 50 employees.

Mr. Singer: Is the member going to take over Abitibi too? How much is that going to cost?

Mr. Martel: They have been on strike now for 2½ months. When they attempted to organize it—it is interesting who the man is who is head of this company. His name is Fielding, Cecil Fielding. He ran against me and he ran on a policy—with big buttons—“Cec Fielding, the friend of the working man.” They had been on strike for 2½ months. Let me tell you what he offered in a five-year contract. He offered $1.50 this year and $1.60 next year, which is less than the minimum wage in Ontario.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A $1.50 increase?

Mr. Martel: No, no, a 10-cent increase. Up to $1.50 in the first year, $1.60 in the second year, $1.70 in the third year, $1.80 in the fourth year, and $1.90 in the fifth year. So that is a pretty good contract, a five-year contract.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): What do they work at?

Mr. Martel: —Lumber—making pallets for the International Nickel Company.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, after that offer went through, they went on strike, and he really believes in collective bargaining because he paid his scab labour $2 to $4 a day more than he paid his own employees.

Mr. Singer: Is the member taking over International Nickel?

Mr. Martel: And let me tell you another interesting factor, for the women working in an industrial plant like that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Is that part of the member's policy?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I am beginning to wonder what he used to do.

Mr. Martel: The women working in an industrial plant, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member may perhaps, in view of the lateness of the hour and the noise in the chamber, adjourn the debate and finish his speech.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, this will take only about two minutes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a provocative speech.

Mr. Martel: The interesting part in this little strike is that it involves men and women.

Mr. Speaker, in this day and age, he has outdoor facilities for the women and, 400 yards away, in the offices are facilities for the inside staff, the female staff, and they cannot use those facilities. I went to The Department of Labour and The Department of Health and said, "Could you at least look into that aspect, that there are indoor facilities? Why should these women have to use outdoor facilities in winter in northern Ontario?"

Mr. Gilbertson: That is lumberjack style.

Mr. Martel: The answer was that they sent an investigation team in, and do you know whom they interviewed? The manager. They did not interview one employee. The Department of Health and The Department of Labour interviewed the manager. He told them they took it upon themselves to use the outdoor facilities in winter because they had to walk 400 yards to an indoor facility. The women tell me that is a lot of nonsense.

Do you know why they cannot use the indoor facility, Mr. Speaker? The woman who is on staff indoors is afraid that those women in that community will cause her to have venereal disease from the toilet. We cannot even get the two departemnts over there to find out the facts. I have the health report right here where it says that they interviewed the son, or the manager—the manager of the plant.

Mr. W. Newman: Too bad they did not interview the member.

Mr. Martel: Oh, why does the member not go and blow up? He is nothing but a windbag tonight.

I have the report, Mr. Speaker, and two departments of this government could not even find out the facts. There has been a whole series of firings. They have all gone to arbitration and the unions have won every arbitration case. That is the type of friend of the working man you people tried to run. If that is the attitude that you people have toward government, you are dead in Ontario.

Do you want me to adjourn the debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would adjourn the debate, if he is not finished.

Mr. Martel: I am finished.

Mr. Ruston moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the Speech from the Throne on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon we have many guests in our galleries. In the east gallery are students from Romney Central School in Wheatley; in the west gallery from Brampton Centennial Secondary School in Brampton; and in both galleries from Mill Street Centennial Senior Public School in Leamington. Later this afternoon we will have students from the Waterford District High School in Waterford and from Orangeville Secondary School in Orangeville.

We will also have, this evening, the Delta United Church Scouts from Hamilton; the 22nd Humber West Scout Troop from Weston; the Business and Professional Women's Club from Hamilton; the Bendale 20th A Cub Pack from Scarborough; the Agincourt Scouts and Cubs from Agincourt; and I believe this afternoon we also have representatives of the Scarborough East Women's Liberal Association.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon it affords me great pleasure to be able to announce that we have as guests and to introduce to you, sir, and to the members of the Legislature, a very distinguished group of visitors from the United Kingdom.

Ten of the members of United Kingdom young farmers' clubs are in your gallery, sir, accompanied by members of the staff of The Department of Agriculture and Food. With your permission, might I ask them to rise and take a bow and be acknowledged by the House. We are delighted to have them here in Ontario.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): On a point of order, the group from Scarborough, sir—

Mr. Speaker: There are no speeches and no discussions by private members concerning visitors to this House. If there is a distinguished group from outside the country or a distinguished parliamentarian, then they are normally welcomed by a member of the government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order if I could: The group referred to is the Scarborough University Women's Club and not the Scarborough East Provincial Liberal Association.

Mr. Speaker: I stand corrected. I had the pleasure of meeting the ladies in the company of the member for Scarborough East and I presumed that he would be seen in the company of his own ladies. I apologize to the ladies; but not to the member for Scarborough East.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have two very brief statements relating to certain news stories I observed this morning, as they relate to the issuing of licence plates for automobiles and, I assume, other matters.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize those from the socialist group have to make a lot of noise today to make up for their lack of members. Certainly we would not in any way want to inhibit—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We certainly do not want to inhibit in any way the dynasty-creating function going on in the nation's capital at this precise moment.

But I may have fun with that later today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I am sure he will.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well I will try.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): We are witnessing the end of one over there.

Mr. Pitman: Two prime ministers from the same family.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not familiar with the details of course. I am informed that the present decentralized system has been designed to provide an appropriate level of service and convenience to all parts of the province, with both efficiency and economy. I would assure this House that my government is always interested in promoting efficiency in every aspect of government administration.

Mr. Pitman: Efficiency!

An hon. member: A nice long line-up.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have issued instructions that a full review of the existing system be carried out and that alternatives and improvements to the existing system be examined thoroughly.

Mr. Pitman: Patronage replaces efficiency.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Never. Efficiency always comes first.

Mr. Pitman: The coalscuttle of this government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: The Premier has really got it opened up.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce the appointment of Dr. James McPhail Gillies as chairman of the Ontario Economic Council.

Dr. Gillies, who will assume his new responsibilities on June 15, succeeds Mr. William H. Cranston, whose retirement after almost eight years as chairman of the Ontario Economic Council was announced earlier this month.

A native of Teeswater, Ontario, Dr. Gillies has been a member of the Ontario Economic Council since last September.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): And the Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is he really?

Mr. E. W. Sopa (Sudbury): Tell the member for Peterborough he is a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is he?

Mr. Sopa: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Really?

He is a graduate of the University of Western Ontario. He earned his MA at Brown University and received his doctorate in economics from Indiana University—and I would assure the member for Scarborough East he is nonetheless a Canadian.

Dr. Gillies is the Dean of the Faculty of Administrative Studies at York University. He established the faculty in 1965, following 14 years as a member of the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles, where he was professor of urban economics.

Mr. Sopa: He is not a Rhodes scholar?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, that is one—well perhaps I was going to say something, Mr. Speaker, that I would regret; I will not. After all, the member for Scarborough East has guests here on this occasion and I would not want to embarrass him in front of his guests.

Mr. T. Reid: No chance!

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I will not even mention the fact, Mr. Speaker, that there are students here from Centennial High School in Brampton. I would not do that, Mr. Speaker. I would not welcome—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Why does the Premier embarrass himself in front of them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Dr. Gillies has served in an advisory capacity to the government of Canada, the state of California, the city of Los Angeles, and laterly the government of Ontario. He is the author of a number of papers related to industrial development, municipal management and economics; is a weekly contributor to the financial pages of the Toronto Telegram; and has extensive experience in the business community.

I am sure I express the support of all members of the House in welcoming Dr. Gillies to his new responsibilities as chairman of the Ontario Economic Council. This is a challenging and important position and we all look forward to what I am confident will be positive and constructive guidance in the development of our province.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make—

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Bonaccord is going to do a review of the system of dispensing agencies!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, singularly enough it is not. I say to the hon. member for Peterborough—

Mr. Pitman: That would fit this government's pattern.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: My statement has to do with studded tires. The proponents of studded tires have made extravagant claims regarding the safety benefits they offer in winter driving.

Mr. Stokes: They are using the minister's figures.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As Minister of Highways and Minister of Transport, I should like to put this matter in proper perspective for the members of the Legislature.

I will willingly agree that studded tires make driving easier on icy surfaces under certain conditions. However, Mr. Speaker, extensive research carried out by my department and under other independent research authorities, such as the Canada Safety Council, have shown they offer no advances over snow tires in snow or slush and they actually lengthen the stopping distance on wet or dry concrete or asphalt road surfaces.

There is, as yet, no evidence—

Mr. Stokes: There is no slush in Northern Ontario in the winter time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Thunder Bay, who is interested in this matter, would like to hear what I have to say before he interjects any more?

Mr. Stokes: Be factual!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I am trying to do if the hon. member for Thunder Bay would listen.

Mr. Stokes: Tell me any place in northern Ontario where there is slush from November to April.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: When members are ready.

Mr. Stokes: Continue.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Thanks very much.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Now if the galleries cannot be quiet, we will have to clear the galleries and if the floor of the House cannot be quiet, we will have to take some other action here. Perhaps we can do that, too.

Perhaps the hon. minister will proceed with his statement and he will be given the courtesy to which he is entitled.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will proceed.

There is as yet no evidence that the use of studded tires has reduced either the number or severity of road accidents in winter.

Research studies by the state of Minnesota and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec have failed to establish any such evidence and additional studies are now being made by the Cornell Aeronautic Laboratories on behalf of the American Association of State Highway Officials in a further attempt to do so.

Keeping in mind that the claims regarding the safety benefits are unproved, we have considerable evidence that any potential contribution to road safety as a result of the use of studded tires in winter is more than offset by the hazards they can create on a year-round basis.

There is no doubt that studs cause severe wear on both concrete and asphalt surfaces. This has been established by our own measurements and confirmed by the work of others; notably the special tests made by the American Oil Company under the joint sponsorship of eight of the northern states, which also proved that wear caused by regular and snow tires in the presence of salt and sand was negligible when compared with wear by studs.

It is obvious to anyone who drives on our highways that the use of studded tires has been one of the main contributing factors in causing the elimination of safety lane markings from our heavily travelled roads, and the rutted pavements which result from their use obviously constitute a serious traffic hazard.

Mr. Stokes: That is 10 per cent of our roads in the province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Thanks very much for that contribution.

In my opinion the overall standard of safety on the paved road system in Ontario is lowered by the use of studded tires in winter and on this basis alone the prohibiting of studded tires is justified.

Since it was established that the general adoption of studs as an aid to winter driving would cause serious damage to paved highways, many references have been made to improved stud designs which should result in greatly reduced damage to highways.

Although the tire stud industry has implied that my department has not taken into account information provided by the industry, in fact there have been many contacts over the past few months which have allowed the industry every opportunity to present further evidence and the only relevant information we have received has been the modified design of the new studs.

To date the industry has provided my department with no evidence of the reduction in pavement wear claimed for the new stud design. In fact, the most recent indications from the supplementary tests of this design in the United States are that the actual reductions in wear are very small.

While we have extended our observations of pavement wear and the premature removal of safety lane markings this past winter and have kept in close contact with our neighbouring provinces and states, no new information has come to light which would justify a review of the decision to prohibit the use of studs at the end of this month.

In fact, our inquiries and further studies have served to confirm the evidence on which that decision was based. The validity of our earlier work and projections has been substantiated by the further extensive studies made by other authorities.

There is an indication that many drivers gain a false sense of security of the effectiveness of studded tires in general driving conditions; and in some cases, studded tires may have actually contributed to accidents. There is considerable evidence that cornering and steering efficiency—cornering, I might say, would be manoeuvrability of the automobile—is reduced with studded tires.

The Legislatures of the states of Minnesota and Michigan are now actively considering recommendations from their highway commissions that they should ban studded tires.

The following is an extract from a press release dated April 8, 1971 issued by the office of the state highway commission in Michigan:

The state highway commission called today for a ban on the use of studded tires on Michigan highways. The commission's position was based on an extensive research project which showed that snow tires equipped with metal studs cause extensive damage to highway surfaces and, most of the time, provide less safety protection than standard tires.

We are also informed that the state of New York is moving in this direction.

As I mentioned in the House earlier this week, the Canada Safety Council has recently completed further performance testing on studded tires and alternatives to studded tires, including the new stud designs.

The Canada Safety Council tests will be evaluated and all relevant evidence presented in the future will be given every consideration.

However, I must repeat, Mr. Speaker, there can be no compromise with safety on Ontario roads and any review of our decision will be based on factual information from any source and not on the emotional arguments put forward by the tire stud industry in their recent campaign.

Mr. Stokes: I take it the minister is still open-minded?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: About that much!

Mr. Speaker: Statements?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in the Toronto Daily Star yesterday a story appeared on page 3 in connection with an interview I gave regarding government policy on vehicle purchases. I would just like to make some further comments on this subject and set out clearly the government's position.

In January, 1971, the Treasury Board placed a temporary ban on the purchase and replacement of cars and other vehicles affected by the elimination of the American auto industry's discount policies for big volume purchases. It was decided that all orders in the hands of the manufacturers would not be affected by the ban, and that all tenders in the hands of manufacturers would be received in the normal manner. However, no action would be taken on the placing of future orders and no further tenders would be processed.

Today we have relaxed the freeze and authorized tenders for 140 vehicles which are urgently needed by the Ontario Provincial Police.

On March 9, the Prime Minister set up a cabinet committee on fleet discounts following a discussion in cabinet on March 1. The members on the committee are the Minister of Highways and Transport, myself, and the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough); Mr. Howden of The Department of Highways, Mr. Higham of the Treasury Board; and Mrs. Mogford, who is the secretary.

The first meeting of this committee took place on April 15, and at that meeting the committee concurred with a Treasury Board decision to approve the purchase of 45 diesel snowploughs, since: (a) The vehicles would not be purchased from the big three manufacturers, and thus would not be affected by the purchasing ban; and (b) because only immediate ordering of these snowploughs would ensure adequate snow removing equipment for the winter of 1971-1972.

The committee also agreed that its function is to recommend government policy in the event there is no relaxation of the big three manufacturers fleet discount ban.

Our information suggests that the elimination of discounts will involve additional expenditures to the province of approximately $750,000 if we were to continue our policy of purchasing from the manufacturers at the retail list prices which they tendered on last fall rather than the previously discounted prices. I might just observe, Mr. Speaker, that to my knowledge it is unusual for anybody to buy an automobile, an individual or a group, at the manufacturer's suggested retail list.

We further agreed that Chrysler, General Motors, Ford and American Motors would be invited to send representatives to meet with our committee at separate meetings, which would enable them to explain and confirm the exact nature of the present situation with respect to fleet discounts. Some press reports have stated that the manufacturers may be forced to reinstate discounts on purchases for municipal and provincial governments, but that the discounts would probably not be as great as those discontinued.

We will also invite the automobile dealers' council to send representatives to meet with our committee. I think the members might also be interested to know that the first meeting between the committee and, in this case Ford, has been arranged for May 12.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before the oral questions I have a point of privilege; not really a point of a member's privilege being taken away but perhaps added to.

I am sure the members of the House would be glad to join with me in congratulating the hon. member for Sudbury, because it was announced today that he was elected as one of the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada.

An hon. member: What was the member's platform?

Mr. Sopha: I had no platform.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): He did it the hard way; I got in the backdoor.

Mr. Pitman: No more speeches on the Law Society. The voice is silent.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. deputy leader has the floor for questions.

PATRONAGE IN DISPENSING OF LICENCE PLATES

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport.

Could the Minister of Transport advise us, in view of the Premier's statement about the dispensing of licence plates, if he still believes that $3-million patronage is part of our way of life in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I find it difficult, Mr. Speaker, to relate the substance of the Prime Minister's statement to the question asked by the hon. member for Downsview.

The whole purpose, as set out by the Prime Minister in his statement as far as the issuing of licences is concerned, is to provide a level of service to the public with efficiency and economy—and I am repeating the Prime Minister's words. That is the basic substance.

If the hon. member is referring to some of the statements that I made in the press I have no intention of withdrawing them.

Mr. Singer: I did not ask the hon. minister to withdraw them. I asked him to justify them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will justify them but, first, I will not withdraw them.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): It is an editorial question anyway.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is a rhetorical question.

I am satisfied, at this point in time, that the delivery of services to the people of this province is being conducted in the most efficient, economical manner possible.

Mr. Singer: A supplementary: I wonder if the Minister of Transport would not agree that at least in our big cities—Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Kingston London, Sudbury and others—where there are already in existence provincial buildings and/or provincial offices, the dispensing of automobile licences could be done there with efficiency and at much less cost to the people of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot affirm that statement. There are a number of Department of Transport examination centres across the province and some of these are equipped to issue licences. Others are not.

When time is taken to examine the efficiency and the cost factors that are associated with the proposal or suggestion of the hon. member for Downsview, it does not quite stand up in terms of economy and efficiency.

First of all, if—

Mr. Sargent: That is pretty shaggy.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: How does the hon. member know? I have not fully answered the question yet. How can the hon. member reach that determination? How can the hon. member make that observation when he has not heard the answer? I ask the hon. member, Mr. Speaker?

I would like to draw one simple example. Even where driver examination centres exist—and recognizing that some of them offer the licence issuing service and others do not—I suggest for several reasons it would be still less economical and certainly less efficient to add civil servants to the staff of these driver examination centres to perform the service than to do it by licensed agents.

It would take, in most circumstances, at least the addition of one member of staff from the civil service, maybe two. I would have to suggest to the hon. member that the commissions that are paid are substantially less than the salaries that would be paid to one or more civil servants. I suggest that, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I make one more—I am not quite through yet, Mr. Speaker—I make one more suggestion to the members, that there is a level of service offered by these individual agents across the province beyond the normal hours of the civil service working day, when access to service can be provided and is provided.

I have one more observation—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If we were to confine the licence issuing service to these departmental agencies rather than have the local agencies situated very closely to each other, I suggest neither the purchaser of automobiles nor the vendor of automobiles could attain the service that is required in the interests of the public.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary question, could the minister advise us if any progress has been made at all to implement the often-made promise by his predecessor that a system of selling all automobile licences was going to be inaugurated shortly, and it would operate out of the headquarters of The Department of Transport here at Queen's Park?

Mr. Speaker: That question is not supplementary, but the minister may answer if he wishes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I can offer no such assurance to the hon. member or to the House that that can be implemented immediately. I have examined the process. We have a target date goal of determining whether this is a viable or efficient operation, and it is 1973. I have grave doubts at this time whether the report that will be submitted to me by 1973 will convince me, if I am still there, that it will be a better service than is presently offered to the people of the province.

Mr. Sargent: We are going to change all that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough, a supplementary?

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In view of the lack of information which an employee of his department has—Mr. Humphries, who is quoted as saying in relation to the agents, that he doesn't know where the names come from—I wonder if the minister could indicate to Mr. Humphries just where the names do come from?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Peterborough, I think that is a fair statement as far as Mr. Humphries is concerned. Quite frankly—and I am not being brutal about it—I do not think that needs to be any of Mr. Humphries' concern.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, it is the concern of this Legislature. I wonder if the minister would mind answering the question and telling us where the names come from?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member for Peterborough read the story in the Globe and Mail this morning and he would be able to discern certain elements of the advice he is seeking from that story.

The minister may—

Mr. Pitman: I would like it right from the horse's mouth.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right! Now the member is going to get it from the horse's mouth; that is where he is going to get it from.

Mr. Sopha: Be careful about the end of the horse.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would reply to that, Mr. Speaker, by saying that if there is anyone who is familiar with the wrong end of the horse, it might well be the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I concede; I give up.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That could well be construed, Mr. Speaker, as the north end of the horse going south.

Mr. Singer: Go back to licensing.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Back to our national way of life.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now back to the question asked of me by the hon. member for Peterborough: I would like to think that he and every member in this House would agree that there are certain levels of determination left to the minister and certain levels of determination left to those who serve the minister; and that is the way it is in The Department of Transport. But let me pursue that a little bit further, because this is a very important matter. There are certain people who advise the minister on a variety of things—

Mr. Sopha: Like Ernie Jackson, for example.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am inclined to take the advice from time to time of people whom I know I can rely on and whom I respect. However, Mr. Speaker, let me go that far and say that all the determinations that are made as to who are appointed as agents are not of one political stripe; they are not. There are other reasons why people are appointed to these offices.

First is their ability to conduct a proper basis—a proper performance of their duties. That is number one.

Number two: There are many situations where people are not able to conduct any other form of employment but they can perform this one. Those matters are taken into consequence. There are many situations when the advice that comes to the minister comes from Legions and people representing veterans. This is taken into consequence. But there are other areas where, of course, the normal flow of advice comes to the minister through sources that my hon. friend will be familiar with, and Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to take it.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister table in this House a list of all the agents who are selling licences only and their gross incomes for the year 1970?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): The hon. member will never make a leader.

Mr. Sargent: Only a tip of the iceberg.

An hon. member: We are disappointed in the member.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, in terms of sensible responsibility, it is public information—

Mr. Sargent: Tell us about the payoff to the car dealers.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: These agents are paid from public funds. I have no compunction about tabling this information in the House. The figures that will be shown in each circumstance will be gross figures.

Mr. T. Reid: They are gross-indecent-figures?

Mr. Sopha: Gross misconduct!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would remind the hon. members that they are gross figures. The agents, whether they are in small communities with minimum gross figures, or large communities where they are larger, provide for all expenses; including staff, facilities—whether they are rented or owned—everything that can be characterized as an expense except the forms. The government provides the forms for the sake of uniform reporting of course.

So if these figures are tabled they are gross figures. The only way the cost factors can be determined is to go to each agent and ask him. We have not done that. It is possible I could provide a few examples to the House later on, examples across the province which will indicate the gross figures and the net figures. But to do it with 250 agents would be a very difficult task.

Their expense factors are known only to themselves. They do not have to provide these figures to the House. But I say to the hon. member for Peterborough that the figures are basically shown in gross terms. The net terms are very, very different.

Mr. Pitman: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister might clarify a statement he made this morning in relation to the town of Walkerton, where there is a testing centre and where there is also an agent. The question was asked, I think, as to why the testing centre could not deal with the giving out of licences. The minister replied: "There is probably some good reason."

Has the minister yet discovered what that reason is? Would he not say that the reason is that this government puts patronage ahead of efficiency in this province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): A horse and buggy government!

Mr. Speaker: The member for Niagara Falls has the floor. This will be the last supplementary on this question.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Fire all the civil servants who are not socialists.

Hon. E. A. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): That is what the leader said.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, is the minister acquainted with the fact that Quebec mails out the licences? Licences are purchased through the mail in the Province of Quebec. Would the minister consider selling licences to people in the Province of Ontario if they wanted to purchase them by mail?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, for the record, anybody can buy a licence by mail in the Province of Ontario today. The other facilities are provided for local convenience as well.

The members of this House, or any member of the public in Ontario, can submit their cheque with the proper forms to headquarters in Toronto and their licences will be mailed to them.

Mr. Sargent: How many people know that?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): The member did not know it?

Mr. Sargent: If the minister is so smart why is he not in the front row?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): What a motley bunch over there.

Mr. Bukator: In view of the large amounts of money spent by the department to advertise, would the minister not consider the possibility of advertising to the people of the province and acquaint them with the fact that they can purchase by mail and eliminate a lot of these patronage offices?

An hon. member: That is a good question.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: First, Mr. Speaker, you can misconstrue patronage. I have no intention to eliminate some of the things the member referred to.

As for the people's knowledge as to how they can buy licence plates, a programme of information starts three months in advance of the deadline date to purchase licences—by radio, television, press, bulletins; by every means. Three months' notice is provided as to when the deadline date approaches; during that process everybody is advised of the deadline date and it is indicated to them that they can go to their nearest agent or they can buy their licences by mail. So if the hon. member—

Mr. Sargent: This is the first time the minister knows what he is talking about. I did not know that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Then the hon. member does not listen to or read the media. There you are. The member knows now.

Mr. Speaker: The deputy leader of the opposition has the floor for further questions.

FARM MARKETING LEGISLATION

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, if I could get his attention.

Would the Minister of Agriculture and Food care to comment on the statement yesterday of Monsieur Toupin, whom I am advised is the Minister of Agriculture in the Province of Quebec, that in view of the enactment of Bill 10 by this Legislature that his province is now going to enact retaliatory legislation in answer to the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I am very well aware of the statement—I read it myself—and we have also had conversations with Monsieur Toupin through interpreters. We know what his intentions are and he knew what ours were well before the legislation was ever introduced. As a matter of fact, he asked us if we would send him a copy of the legislation and—

Mr. T. Reid: What has that got to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—we are very glad to do just that.

I do not think there is anything wrong with what we have done and I am sure nothing is wrong with what he proposes to do. If we are going to have legislation—

Mr. Sargent: It is tearing down confederation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—in these provinces, then I think we have to have people in all provinces who respect the legislation that pertains in other provinces.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Agriculture and Food advise us what was his response to the suggestion by Monsieur Toupin that Bill 10 be rescinded?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I was not aware that he had even suggested it.

CLEAN-UP OF MERCURY POLLUTION

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Would the minister care to comment on the conclusions in the pamphlet tabled by his colleague, the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), called "Fishermen—About Mercury in Fish," which pamphlet was tabled on April 2, 1971? In it the Minister of Lands and Forests said there is no known way of getting mercury out of the water and that if we do not find a way that we are going to be in serious trouble.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Well Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily agree with the conclusion as set out in that pamphlet.

This pamphlet, as the hon. member would realize, was put together some months ago and subsequently printed and then made available to us. We feel that there is a known way to reclaim mercury from the bottom of lakes and from river muds.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, if the minister is not necessarily in agreement with the contents of this pamphlet and it is presently being circulated to the people in the Province of Ontario, what steps, if any, is the minister going to take to have the pamphlet withdrawn from circulation or in fact corrected?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Well Mr. Speaker, I do not think the phrase, or the submission, that the hon. member refers to really affects the importance of that pamphlet. The pamphlet is mainly for fishermen and for public consumption, as far as the mercury situation is in the Province of Ontario and the areas that may be contaminated. I do not think that editorial comment at the end of the pamphlet really affects the value of it.

Mr. Singer: I do not know how one separates editorial comment—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. deputy leader.

THE LORD'S DAY ACTS

Mr. Singer: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Attorney General. Could he tell us what action, if any, he has contemplated in relation to the recent report by the Law Reform Commission about Sunday law and generally the observance of The Lord's Day Act, Canada, and The Lord's Day Act, Ontario?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, government policy in this regard will be known in due course.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Is the member for Downsview praying there, or just asking?

USE OF STUDED TIRES

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

I wonder if the minister could tell us, in view of his latest announcement today, what he intends to do with cars which will be crossing the border between Manitoba and Ontario which will have studs? Does he intend to use the provincial police or some kind of an army at that border?

Mr. Yakabuski: Pick them up and run them in.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to say that we will have to find reasonable means to do that if the ban continues, and I have no reason to believe it will not as yet.

Whatever is required to stop the influx of automobiles with studded tires from other jurisdictions to provide protection for safety purposes and to prevent wear and tear on our roads will have to be developed.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Arm the border.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I have had telegrams and communications with the hon. Mr. Borowski from Manitoba.

Mr. Pitman: I would like to see those.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I have had an exchange—yes, I found them very interesting.

Mr. Pitman: I was sure the minister would. They are earthy, I think the term is.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: They are probably not printable, that is all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not think I will table them in the House in the interests of Mr. Borowski, although there is no reason why I should protect his interests.

Mr. Pitman: Oh, that is interesting. By all means table them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I do not think I will. But I have communicated with him very recently. His last communication was in response to one of mine where I indicated we have a very good film that is a complete portrayal of the damage that is done and the extent of the danger factors with studs vis-à-vis the safety factors. He asked me for a copy of the film and I have agreed to send it to him.

Mr. Pitman: I hope the minister has a nice long session with him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I hope that enlightens him, if that is possible.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question of the minister: Is the minister prepared to have inspectors at the points of entry from the United States into Ontario to prevent those individuals from visiting our province simply because they have snow cleats or snow studs on their tires?

Mr. Pitman: That will do the tourist industry a lot of good.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to the hon. member for Peterborough more or less answered that question. If the ban on studs is to be continued as far as the people of Ontario are concerned, I do not know why people from other jurisdictions should have special privileges.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared—

Mr. Speaker: We are now back in the same discussion that we had earlier in this matter. This will be the last of the supplementaries on this question, because there are many other more important matters that have to be discussed.

Mr. Sargent: Is the minister going to turn visitors back?

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister prepared at some time in the future to go into an extensive advertising campaign in the United States to inform our American visitors that they will not be allowed entry into Canada if they have studs on their tires?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I regard that as a hypothetical question. I do not think I shall answer it, sir.

Mr. Sopha: What is hypothetical?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor for a new question.

Mr. Singer: This is the Ontario border; no studs or broilers!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Watch your language.

Mr. Singer: They are going to add to the list later.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AUTO LICENSING AGENCIES

Mr. Pitman: I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in relation to the stories that came out this morning in relation to the licence dispensing agencies. I wonder if he will comment on his statement.

Look, if the only criterion were the colour of your political stripe, then I am prepared to say it (the system) is not the best. But I know it's not altogether that way.

Perhaps the Prime Minister could first indicate what are the criteria; and second what he means by his statement "he will look into it?"

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that my statement at the beginning of the session this afternoon was very clear—hopefully it was understood by the hon. member for Peterborough—and will constitute, I think, a very excellent answer to the question that he has just asked. I will send him a copy of it if he did not hear it.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary!

Mr. Shulman: Yes, a supplementary: Is the Prime Minister aware that at least one of his Conservative appointees as a motor vehicle issuer was so carried away during the last issuance of licences that he put on his bulletin board—the public bulletin board—advice to the public that one of the political parties in this province should never be supported?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Depends on which party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of it. If the hon. member for High Park is referring to the party with which he is sometimes associated, I could only observe that—perhaps not in that particular location; nor am I necessarily condoning it being put there—perhaps it was a point of view that might be expressed by other people in many other places for many reasons, including myself right here.

Mr. Shulman: A further supplementary: Would the Prime Minister intervene with the hon. Minister of Transport who refused me equal space on the same bulletin board?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it now becomes obvious from the hon. member for High Park's supplementary question that it was the party with which he is sometimes affiliated that was referred to on the bulletin board, and of course I am somewhat interested in this. I question whether in fact I have the capacity—even with the assistance of the Minister of Transport—to see that equal time and space is provided. However, I will look into it.

Mr. Stokes: Just confirms our suspicions.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough.

LIQUOR OUTLET PATRONAGE

Mr. Pitman: I would like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the statement that the Prime Minister made regarding the Liquor Control Board. I think the statement was: "I asked some people in my riding if they know of anyone who needs help."

I wonder if the Prime Minister is aware of the fact that there are people on this side of the House who also know people who need help; and whether he would be prepared to give us the list of those to whom we should assign those who need help in our ridings?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No way!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, before ever becoming a minister of the Crown and knowing how some of the members opposite operate, I know—

Mr. Pitman: No way. The Minister of Transport says, "No way!"

Hon. Mr. Davis:—without any question there are a number of people without any particular political persuasion who are employed by the Liquor Control Board stores during the summer and winter months. I can say without any question that there are a number of people who are not necessarily known supporters of the party that I represent who are so employed, Mr. Speaker. I can only go back to my own experience in the former department when I—

Mr. Pitman: I have never been asked for any names.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—have had requests, from the member for Peterborough in particular on one or two situations, relating to certain situations within his own constituency where, as Minister of Education—

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: Advance them. Find out who are in need and advance them.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—I endeavoured to be helpful on one or two occasions, which really constituted the paying of a grant to a very worthy group of young people, who in fact were referred to me by the member for Peterborough. We are very non-partisan in the approach to these situations.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you. I think the minister refers to institutions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will go one step further. I have had requests from the member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: For what?

Hon. Mr. Davis: For what? To assist in a certain teach-in at York University and Glendon College—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): That is not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not saying I should not have. It was quite—

Mr. Pitman: Would the Prime Minister please answer my question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What was that?

Mr. Pitman: In relation to the Liquor Control Board jobs, I think to clarify this, I have always requested on behalf of an institution.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. minister has answered the question and he is entitled to answer it in any manner he sees fit. He has answered it. We will move on to another question.

Mr. Pitman: All right, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask—

Mr. Speaker: No more supplementaries. We will move on to another question.

AMERICANIZATION CONFERENCE

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): Another question: I wonder if the Prime Minister could indicate to the House whether he has secured the assistance of Mr. Eddie Goodman in relation to the conference on Americanization he intends to hold this spring, in view of Mr. Goodman's well known views on Americanization and the fact of his status in the Conservative Party?

Mr. Sopha: What status?

Mr. Singer: Never heard of him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of people being involved in the discussion of the formation of this conference. I have made a mental note that the member for Peterborough completely endorses the views expressed by Mr. Goodman, and he himself—

Mr. Pitman: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did the member not?

Mr. Pitman: I find it very interesting and very different from what I heard over there, though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I assumed, by the fact the member asked the question, there was some endorsement of his point of view.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I think he is better than the member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall).

Mr. Speaker: Order! This is not a debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say this, Mr. Speaker, that there will be many points of view expressed at the conference that is being convened. I must say this, there is some doubt in my mind that one Mr. Waffle will be invited necessarily to present his point of view. Although in a public situation he may decide to—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Watkins.

Mr. Pitman: The Premier means Mr. Watkins.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —Watkins, rather—present his point of view.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? Any supplementaries?

Mr. Pitman: A final question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Randall: The mad professor.

LABOUR DISPUTE IN NIAGARA

Mr. Pitman: In view of the very real concern, I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he would ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton) to intervene as quickly as possible in the dispute which is now taking place between the Niagara Board of Education and the supporting staff? And would he find out whether one of the major issues is The Equal Opportunity Act—that is the refusal of the board to pay men and women employees the same rates for what is virtually the same work.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): It happened in Ottawa yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite prepared to discuss this with the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The member for Renfrew South.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT LOAN

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House about the $17 million loan that was made available by the federal government to the province to stimulate work projects? Was this loan interest free; and if not what was the rate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really could say that I am glad that question was asked. I would say to my good friend and colleague that if he is patient, as the Throne Speech develops here in this House today there may be some very specific reference and an answer to this question in the wind-up of the Throne debate itself. I would not want to leave that out of my contribution this evening. The answer will be in that.

Mr. Sopha: I am not going to announce it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know the member is not, but I am just telling my colleagues that I shall.

Mr. Singer: Is the Premier going to take part in that debate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: It is a point of personal privilege, sir. Did the Prime Minister in his jesting remarks to the deputy leader of the NDP state or imply that I had intervened with him to get someone a job at York University? Because I did not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just saying that there have been a number of occasions when members opposite have requested assistance from the ministry, as they should, relating to certain situations and projects which they hold dear to their hearts. I recall very specifically the member for Scarborough East speaking to me about assistance for a certain symposium at Glendon College. I do not say he should not have—

Mr. Pitman: For institutions. That is surely different from a job?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but I am just saying that these requests come from all sides of the House, from all members.

Mr. Trotter: Does the minister consider that political patronage?

Mr. Singer: It is better than a patronage appointment.

Mr. Speaker: The member has made his point; the minister has answered it, therefore it is not a question for debate.

Mr. Sopha: The leader of the NDP got his father-in-law a job. He got his father-in-law a job with The Department of Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

LOANS TO MEDICAL STUDENTS

Mr. Sargent: A question of the Minister of Health: To aid in the search for doctors—there is a shortage of doctors up our way—the State of Michigan is giving advanced medical students $2,000 a year at three per cent for four years if they will pledge themselves to a small community to work as a GP for a year. Would the minister advise the House if there is such a plan available to give us more doctors in our area?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall the details of our programme as I stand here at the moment, but we have a similar programme in operation and have had for a number of years in relation to special subsidies for doctors who will pledge, in return, service in particular small communities—mainly in the north I believe, but small communities generally, I think, can qualify.

Mr. Sargent: Would the minister send me the information on that?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, I will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has the answer to a question asked by the member for Brantford.

ODC LOAN PROGRAMME

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Brantford asked, on April 6, and I quote:

Can the minister indicate why ODC loans to fishermen are made only on the basis of economic viability when in fact legislation passed in this House was to provide loans to fishermen on the basis of injury to the fishing operation?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the legislation referred to by the hon. member is The Fisheries Loans Act, 1970, which was passed in May, 1970. This House was advised on April 2, 1971, of the government's intention to revise and continue this programme. This Act is administered by The Department of Lands and Forests and is not the legislation under which the ODC loans are being made.

I will return to the ODC loans in a moment, Mr. Speaker, but The Fisheries Loans Act was the result of a federal-provincial agreement to make funds available on an interest-free basis to persons engaged in commercial fishing in waters where the taking of fish was prohibited because of contamination of the fish resulting from polluted waters.

The purpose of this assistance was to provide temporary aid for the fishermen while they sought compensation for those responsible for acts of pollution affecting their livelihood. I should mention, in passing, Mr. Speaker, that after the first year the federal government has opted out of this agreement and the provincial government is carrying on on its own.

Returning now to ODC loans to fishermen, Mr. Speaker, may I say first that it is a fundamental principle of all ODC loans that they are made on the basis of economic viability. The ODC loans to fishermen, including the group at Erieau, are intended to assist the fishing industry on a long-term basis to adapt to changing conditions and to restructure their operations so as to take fish species that are not polluted, in waters that are not as seriously affected as those where fishing has had to be prohibited entirely. We believe that this is a very practicable approach on a long-term basis.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that these two programmes are complementary.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question?

Mr. Stokes: May I ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), yes.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table a list of those companies that have been assisted under the terms of reference mentioned by the hon. minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South has the floor.

Mr. Ferrier: My minister has gone out of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Then the member for Sudbury East.

TABLING OF DEATH CERTIFICATES

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Attorney General: In view of the facts that on four occasions last year I asked the Attorney General's predecessor to table death certificates related to Indians, that I have not received them to date and that they have not been tabled, is the minister in a position to indicate if in fact these death certificates do exist and when he intends to table them?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, were these all relating to deaths of three, four, five, six, seven years ago—none of them closer than four years anyway?

Mr. Martel: Several were within the last two years, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I will take a look at the matter and report to the member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

SANITARY LANDFILL FOR TORONTO WATERFRONT

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management: Since his department's waste management branch and the Ontario Water Resources Commission appear to believe measures can be taken to protect water sources in the Kleinburg area from contamination by the proposed sanitary landfill project there, does the minister now consider that the same principle can be applied to the development of the Toronto waterfront so that garbage can be used there as fill?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to draw a conclusion like that submitted by the hon. member. I have had no opportunity to discuss a comparison such as this with members or representatives or officials of my department. It is quite possible that the conditions for putting fill in the Toronto waterfront area would be quite different from that of the Kleinburg area.

I wish to reiterate, however, that the officials of my department are satisfied that the proposed site in the Kleinburg area is safe from all their particular responsibilities and interests, but I would not want to comment on the analogy as put forward by the hon. member.

Mr. Deacon: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that the Toronto waterfront proposal put forward by authorities there included the construction of a dike and impervious liners and drainage basins for the landfill project so that all seepage could be collected and fed through the sewage plant to avoid contamination, and therefore, the same principle is applicable in that situation? Should there therefore be reason not to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question!

Mr. Deacon:—allow the garbage department of Toronto to dump down there?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am aware of the facts that were submitted in the hon. member's question regarding what is to be done in the Toronto waterfront. I am aware of that, and I am aware of the features of that proposal. I am not aware of the comparison.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Bukator: Is the minister aware of the fact that Buffalo has done just this kind of a job along the Niagara River across from Fort Erie? They put in a retaining wall, back-filled with garbage and as a matter of fact, burned some off. Is it possible that we could use that method here too? If they are using it in international waters it must be all right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That method has been used in Ontario up to now.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary.

Mr. Sargent: Will the minister advise now if the fill now going in around Ontario Place is a continuing programme? Where is the money coming from to do this? Is it part of the Ontario Place programme? Is the Harbour City programme now in full flight?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All I can say to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is that ain't pollution.

Mr. Sargent: All I want to talk about is where the money is coming from.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: Where is the money coming from for this continuing programme of fill?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is not a supplementary.

Mr. Sargent: They are stick-handling.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of University Affairs has an answer to a question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is free, gratis!

FORESTRY COURSES AT LAKEHEAD UNIVERSITY

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question was asked a few days ago concerning the application from Lakehead University to extend the forestry course at that institution from years one and two to a full four-year programme. I am pleased to announce, at the urging of the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and the members for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) and Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wishart), the government has agreed that this course should be extended to a full four-year programme.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Prior to making this decision I invited the comments of the president of the University of Toronto. He was not completely satisfied with this proposal, but was good enough to indicate to me that there might be some internal reorientation of the University of Toronto which would make this government policy change acceptable, or at least endurable, to that great university institution.

Mr. Speaker, as you will remember, I provided a very lengthy answer to a question concerning U.S. financing of research in Ontario universities, the day before yesterday. I can now complete that, rather briefly I am glad to say, by reporting on Ottawa, McMaster and the University of Windsor.

The University of Ottawa receives $2,000—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

May I ask you, sir, if it is within the purview of the minister to keep answering a question at his leisure, day after day? I understood that it was the rule of the House that he could take the question as notice and deign to give us an answer again. This is the third time he has risen to acquit himself daily to answer this question. Is this within his right?

Hon. Mr. White: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The first of the three times I simply said I did not know and I would find out, which does not, I think, constitute a lengthy reply. On the second day I gave 90 per cent of the information, which I can now complete.

In point of fact the question should never have been asked here. It should have been put on the order paper.

Mr. Bullbrook: Speaking again to the original point of order, if I might—I did not particularize in questioning the Speaker. May I ask the Speaker again if a minister has the liberty of rising day after day—notwithstanding the fact that he does not take the question as notice—and of continuing to answer the same question?

Mr. Speaker: First of all I would point out to the hon. minister that the course of action he suggested lies with the ministry and that is that if it should be a question for the order paper the minister may direct it there, and I would suggest that in future this might be done.

Secondly, so far as I am concerned, if the hon. member has asked a question and wishes information, and the minister answers it to the best of his knowledge and ability at that time or the next day, then I think he is perfectly entitled, if he obtains other information which is of value to the House, or which he thinks is of value, to bring it and to give it to the House.

I would rule as far as I am concerned that the minister may complete his explanation. The question period has now about a minute to go.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the University of Ottawa received $2,000 from the United States Information Services for a conference on their campus. They have two on-going projects—$13,112.98 from the U.S. Army for chemical research into electrolysis, and $18,000 from NASA for chemical electrolysis research.

McMaster, nil.

Windsor has an on-going project on the interaction of radioactive rays in the upper atmosphere which has been in progress for about five years at $30,000 per year, and which is partly sponsored by the U.S. Air Force.

In addition, "projects from military-type American companies" at the University of Toronto and York University: neither of these received a single cent.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Wishart presented the report of the companies branch of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs with respect to the licences issued to extraprovincial corporations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, as required by section 359 of The Corporations Act.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko presented the following reports:

The annual report of the Ontario Stockyards Board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970;

The annual report of the Minister of Agriculture and Food for the year ending March 31, 1970;

The report of the Co-operative Loans Board of Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1970;

The annual report of the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute for the year 1969-1970;

The annual report of the Minister of Lands and Forests of the Province of Ontario for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970;

The 50th annual report of the Public Service Superannuation Board for the year ending March 31, 1970.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr1, An Act respecting the City of Brantford.

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Protestant Children's Homes.

Bill Pr4, An Act respecting Huntingdon University.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting Reliable Plastering Limited.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting Zurich Life Insurance Company of Canada.

Bill Pr15, An Act respecting the Abbey Life Insurance Company of Canada.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the actual cost of printing be remitted on Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Protestant Children's Homes, and on Bill Pr4, An Act respecting Huntingdon University.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I table herewith, pursuant to subsection 5 of section 6, of The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969, copies of orders-in-council which have been granted by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, exempting the inquiry provisions from being applied in certain expropriations. I would emphasize to the House, Mr. Speaker, that an exemption of this nature does not prohibit the application of any other provision of the Act.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence presented the annual report of the Fire Marshal for 1970.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Arrangements have been made for all members to receive their copies today, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

CONSUMER CREDIT REPORTING ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the Control of Credit Reporting Agencies, the Collection of Credit Information and Credit Reporting.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps a brief word as to the purpose and import of this legislation.

The short title is The Consumer Credit Reporting Act. The full title of the bill, I think, is quite descriptive—An Act to provide for the Control of Credit Reporting Agencies, the Collection of Credit Information and Credit Reporting. Briefly, what the bill proposes to do is to provide for registration of credit reporting agencies, controlling the information that may be stored for credit reporting or included in a credit report, requiring the use of a credit report to be disclosed on request and disclosure of the information that is contained in the report, requiring that that information stored in Ontario, and a provision for correcting such information if it is found erroneous.

Mr. T. Reid: Just like my bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Probably a little improvement thereon.

Mr. T. Reid: Oh yes.

HIGHWAYS AND TRANSPORT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. MacNaughton moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amalgamate The Department of Highways and The Department of Transport.

Motion agreed to; first reading the bill.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, this legislation will create The Department of Transportation and Communications as proposed in the Speech from the Throne. The Act will amalgamate The Departments of Highways and Transport. It will transfer, or permit the transfer, to the Minister of Transportation and Communications, the legislative powers and duties now performed by the Minister of Highways and the Minister of Transport. This includes administration of such legislation as the Highway Improvement Act, The Highway Traffic Act, The Commuter Services Act, and The Airports Act, along with many other responsibilities of the two portfolios.

Without pursuing the details, I can indicate that amalgamation will provide us with significant opportunities to develop a comprehensive transportation service to the people of Ontario and to incorporate efficiencies and economies in planning and operations.

As His Honour suggested, the objective of the new department will be to provide a functional, integrated and balanced transportation system, embracing both public and private transportation, to serve the needs of each area of the province. Our principal approach will be the consideration of all forms of transportation as an entity of service for the movement of people and goods rather than a competitive network of individual modes or facilities. Our concerns will relate to the appropriate balance between public transit, commuter services and motor vehicle traffic, as well as rail, air and water services throughout Ontario.

While we will give emphasis to the comprehensive transportation needs of larger cities and their commuter neighbourhoods, we will also concentrate on the provision of adequate and economical transportation for our rural and remote areas.

We believe that improved service will result from the decentralization of our operations with the strengthening of regional offices across the province. In each of these regions, the director will report directly to the deputy minister and will have the authority to resolve many questions without reference to head office at Queen's Park. In addition to more prompt services to local people and municipalities in each of the regions, the decisions will reflect more accurately the specific conditions and needs in local communities.

We anticipate substantial economies from the consolidation of facilities and of support services to the operations now being carried out by the two departments.

The planning and research functions of both departments will be brought together to co-ordinate all our efforts toward improvement in transportation. In the field of traffic safety, for example, we can co-ordinate all considerations toward the reduction of road, vehicle, driver and passenger hazards. Similarly, in pursuing improvement of air services across the province the amalgamation will enable close co-ordination of ground transportation requirements which are essential to convenience and efficiency of air services.

We can facilitate the planning and development of service corridors for transportation and communication needs to achieve economies in land use and investment. We will be able to co-ordinate and intensify our emphasis on aesthetic and environmental planning in the continuing improvement of our road system.

As previously indicated, the new department will be given responsibility for the operation of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission whose services will be incorporated into our comprehensive planning.

I will be reporting to the House at a later date on our involvement in telecommunications services across the province. We are developing the appropriate policies to ensure that the interests of Ontario are represented fully in the many developments taking place in this field.

MINING TAX ACT

Mr. Bernier moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mining Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, most of the sections of this bill are of a housekeeping nature although it should be pointed out that section 3 repeals the annual tax on the production of natural gas because it has been determined by Crown counsel that this type of tax is ultra vires to the province.

The annual tax collected ran from $60,000 to $70,000 and for this year there is no amount forecast for the revenue proposed. The only other significant amendment is provided for in section 4 and this will permit the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to establish interest rates on overdue taxes or on a refund of overpaid taxes at the current rate of interest instead of the established six per cent rate presently provided for under the Act. Sections 10 and 11 also provide for increased penalties for non-compliance with the Act to bring the penalties in line with the present-day value of the dollar.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex South): I wish to join in this debate today—I believe this is now my fourth one since I have been here in the Legislature, being my first term, and I have had the honour to participate in all of them. I am looking forward to different circumstances, probably, when the next one comes up.

I think it would be an opportune time now to congratulate the new Premier (Mr. Davis) and wish him well in that office, inasmuch as it may be quite brief. We will still wish him well as head of the government of Ontario.

It was interesting, Mr. Speaker, when I attended the convention to view the proceedings and the choosing of the leader of the Tory party for Ontario on Thursday evening at Maple Leaf Gardens. I went in with a friend of mine and as we went in on the main floor I met the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—as at that time he was; now the provincial Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—and wished him well. Since he is a resident in my riding, I thought it was only proper that I should do so. I did not join in with him when he went on the floor with his parade but did go up into the gallery and watch the proceedings from there.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Was the member impressed?

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): A very intelligent move.

Mr. Ruston: I noted with interest that night the rousing speeches that were going on. The Minister of Municipal Affairs gave a rather rousing speech in my opinion and said that he would fight the opposition head-on. I think he made mention that the New Democratic Party was his opposition but I think in the last month or so he has changed his mind on that matter. The present Premier took it a little cooler as is his custom.

The maverick candidate, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), was in his usual style shooting from the hips—or lips, whatever you want to call it—anyway he was shooting. The present Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) gave a stirring speech, but I believe he should have had Billy Graham standing in for him. Perhaps he would have shown a little more class for the type of speech he gave.

Then came Friday night on TV. The man who still played the old party line—and probably the most conservative of all the candidates—in its true form was the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough). I had already predicted to friends, as we viewed the proceedings that night, that the present Minister of Education would be Minister of Education under the present Premier, and the Treasurer would be the provincial Treasurer. They questioned my authority on that but it turned out to be the facts. I suspected that the Treasurer would not support the Minister of Justice since he had one way to go and that was with the party faithful.

It would seem rather odd that the Treasurer, coming from a semi-rural riding with strong opposition to the Premier, would have the nerve to walk over and say “this is the man,” and hold his arm high in the air with that of the Premier. The real kingpin behind the Treasurer was Richard Walker, QC, known also as the Conservative kingpin in Essex county. He was the engineer of this brave step.

However, Essex county and Windsor was not able to elect a Conservative member in the last election. So it appears that Mr. Walker ensured the election of all Liberal members of the area in the upcoming election.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a few other remarks but I just want to make a note here on one that was up on the question period today and which is in the paper today about “Patronage: 50 Cents an Auto.” In my opinion that is peanuts compared to the Liquor Licence Board of this province. I think it is the most corrupt of any government agency in the Province of Ontario, and I defy anybody to show that anyone can get a licence unless approval comes from someone in the hierarchy in the Conservative Party of Ontario.

There are many areas of concern to me, some of which overlap one with the other. We have today a rather strange economy. On one hand we have unemployment at a rather high scale, while at the same time we have the continued pressure for higher wages and the greed for higher profits in a few areas of industry.

In my humble opinion, one of the causes of the inflation cycle was the ridiculous rise in interest rates in the past three years. The banks, mortgage lending companies and finance companies took advantage of an opportunity they saw to make high profits and this reflected on the cost of everything we bought. Let us face the fact that we are living on borrowed money in this day and age and if interest rates go beyond reason, we are bound to have it reflected on our everyday living.

In essence, the control of interest rates is a must and the restraint of the public is necessary if we are going to keep these rates in line with the ability to pay them. I have here a letter from a constituent who signed a contract to borrow money from Avco Finance Company. The interest rate is 21 per cent; apparently they did not read the fine print or did not even bother, as many only look at the amount of the monthly payment.

I believe our education system should have a course in our schools from grade 7 up explaining the system of interest as it pertains to our financial structure and the results of it on our everyday lives.

The cost-price squeeze and wage controls are matters of some discussion at this time. I have here a survey made in my own riding; one of the questions was, “Are you in favour of wage controls and price controls?” I found that out of 1,850 replying, 1,400 voted for wage controls and 1,294 for price controls. There is little difference in the numbers for price controls and wage controls and part of that reason was that a large part of my riding is rural and some of the farm people are very reluctant to vote for price controls when their prices now are below the cost of production.

If we consider the benefits now available under welfare allowance, one can see the reason why some people try to avoid working for a living. It is most unfair when one can collect more from welfare than working on a low-wage job. The ridiculous part of it is that one must pay income tax on money earned working, and yet the welfare allowance is not taxable.

In other words, under the present regulations one can work for eight months of the year and if he spends it as fast as it came in, regardless of how much he makes, and he is then laid off and can prove to the welfare worker that he has no money, they will give him full allowance for the rest of the year, tax-free. In the meantime, at the end of the year the income tax department will refund him a sizable amount because he did not work the full year—and of course his income tax was deducted while he was working on the ratio of working the year around. In other words, it is to his advantage financially not to work year-round under our present system of handouts.

This in itself is some reason for a high amount of registered unemployed, especially to a certain group that has very little initiative to work. I do not think we can afford to continue the handout system without some form of work involved for those medically fit.

We read in the newspapers only recently of $250,000 paid to millwrights in Nova Scotia for not performing work. We have to pay for this in the end in the cost of the products from this company; and to add salt to the wound this company received a large incentive grant from the Nova Scotia government to compete against tire manufacturers now in Canada.

Only recently the State of New York passed legislation that employable welfare recipients must work for benefits. It means the state will make work for those unable to find jobs elsewhere. One wonders if this is the answer.

An hon. member: That is a beautiful way out.

Mr. Ruston: I find, in my own conversations with the working man today, that he is very reluctant to give benefits to those sitting on their behinds.

As for prices of goods for farm commodities, one wonders where justice is when the farmer must sell eggs for 20 cents a dozen. The cost of production of a dozen eggs generally combines feed costs amounting to about 20 cents per dozen, the cost of the hen bird balances out about nine cents, and the building and labour costs from four to five cents, for a total cost of production of about 34 cents per dozen.

I noticed in the supermarket the other day that the price of eggs was marked as a special for the weekend, "Three dozen grade A large, $1." When one considers the high food value of eggs it is probably the lowest-priced article for the shopper today. Even if the price was 50 to 60 cents per dozen it would be an excellent buy.

The price of pork products is another area of despair to many farmers at this time, when one is forced to sell 150 pounds of dressed pork for $33.75. I doubt if anyone can raise and feed that animal up to a selling weight for less than $45 as a very minimum.

One wonders when you see what people in other areas of our country are paying for items at this time. I have here a report from The Globe and Mail of April 14, 1971. It is an account of the living conditions of the Metis in Brochet, Manitoba. In the Hudson Bay store the price of eggs was 85 cents per dozen, bacon 95 cents per pound. Perhaps what we need more than anything is a system to distribute our surplus food products to the areas of real need in our own country.

In discussing our education system and the vast amount spent on it, one wonders just who the people are planning and administering it, and of their actual capabilities.

I notice in the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1970, that there were 460 employees with The Department of Education with salaries over $15,000; the average of these was about $18,500—and they vary from $15,000 to $20,000. This group is in the K-13 formal education classification. These are not teachers; these are in the administration staff. We look at public accounts March 31, 1967; there 210 were in supervision division earning $15,000 or more; curriculum division, 22 over $15,000. In other words there were 232 in the head office receiving over $15,000 in March, 1967, while in March, 1970, there were 460—an increase in three years of 228 officials in one department alone receiving over $15,000 a year.

This is going on even with the county school boards in operation, which are supposed to be self-administering. When a director such as the one in Essex county board is allowed to carry out his own ideas the way he has, one really wonders where we are going. These boards were set up with one idea in mind, and that was the structure of them was to be centred in the director as the key man with most of the power vested in him. It will take legislation to rid the boards of this type of control and return it to the elected people.

For instance, in the decision to build a new school in Sandwich West township, regardless of the conditions of the site the director insisted on the location even if it meant $300,000 in extra footings due to soil conditions. Perhaps we should call the pilings and extra cement work the "wood foundation" or the "wood mausoleum."

In Ontario, we educate about 365 medical doctors a year, while in Quebec 600 are graduating a year. We have people with degrees and PhDs walking the streets, but not enough doctors and dentists to look after the needs of the people of this province. Why do we put government funds into graduates who have no future in the labour field when we have shortages in the very important fields of medicine and dentistry? Let us put the priorities where they belong and subsidize students that will go into the medical school and dental field to see that our needs are met right here in Canada. In the Province of Ontario last year there were 743 doctors licensed, and as mentioned previously only 365 graduated here in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly on The Department of Highways and, especially as it pertains to the recently retired minister (Mr. Gomme). He was, in my opinion, the most ill-advised minister I have ever seen in my few years in this House. I attended meetings with him and people from his department and Essex county road officials and the complete lack of knowledge he had was incredible. He allowed his assistants to put words into his mouth and some of them were telling half-truths but the minister with his blank look would say nothing.

Thank goodness he had the sense to retire, but due to his lack of knowledge of some of the decisions he made, the people of Essex county will be paying increased local taxes. I believe the province should take over the balance of the county road, north of Highway 77, in order that we would have a provincial highway running north and south, and this would then service the new provincial park on Lake St. Clair at Pointe aux Roches. The Department of Highways must also take over the Howard Avenue route to Holiday Provincial Park from the county as this services the border crossing from Detroit out to the park.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): I am right behind the member there.

Mr. Ruston: With the returning of Highway 2 from the province back to the county for 16 miles, this has forced or directed many trucks into the heavily built-up area of the old Highway 39 and this has caused a great many problems. This Highway 39 was partially constructed—there were a number of villages all the way through it. Now with the signing of Highway 2 going in through there, an awful lot of trucks go in there and it is really causing a lot of congestion and problems with people in that area.

Another thing, with provincial Highway 98 turned back to the county, the county has seen fit to lower the speed limit to 50 miles per hour and on the portion we have of Highway 2. The county did it to try to get the main traffic or the through truck traffic off the road, but we find that the traffic is still as high as ever on those roads. Yet the county is paying for the upkeep of them, so that is one thing that a new government in Ontario will do; it will certainly straighten out the road system in Essex county.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Right on the button.

Mr. Ruston: The county roads needs study that was just recently sent to the Essex county council—the member for Essex South has mentioned this before in some of his remarks and I think we brought it up in The Department of Highways estimates last year—recommended that one of the top priorities is a road into Point Pelee National Park. Yet the province has not seen fit to take any interest in that up to now.

I would hope that with the new minister, the situation may be rectified in some way. We are looking forward to those improvements in the near future. Mr. Speaker, since the Throne debate is a wide-ranging topic, I will touch on only a few items and very briefly on them in order to allow other members to speak on it.

The Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) has the control of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. At a time like this, I think it is very imperative that he should pull out all the strings and all the stopwatches and everything on the Ontario Water Resources Commission and look at their files. I imagine he has there, over 100 of them probably, partial plans of sewage disposal systems and water projects, particularly, sewage disposal systems. I know in my own area there is a number of them that have been on the drawing boards for years.

Even if it takes some minor pieces of legislation, speed them up. I think he should get busy at them and put them in. This is the time they should be going in. He is asking for a cleanup by 1973 of the phosphates. Go out and do it now.

I am glad this minister is here, because in my estimation I think that he is capable of having this done. He might have to push some other fellows around a little, but this is the time that this should be done. It has just been going on too long—four and five years—what with the red tape, contracts they must have between the municipalities and the OWRC, and Ontario Municipal Board approval. There has got to be an easier way than this. I have mentioned this before in the estimates. It is almost unbelievable the length of time it takes them, from the original thought of even having sewage disposal until the final work is done on it.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): He is big enough to push them around, too. He will take on any three at one time, he says.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch on a subject of interest at this time and that is the automobile insurance field. I wish to point out that I have no association of any form with any type of insurance of any kind. I believe that the automobile insurance industry should continue to be a part of the private sector, with all of the advantages of the competition which this gives the consumer in both rates and service. It is the duty of the government of Ontario, representing the public interest, to see that this competition is real and apparent, and further that minimum standards in service and equitable premiums are maintained.

I believe that no motorist in the Province of Ontario should be licensed to drive on our roads unless his automobile is covered with suitable minimum standards of liability insurance. Since this makes automobile insurance compulsory, then rate and policy changes of a significant nature affecting large groups in the province should be justified before public hearings of the appropriate standing committee of the Legislature. I believe that the substantial reduction in costing and time-consuming litigation and other benefits should justify the implementation of compensation-without-fault insurance.

The State of Michigan is now considering a no-fault insurance bill that would provide up to $8,000 settlement immediately without regard to which driver was at fault. After the settlement is made, an arbitration panel would then decide which insurer should pay. The panel's decision would be binding. At the same time, the superintendent of insurance who now oversees all insurance companies in this province could be given the power to examine the books of such insuring companies to assure the public that all income, whether interest or investments or premiums, would be included as income.

The superintendent in the past has been in close touch with many insuring companies in a similar manner, and there is no reason why this type of examination cannot be done; at the same time the company would have to show cause, if it requested a raise in premium, not only to the superintendent but to the previous committee mentioned.

I cannot see any reason at this time why we should form a complete new government bureaucracy for automobile insurance. What happens if the government sets this system up, as recommended by the NDP, and after one year or two years there is a loss? We can be pretty sure then they will not raise the premiums. They will take the funds from the general tax structure in order to hide it—and this could go on forever.

If we look at the Saskatchewan rate for automobile insurance, they charge $85 a year for $200 deductible and $50,000 public liability. We must remember that Saskatchewan is a rural province and the amount of traffic does not at all compare to the Province of Ontario. The rate in Ontario for a farmer outside the metropolitan area is $90, and this includes $50,000 public liability, $250 deductible and $25 deductible comprehensive all-peril. This is also 10 per cent less with five years' accident-free driving.

Let us compare apples with apples in looking at auto insurance. The average car in Ontario is driven many times more a year than the average car in Saskatchewan or Manitoba and traffic is much more congested in Ontario.

The present system of removing chronic dangerous drivers from the road is far from satisfactory in Ontario. We should be pressing for more driver education courses in our schools, probationary licences for one year for all new drivers to ensure that the general public will be protected from the dangerous driver.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the concept of yet another government agency at this time. We now have over 60,000 civil servants in the Province of Ontario and this is increasing by thousands every year. Plus there is more than 22,000 in the Ontario Hydro system. It is our duty as legislators to see that the public is aware of the pitfalls of yet another government bureaucracy, as I feel the people of Ontario as a whole may end up paying for car insurance when they themselves may not even own or drive a car. This ends my remarks.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, rising to speak in the Throne debate, I would first of all like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on the excellent and capable manner in which you preside over the deliberations of this House. I know that at times we, the members, make your job very difficult.

I would also like to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis), on being elected leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and Prime Minister of Ontario. I know that he will serve as Prime Minister of this province for many years, in spite of some of the statements that have been made by the previous speaker.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate those members who have been elevated to the cabinet. I trust that they enjoy many years of service to the people of Ontario.

In participating in this Throne debate, I want to deal with a matter of vital importance to all segments of society in our province. It is a matter of agriculture—the very soul of our existence.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I should preface my remarks with the fact that I do not necessarily choose to speak on this matter simply because I am a farmer. I intend to speak on other issues as well. However, I feel that the role of agriculture is so critical to our people that I should undertake to outline some of the significant factors which, it would appear, have failed to command the attention of the members sitting opposite in particular.

It is a known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the increasingly urbanized society of our province continues to place a greater dependence on our farms today than at any other time in our history.

As a result, each farmer in Ontario produces food for at least 40 other people. A substantial portion of our province's labour force—estimated at 18 per cent to 20 per cent—is employed in industries and services related to agriculture—either marketing, processing or distributing food products, or providing the services and inputs necessary for efficient production.

Statistically speaking, the output from Ontario farms has increased in the past 10 years, although the number of farms and the number of farmers have declined. Cash receipts from farm operations have increased from just over $850 million in 1960 to well over $1½ billion in 1969. At the same time, the average farm was 150 acres in 1960 and it increased to 175 acres by 1969. The selling price received for many farm products has not increased in the last 20 years. Farmers have survived because of their efficiency. However, I would question how much longer this basic industry can continue to survive when our costs of production are increasing every year and our selling price either remains static or becomes lower.

It is rather interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the capital investment in the industry has swelled from $3.7 billion in 1959 to $4.25 billion in 1969.

Mr. Speaker, this government has continued to acknowledge the critical importance of our farms as related to our province. It is this government's intention to do everything in its powers so that Ontario agriculture shall continue to progress and move ahead, building on the foundations that have been established and the progressive policies that have been provided.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Nonsense!

Mr. McNeil: The role of The Department of Agriculture and Food in this province should be to provide programmes that will help the farmer help himself.

We have developed and provided a variety of programmes in an effort to assist our farming community so that this very important segment of our society will continue to function—to provide food and all the other necessities of life for not only the people of this province but for export as well.

To mention a few of these projects, I refer to such programmes, Mr. Speaker, as ARDA, agricultural extension farm management services, veterinary services, tax reduction and others. The latest of these included the provision of capital grants programme as announced in the Speech from the Throne. A few days later, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) outlined the important aspects of these grants—and important they are indeed.

The increase in the maximum amount of grant available from $2,500 to $3,000, and the provision under which a farm partnership would be eligible to receive up to $6,000 is most welcome in any farming community and particularly so in mine.

The basing of capital grants on a straight 40 per cent of the cost is another logical move. Previously, the base carried varying percentages.

Then, too, the expansion of the classification of farm drainage and farm structure is most welcome, for now farmers can include such works as maple syrup structures, various equipment, bulk milk tanks, fixed livestock scales, fixed wastage disposal systems, electrical wiring and natural gas installations as well.

Farming today represents a large investment in land, buildings, machinery and livestock. One of the great problems which we face in agriculture is the amount of capital required by young farmers to enter this business. No industry, Mr. Speaker, can survive without vigorous additions and replacements and this can only be provided by our youth.

I have always felt that the junior farmer loan programme was the best means of encouraging young men to enter agriculture. Unfortunately, because of the tight money policy, our government was forced to discontinue this programme, feeling the farm credit would be able to service this need adequately. It would appear that such is not the case and that a great deal could be accomplished in agriculture if we could develop plans to help finance young men interested in entering this field of endeavour.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Why did the member's government stop the junior farm loan?

Mr. McNeil: Because the federal government had a tight money policy. That is the reason.

Mr. Ruston: The member's party cut it out.

Mr. McNeil: That was the federal government. The opposition sat there and did not do a thing about it.

I commend the government on the removal of dead elms. Although the dead elm problem is perhaps not as acute in my riding as in others, Mr. Speaker, this government's programme of such removal has provided winter employment for many people in my riding—employment for people who—

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): It is a good thing.

Mr. McNeil: —may have been on welfare rolls otherwise.

Mr. Gaunt: It is a good job we have a federal government. The hon. member has somebody to blame.

Mr. McNeil: We in Elgin county have benefited greatly from the capital grants programme, Mr. Speaker. During the period from April, 1970, until the end of February, 1971, The Department of Agriculture and Food approved a total of 106 applications for construction; the total amount of grants was $68,945. Seventy-four applications for drainage were approved for a total of $43,402. Thirty-two applications for farm wells were approved and these amounted to $17,064. There were 22 application approvals for farm ponds for a total of $12,940 and 43 application approvals for field management for a total of $8,346.

To sum it up, Mr. Speaker, Elgin county received payments totalling $150,699 as a result of 277 application approvals for capital grants.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that there are few in this Legislature who will not agree that the government of Ontario has indeed a great interest in the future and development of our farm lands.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McNeil: However I wondered, since those hon. members sitting opposite have always been so vocal on just about every issue there is, what they proposed to do for our farming community?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Everything!

Mr. McNeil: Of particular interest to me are several of the New Democratic Party agricultural policies approved last fall during their leadership convention. This party calls for legislation to give farmers direct and equal representation on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board.

Mr. Brown: Good idea.

Mr. McNeil: Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that the organized marketing of farm commodities in Ontario is carried out under the authority of two pieces of legislation, The Ontario Milk Act and The Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act. The Ontario Milk Act is administered by the milk commission of Ontario, a body which is appointed by order-in-council. It supervises the operation of milk marketing agencies in the public interest and acts as a court of appeal on matters of concern to those who own the industry.

The chairman of the commission is a civil servant, Dr. K. McEwen, who acts as director of our total dairy section. His qualifications are the fact that he is a veterinarian, a specialist in public health and dairy husbandry.

The vice-chairman is an economist from the University of Guelph, Professor S. Lane.

The three members of the board are George McCague of Port Elgin, a farmer with a long background in co-operatives and marketing; F. A. Stewart of Almonte, a farmer; and W. T. Murchie of Toronto, who has a lifetime experience in the dairy processing trade.

It would appear to me, Mr. Speaker, that farmers are well represented on this commission.

At a marketing level, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the Ontario Cream Producers Marketing Board are both made up entirely of producer-elected members.

Here is the story of membership on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board. The chairman is Mr. E. Mighton, a civil servant and a marketing specialist. The vice-chairman is a civil servant and an agricultural extension specialist. The members of the board are: Ray Loughheed of Barrie, a farmer, dairyman and producer of poultry, a former president of the United Co-operative of Ontario; Ed Hutton of Guelph, a farmer and poultry producer; and Don Paxton of Brighton, a food and vegetable producer.

Again, the majority of the members of the board are farmers—and good ones, too.

I do not mean to take anything away from the NDP, Mr. Speaker. They do have a good idea, except that this government made it into law some time ago.

Another policy of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, calls for the formation of a Crown corporation to distribute farm machinery. There is nothing new about this policy, this has been suggested before and rejected on a number of occasions. It was rejected because there was no evidence that substantial savings would result, as the NDPs would have us believe, or that the international suppliers would indeed be prepared to service the Ontario market under these circumstances.

I am sure the hon. members are aware too, that the farm machinery industry has been subjected to a federal royal commission, a report that is being eagerly awaited.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Said farmers could save $15 million on the inefficiencies of the distribution system right now.

Mr. McNeil: The NDP are merely second-guessing the royal commission's findings but they should be second-guessing that the whole of Canada would impose such a policy, not just this province.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture is presently involved in the importation and distribution of farm machinery and we believe that this is the logical group to realize any savings that might occur, at least to this point.

Still another policy of the NDP calls for a divided municipal tax rate. Surely the farm tax rebate on rural education tax in 1970 fulfilled this requirement, Mr. Speaker, in the commitment made by the Minister of Agriculture and Food and the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) last fall.

Yet another policy calls for the outlawing of foreign ownership farms. Let me assure this House, Mr. Speaker, that foreign investors are looking for high profit investments in Canada certainly, but agriculture is not one of these. The vast majority of our farms are owned by farm families and this will continue to be the case.

I would like to have dealt also with some of the Liberal policies on farming, Mr. Speaker. However, in searching through their policy statements I have been unable to find anything until just recently. Within the last week they came forward with a publication known as "The Blueprint for Government." Looking over that policy, Mr. Speaker, it reminded me of trying to sort out wheat from chaff. There was very little wheat but a lot of chaff in their policies.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): Put it to them.

Mr. Ruston: The hon. members are all chaff over there.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: Give it to them.

Mr. McNeil: Another very important issue, one that concerns every citizen of our province, Mr. Speaker, is that of the economic and unemployment conditions in our country. Certainly there has been a great deal of talk on the matter in the past months. It is only a short time ago that we carried a special debate on this matter in this House.

Mr. Ruston: We never finished it.

Mr. McNeil: This debate went on for two days, and will probably be resumed once it is possible to provide additional time. However, all the talk—particularly by the Liberals and the federal government at Ottawa—has done very little if anything for those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have found themselves suddenly out of work. It is little comfort for the family whose breadwinner is out pounding the pavement looking for work, that Mr. Benson boldly states that at last we have broken the back of inflation. And I say this, for a few days later reports showed an increase in the unemployment level.

At the same time, I am advised that there has been some relief in the unemployment situation. But let us not get overly excited about this, Mr. Speaker—this trend is primarily due to the fact that the hard winter months are over and a great number of seasonally unemployed have returned to work.

The government of Ontario has, in my opinion, contributed tremendously to easing the unemployment situation. Recently the Ontario cabinet approved a provincial-municipal programme to provide some 7,500 new jobs across Ontario in the form of grants to municipalities towards the cost of eligible projects. This put Ontario's employment programme at a total cost of $16.9 million so far. An estimated 12,000 new jobs have and will result.

The government has also increased the student summer programme from 11,000 to 14,000 this summer so that our student population will not only have an opportunity to earn money, but also to gain valuable knowledge and experience as well.

Beyond this, the province is dedicated to policies that eliminate all unnecessary government expenditures and at the same time stimulate the private sector of the economy where there is sufficient flexibility in the provincial budget to allow this.

Aside from continuing to fight the present deplorable condition, Mr. Speaker, this government also continues to provide a variety of other assistance and services to municipalities across the province.

In my own county of Elgin, for example, there has been a great deal of activity in the way of educational assistance. The general legislative grants for the Elgin County Board of Education during the past year totalled over $7.5 million. This breaks down to $3,660,000 for public schools, $900,000 for separate schools, and $2,980,000 for secondary schools. With the grants being increased by the department and with an excellent school board operating in our county, our mill rate for education has been kept in line for the year 1970.

The Department of Education has informed me that the allocations of funds for the 1971 capital programme for the Elgin County Board of Education includes a new senior school which will cost $750,000 and an addition of $200,000. I am told that The Department of Education's share of the cost of these two projects will likely be in the vicinity of $500,000 for the new senior school and $60,000 for the addition.

The separate school board in the county has provisions in its 1971 programme for the replacement of a school at St. Thomas and its location on a new site. The total cost of this structure, I am told, is about $425,000. This government will pay somewhere in the vicinity of $350,000 towards the building and the new site.

The board of education has made an addition to Port Stanley Public School which was at an early stage of approval on January 1 of this year. The total cost here is estimated at $639,000, with a grant approval of about $500,000. This project will likely reach the construction stage during this summer.

From the point of view of social services, The Department of Social and Family Services has undergone many changes on welfare allowances and some supportive services. The department has branched into the full range of social assistance and social services—services which emphasize prevention in the context of both family and community.

In 1967, The Department of Public Welfare became The Department of Social and Family Services. This was a significant change, for it represents the new directions taken by the department in the last decade. In all programmes—from day nurseries to care for the aged, from child welfare to services related to social assistance allowances—there has emerged a new emphasis on prevention and rehabilitation through guidance and counselling. From the former emphasis on the individual and his particular needs, has come a greater awareness of family needs.

In 1971, family benefits and general welfare assistance allowances take into account the entire family budget, not just the budget of the individual recipient. In 1971, the Children's Aid Societies make every effort to work with the children in their own homes, trying above all to keep the family together. In 1971, the day nurseries branch encourages and assists day care centres which serve the family, both the child's need for an enriched environment and the mother's need for employment.

All of these changes are reflected in the social services available to the people of Elgin.

We are proud of our homes for the aged in this riding with accommodation for some 357 elderly people. The newest of these homes, Valleyview, is located in St. Thomas and was opened in 1970. Valleyview was built with the help of the department and the city of St. Thomas, and has the distinction of being the first home in Ontario with a drop-in centre for our aged. This drop-in centre is providing a great service to the senior citizens of St. Thomas.

Three private day nurseries in St. Thomas provide day care for 50 children. All are licensed and supervised by the day nurseries branch of the department. The Margaret Ostrander Nursery and the St. Thomas Nursery both have agreements with the city of St. Thomas through which the city subsidizes the costs of day care for the children of families in need of assistance. Under The Day Nurseries Act, The Department of Social and Family Services pays a subsidy of 80 per cent of these costs. The Little Friend Nursery also provides day care for 10 retarded children.

Recognizing the needs of retarded and handicapped adults, the Friendco Adult Workshop and Training Centre in St. Thomas provides a sheltered environment for 35 trainees. The centre provides both assessment and on-the-job counselling for the trainees, and is working to help them develop their capacities to the greatest degree. Like the other 121 workshops in the province, the Friendco Centre is eligible for both capital and operating grants from the department. In 1970 the province raised its grant towards the operating costs of all workshops from $20 to $25 per month per trainee.

The needs of children and families in difficulty are met by the Elgin County Children's Aid Society. It is one of 51 societies in Ontario, and it provides counselling, preventive and supportive services, in addition to the protection of children through foster homes and the placement of children on adoption.

During the past winter, Mr. Speaker, many municipalities with small assessments have been experiencing a great deal of unemployment. Many of these people are employable and could be employed by the municipality in the roads department. However, if this is done the municipality receives a 50 per cent grant, whereas the municipality is subsidized by 80 per cent if the individuals are receiving welfare. It would seem to me that it would be advisable for the government to develop a programme to subsidize the municipality to the extent of 80 per cent if the welfare reipient is employed by the municipality. This would, in my opinion, work to the benefit of both the municipality and the individual.

Finally, the direct services of The Department of Social and Family Services are available to the people of Elgin constituency through its London regional office and the St. Thomas sub-office. The department provides field workers, rehabilitation counsellors and legal aid assessment workers to meet the social assistance and social service needs of the area. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970, the province contributed a total of $1.1 million toward the costs of assistance and services in this county.

The Department of Health, Mr. Speaker, has always played an important role in the county of Elgin and the past year has been no exception. For example, the St. Thomas-Elgin General Hospital, which has received $1 million in assistance toward capital construction programmes, continues to receive annual provincial assistance in support of operating costs which amount to some $5 million.

There are a number of proposed projects in the making for this hospital and you can be certain that this government will take financial part in these projects.

While only one facility lies in Elgin county, with respect to mental health, the needs of the county are met by other facilities that service this area. The 1970-1971 fiscal year budget figures for the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital alone are set at $1,725,000, and there are a number of hospitals and centres in the surrounding counties which require millions of dollars in provincial assistance.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the programmes of assistance and policies of our government. These are only a few of the many that this government has undertaken to assure that this province continues to enjoy growth and development as it has in the past.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, in order to speed up the ending of this Throne debate I have cut out a few sections of my speech, but I must include a few words on the oral question period, especially since it has been reduced to 45 minutes.

Even when we had a one-hour period on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, there were many days on which back-benchers could not get a question asked. Like other members, I have been prepared every day since March 30 to ask a question, but on only four occasions have I succeeded—and I have probably been more successful than most members.

The conclusion I have reached is that the two opposition-party leaders should be restricted to one question each, waiting their turn for a subsequent question until all other members who wish to ask theirs have spoken. Wars have been fought on the slogan, "One man, one vote." I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the back-benchers should unite in a campaign—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Hear, hear!

Mr. Burr: —based on the cry, "One member, one question."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): No questions at all. That is what I am for.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is right. No questions at all. No right to know.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Too many supplementaries.

Mr. Burr: In making this proposal, Mr. Speaker, I am not criticizing either opposition-party leader, unless they disagree with me. I am merely criticizing the question period as it has now evolved. I happen to have saved a few papers relating to the question hour, now 45 minutes long, and the following comments may be of some interest. They refer to what happened after the two opposition-party leaders had finished their questions.

April 7—Three of our members succeeded in asking a question.

April 8—One Liberal asked a question and we were shut out entirely.

April 13—Three of our members got in a question.

April 15—Our leader was able to ask only two of the five questions he intended to ask. All the rest of us were unable to get in at all, except on supplementaries.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a most unsatisfactory situation and I trust that the procedural committee will review the whole matter of the question period. When we first came here, the written question period, whatever its shortcomings, enabled every member to ask a question, subject only to the absence of the appropriate minister. Only on rare occasions was the question period unduly lengthy. Now the question period ends after 45 minutes, leaving usually about a dozen members frustrated.

I should like to make a few observations on the recent behaviour of the government members opposite. Since the 1970 session ended they have acquired a defeatist attitude.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is true.

Mr. Burr: It has been very noticeable since this session began on March 30, 1971, that Tory back-benchers are practising their future role as opposition members by actually asking questions in the question period. On occasion they ask questions—

Mr. Singer: What will they think of next?

Mr. Burr: —which the ministers seem not to be expecting. At least, none of the ministers has yet read a prepared answer in reply. Even the cabinet ministers who were candidates for their party's leadership were practising throughout their campaigns, the gentle art of criticizing the government. The papers were full of these criticisms. I shall not repeat them, but every one of them—except the eventual winner—had apparently been listening to the NDP members of this House during the last session, for they often sounded very much like New Democrats during their leadership campaign trek around the province.

They were obviously practising for their coming role as opposition spokesmen. Although the new provincial Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has been perhaps the loudest doom and gloom speaker, or spreader, nevertheless the most defeatist attitude displayed by any member of the government was that displayed by the former Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) when he was being coaxed just before Christmas by the news media to announce his candidacy for the Tory leadership.

His excuse for delay was couched in those immortal words, "This needs careful thought. I do not want to become the Premier with the shortest term of office on record." Well Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that the new government—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Prophecy, sheer prophecy!

Mr. Burr: —would be more generous in small matters, and less extravagant in large matters, but so far there has been no evidence to show any change of heart.

Mr. Pitman: There is a better audience elsewhere.

Mr. Burr: They are still combining extravagance with stinginess. I should like to give you one example of this. Most members could duplicate the examples I am about to give.

The Throne Speech on page 3—and I may be establishing a precedent by referring to the Throne Speech in the Throne debate—says: “The ministry will listen closely to the problems of the people and will act swiftly to resolve them. Policies will seek to expand and nourish individual initiative.”

Who could quarrel, Mr. Speaker, with such noble sentiment? But the first time I put them to the test, however, I found that the new ministry was no better than the old.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): We are better.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): A lot worse.

Mr. Burr: I am being gentle. A group of Sandwich West citizens in my constituency have banded together to form a little league baseball club for the boys of the community and to take on a king of big brother role for those boys who need extra attention.

They raise their own money and have just purchased a property which they are making into a ball diamond suitable for their purpose. They have built a field house and pretty well exhausted the funds which they had gradually collected.

Because the land is near Turkey Creek the edge of the property is swampy. The other edges of the property are also such that a fence is needed to enclose at least three sides of the field. About 1,500 feet of fencing is required—an expensive undertaking for a non-profit enterprise.

They appealed, Mr. Speaker, to The Department of Highways for permission to borrow snow fencing for the baseball season. Their appeals have gone right up to the minister. They are willing to transport the fencing and return it in condition as good as or better than that in which they receive it. They would even be prepared to post a bond. It would cost the Department of Highways not one cent. Yet they have been refused because—

Mr. Pitman: Would the hon. Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) do that?

Mr. Burr: —the department’s policy is not to lend snow fences.

This is not “listening closely to the problems of the people.” This is not “nourishing individual initiative,” which this club has shown. This is not “nourishing private responsibility” which this club has assumed.

This so-called new government is even worse than the former one. A year or so ago I sought a $75 monthly grant to subsidize a monthly bus trip for poor and elderly Windsor citizens who wish to visit friends and relatives in the Ontario Hospital at St. Thomas. These particular citizens could ill afford the train, bus and taxi fares which non-motorists must pay in order to travel from Windsor to St. Thomas.

The Minister of Health of that day (Mr. Wells) wrote me a sympathetic letter but said that funds were simply not available “no matter how worthy the cause.” This is arrant nonsense, of course. Consider the extravagance the government indulges in in what I am about to show you.

I have in my hand a recent government publication called the sixth report, 1969-1970, of the Council for the Arts. This is not a propaganda publication designed to lure tourists into Ontario or to encourage investment in Ontario. It is a simple report—a report in which only a handful of people in this province would be remotely interested.

Ten of the 32 pages are virtually blank. I am not referring to the covers. They are blank, too, except for a little on the front. Ten of the 32 pages are virtually blank. I took the trouble to cut up one of these books and to reassemble the type. The type all went on 11 pages, 10¼ to be exact. I have it here in my hand. It goes in quite nicely in 11 pages.

Yet this report is spread over 32 pages. I have ignored the four pages that constitute the cover. If I included these there would be 10 completely blank pages. In any event, the same information could have adequately been presented in a 12-page report instead of a 36-page report. Two-thirds of this paper is sheer waste; 24 pages in every report. The cost of the booklet is $1.39 each, for this little report.

Perhaps you may say that as this report would be of interest to very few people only a couple of hundred copies have probably been printed. Therefore, why do I make a fuss about it? If you say this, that only a couple of hundred people would bother to read the report, I hope you do not include the 117 members of this House. I doubt whether 25 people in the province have read this report from cover to cover, except perhaps the typesetters whose company is named in the report—

Mr. Pitman: A captive audience!

Mr. Burr:—the lithographers whose company is named in the report, the producers whose company is named in the report and the printer and publisher, who happens to be the Queen's Printer. The report was printed by order of the legislative assembly of Ontario, according to a note at the very end.

If I had any part as a member in ordering this report to be printed, I apologize now, Mr. Speaker. Do you know how many copies were printed? Over 5,000 copies—each one with an envelope. So we can count, I suppose, another $300 for mailing because there was no envelope to the $7,200 which the report cost the taxpayers of this province.

Over $7,200 for this annual report but not $75 a month for financially hard-pressed citizens who needed help to make a monthly visit on a errand of compassion. And a refusal of snow fences to a worthy organization even though there would be no cost whatsoever involved.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the promise in the Throne Speech—"the ministry will listen closely to the problems of the people and will act swiftly to resolve them,"—are words thought up by some ivory tower speech writer, not by members of the so-called new ministry. I am quoting again: "Policies will seek to expand and nourish individual initiative." As the French might say, Mr. Speaker, it is to laugh.

Of course, perhaps this promise applies only to private land speculators and private highrise apartment builders, not to the ordinary citizens who have ordinary problems.

I must make some comment about the $35 million Dow deception to place it on the record. This is probably the most blatant example of election-time gimmickry that we in this province have experienced in recent years. The lowest estimate for the time this suit would take in the courts is 1½ years. Other estimates go as high as 10 years.

The Trail smelter air pollution dispute, you may recall, lasted from 1928 to 1941—that was 13 or 14 years. What can we expect in this case?

Because the suit is based on charges such as "trespass on Crown property"—that apparently means the river bed—and "nuisance to the environment" there is high probability that Dow will be acquitted, especially as it will be a fairly simple matter for Dow to prove that scientific knowledge has given no reason for the company to suppose that it would cause any harm.

As this is apparently a test case other actions will be delayed until this one is settled. If this analysis is correct, Mr. Speaker, the suit is just a pre-election propaganda device to persuade the people of Ontario that the government is taking a tough line against polluters.

A simpler way of demonstrating this would have been to pass legislation making all polluters of the natural environment liable for damages. This would go a long way toward proving the government's good intentions.

I have had complaints from the auto plants both at Oakville and Windsor about in-plant pollution. One of the bad spots in the factories seems to be at the end of the line where car motors are started up and in the car conditioning area.

At Chrysler's in Windsor there are at least seven workers whom I could name, and many more of whom I have heard, who would tell you that they know that the fumes and the bad air were directly responsible for their afflictions. Some of them have had to retire early because of their miserable ill health. Let me identify these men and these afflictions: Mr. T. H.—throat operation, voice box lost; Mr. R. F.—voice box removed; Mr. W. T.—voice box removed; Mr. J. C.—throat operation, now deceased; Mr. T. M.—lung cancer, now deceased; Mr. G. H.—lung and throat cancer, now deceased.

There can be no doubt, even though there can be no proof, that in-plant pollution has shortened the lives and increased the pain of these workers.

The Department of Labour could play a leading role in reducing or eliminating in-plant pollution, and I commend this project to the new Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton). I am sure that this is a field from which he could derive great satisfaction by insisting that workers have a better working environment.

I should like to report briefly on the air pollution situation in Windsor generally. The members may be interested to know what progress has been made. The people who live around the Ford plant will give you quite an argument if you suggest that there has been any improvement. However, we are promised by the department considerable improvement later in the year. Windsor now has an API—air pollution index—which of course does not change the air pollution one particle. It simply gives a rough estimate of how relatively bad it is from one day to another.

The International Joint Commission's recent report showed that maximum fluoride air pollution in the Windsor area came to 2.9 parts per billion, which is higher than the maximum found by the United States National Air Sampling Network study in numerous American cities in 1967-1968. The maximum in this study was 2.5 per billion; so Windsor area is now worse than the American cities mentioned.

One part per billion, of course, Mr. Speaker, is the maximum permissible level in Ontario.

Windsor's API does not include any fluoride measurements as part of its index. We continue to remain in the dark in this matter, except once in every five years or so when the IJC makes a new report.

The API in Toronto has one advantage over the API in Windsor: If the index rises threateningly in Toronto, the minister can close down certain of the worst polluters. In Windsor, however, the minister's jurisdiction stops at the Detroit River. So far his persuasive powers have not convinced Wayne county officials or Michigan state officials to agree to a formula by which Michigan industries would be ordered, or even requested, to cut back or close down during periods of excessive pollution resulting from a combination of factors, including stagnant air.

Had such an agreement been achieved, a significant step forward would have been taken toward international co-operation dealing with pollution matters, and Windsor could have looked forward to a levelling off of the peaks even though the day-to-day pollution remains as serious as ever. Even this small gain has not yet been achieved. About the only progress that seems to have been made is in the reduction of the famous "pink cloud" from Zug Island. There are now times when there is hardly any remnant of this pink cloud to be seen, although I am assured that shortly after midnight is not one of those times.

That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, for Windsor has the highest rate of lung cancer in the province, yet I am sure that many people still do not quite believe that air pollution really hurts anyone very much. Let me read from a letter written by a chest physician, Dr. S. L. Kolber, of Montreal. He writes:

How much more evidence will be required before the government sees fit to enact the legislation required for air pollution control?

As a chest physician, involved with the problem daily, I feel it my duty to point out that the causal association between air pollution and lung disease, particularly bronchitis and emphysema, is now generally accepted. In the past decade or so the mortality rate in these diseases has increased to the point that at the present time approximately 10 times as many people are afflicted by these diseases, compared to 15 years ago.

For those who are unaware, these illnesses are as devastating as heart disease since they are potentially lethal, and in many cases severely crippling, leading to premature retirement and a lifetime of frequent hospitalizations.

It is very disconcerting to see many healthy people in their twenties and thirties afflicted with prolonged or chronic chest diseases, especially this winter when the atmospheric sulphur dioxide concentration has been dangerously high. The only real cure for their symptoms is to abandon their urban environment.

This calls to mind a recent survey in Los Angeles which revealed that 10,000 persons had been advised by their physicians to leave that particular urban environment.

Dr. Kolber's letter continues: "But someone may say that this is just one doctor's opinion, not supported by evidence."

I wish to put on the record of this House the result of a controlled study by Dr. A. A. LaVerne, a psychiatrist at New York's famous Bellevue Hospital. In all probability he has done more work than anyone else in the field of what is called "pure air therapy."

Dr. LaVerne was not interested in going over ground already covered, linking air pollution with chronic diseases, namely, asthma, bronchitis, cancer, emphysema and heart disease. He was interested in the minor symptoms which most people tolerate without seeking medical help, such as burning of the eyes, difficulty in concentration, impaired judgement, insomnia, irritability, fatigue, lassitude, headaches, and many other symptoms.

Dr. LaVerne's groups consisted of 100 apparently normal citizens, none of whom was under any kind of medical care, none of whom considered himself sick. When interviewed, however, they described various symptoms mentioned above as well as many forms of urinary, bowel and stomach distress—sweating, perspiration, palpitation, tremors, a continuous state of anxiety, as well as various sexual inadequacies.

Fifty subjects breathed, during their sleeping hours, ordinary New York City air which had been compressed into tanks, while the other 50 subjects breathed compressed pure air. This was a so-called blind test in which no subject knows to which group he belongs. Seventy-two per cent of those who inhaled pure air recorded various degrees of improvement in their symptoms. The improvements, or lack of them, were measured by investigators who did not know to which groups any of the subjects belonged, thus making it what is called a double blind study.

Among the 50 subjects who inhaled their normal diet of air—that is, ordinary polluted New York City air—there was no discernible improvement in their various symptoms. Remember, Mr. Speaker, this is a double blind test. Dr. LaVerne's work with pure air therapy leads him to stress two points:

1. Air pollution reduces efficiency in most areas of cerebral functions.

2. The healing process, both in physical and mental illnesses, is seriously impeded in the treatment of patients in a polluted-air environment.

Scientific journals have documented the connection between air pollution and the serious illnesses I have already mentioned, and even numerous deaths in air inversion episodes. Dr. LaVerne has now shown conclusively that air pollution either causes or, at least, prevents the healing of what are generally considered as minor ailments.

It is time that all governments, including Ontario's, took air pollution far more seriously than they are doing. It is time they took steps to speed up the installation of all air pollution control equipment.

As the deadline for the removal of phosphates from detergents approaches, there is a question still to be answered. In fact, it has scarcely been asked as yet. Namely, what chemicals are acceptable in soaps, detergents, floor cleaners, sink cleaners, and so forth? What cleansing chemicals can safely be disposed of in our rivers and lakes? If the answer is none, then we must back up one step and rephrase our question. What chemicals can be disposed of into our sewage systems and be safely removed at that point?

It seems to me that there are two answers to this problem. Independent scientists should make two lists of chemicals:

(a) Those that cannot be controlled and extracted by standard sewage systems and yet cannot be permitted to pass on into our rivers and lakes and;

(b) Those that can either be controlled at treatment plants or can be permitted to pass on into our rivers and lakes.

This would enable the cleansing products industry to know from what list of chemicals or other materials their soaps, detergents and other cleansers could be manufactured. This should simplify many decisions.

For example, if table salt in large quantities were to be used as a basic component of large numbers of detergents, what would be the effect on the rivers and lakes? Certainly not a desirable one as a long-term procedure. Would removal at sewage plants be feasible? Probably not. They would probably be exorbitantly expensive. If so, table salt should not be used in this way.

Another example: If phosphates from detergents were easily removed at sewage plants, along with phosphates from industrial and human wastes, then this might enable the industry to continue using them without contributing to algal bloom and the deoxidation of the Great Lakes.

The principle to establish, I suggest, is to determine what is tolerable and controllable, then to establish rules in accordance with this knowledge.

The same principle should be applied to all areas of pollution. Now that we know that there are certain areas of the Great Lakes that have too much mercury, let us discourage immediately the continued use of mercury. Let us encourage the use of substitutes and, if necessary, encourage research to hasten the reduction of mercury to as close to zero as possible.

The same principle would apply to cadmium, now found to exist in disturbing amounts in the air and therefore in the rain and the snow and therefore in drinking water. Since the desirable level of cadmium is zero parts per billion, and since the permissible level is 10 parts per billion, when we find drinking water at or near Guelph containing 18 parts per billion, then it is high time to find out the source of the cadmium and reduce it immediately and eliminate it as soon as possible.

I may as well put on record, Mr. Speaker, a brief summary of what might be called "the trouble with cadmium." Cadmium is a toxic, heavy metal now widely used in the manufacture of batteries, paints, plastics and even in some pesticides. It is widely used in anti-corrosion electroplating and in the refining of zinc.

The Sunday Times of London, England, recently told the story of the Japanese girl who committed suicide in August, 1969, because, as she wrote in her diary: "The fear of cadmium contamination permeates my body. Pains gnaw at me. I feel I want to throw out my stomach and intestines. If ever I recover from this disease, I want to become a case worker."

Six fruitless hospital appointments had failed to diagnose her illness. Was she just another hypochondriac? Fortunately, her body was not cremated as is the usual custom, but an autopsy was held which revealed that her kidney contained 22,400 parts per million of cadmium. This is the severest case of metal poisoning known in all medical history.

Yet there were warnings. In the early 1950s, a Japanese doctor was concerned about the large number of patients complaining of agonizing pains. He decided that cadmium was the cause. Of 350 such patients that he treated, 119 died. When he complained to local mining companies, arguing that their industrial discharge had polluted local rice fields, he was accused of trying to cash in on bogus compensation claims.

This story, Mr. Speaker, is reminiscent of that of the Japanese doctor who fought for years to prove his patients were dying of mercury poisoning.

As the London Sunday Times story was reprinted in the Globe and Mail of February 8, 1971, I shall not go into further detail, except to read the final paragraph:

When Premier Sato was told about the case in Parliament last week he wept. Yet only last month, he confessed on television that while the powerful men of industry had so much influence on the government, it was difficult to see how effective legislation could be framed. And in December, in fact, the antipollution bill was emasculated through pressure from business leaders.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, big business in Japan is just as corrupt and greedy as it is anywhere else. Unfortunately, this is not the end of the cadmium story. It is probably just the beginning.

A few weeks ago, the Canada Centre for Inland Waters, while making surveys, discovered, although they were not looking for it, excessive amounts of cadmium in several areas in the Great Lakes region, especially in the vicinity of Guelph. Why were they not looking for cadmium? Have the various branches of The Department of Energy and Resources Management yet started to look for cadmium?

The federal health authorities are now finding larger than expected amounts of cadmium in food all across Canada. Trail, BC, the home of the Cominco zinc refinery, has won the unwanted honour of having the highest cadmium contamination of food so far recorded in the federal survey. The people of Trail are already plagued with lead and fluoride pollution. Now they have cadmium pollution too.

The Food and Drug Directorate has also found canned and fresh water fish with substantially, perhaps hazardous, concentrations of cadmium.

As the months go by, we find more and more heavy metals polluting our air, our water and our food.

Again, I ask the minister, what is his department doing to bring about the reduction of cadmium, and for that matter, of mercury, in the industrial processes of this province? Is anyone trying to find substitutes? What pressure is the minister applying?

These are some of the questions, Mr. Speaker, I have been hoping in vain to ask the minister during question period. I ask them now.

I have considerable more, but in the interest of speeding the debate I shall resume my seat.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rising to take part once again in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, I consider myself highly honoured and privileged for being given this opportunity. At the outset I would be remiss if I did not extend my sincere congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, first on your appointment to the high office and on the fair manner in which you conduct the business of the House.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. B. Newman: Likewise, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations to go—yes, the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) personally, and to the member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Cass), whose shoes you so aptly fill, and to the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe). I likewise would like to extend congratulations to the Premier (Mr. Davis) on his selection by delegates representing approximately 15 per cent of the population of Ontario to the premiership of the province. My congratulations also should go out to the newly appointed ministers and the ministers without portfolio.

Mr. Speaker, my comments this afternoon will be in a series of units, and the first deals with gasoline pricing and marketing. Approximately one year ago I brought to the attention of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) the differential in gasoline prices between the Toronto area and my home area, Windsor. And I noted at that time that the difference ranged anywhere from one cent to as much as eight cents a gallon. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that I would have had a reply to my question of the minister at the time, but apparently nothing of any substance did happen. I hope that the present Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart) will take note of the comments I have concerning gasoline pricing and marketing and look into the situation and do something about it.

On April 16, an editorial in the Windsor Star, was headlined "Gas Price Inequities." I will not read the whole editorial, but will read only portions of it. The last paragraph says:

The Ontario government has a responsibility to the citizens of this city to investigate the difference in the cost of gasoline across this province, just as it has a responsibility to investigate any inequities in the cost of other consumer goods across Ontario.

A few days after that Mr. Speaker, Mr. Jack Kent, a very capable newsmen of the Windsor Star who heads a column "Business Highlights," had the following comments. To those members who come from northern Ontario, I certainly would like them to pay attention to these because you can see the gross inequities that do exist in the whole gasoline pricing structure.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): That is for sure. We agree with the hon. member.

Mr. B. Newman: Jack Kent writes:

Last week on a visit to Detroit it was a simple matter of going to the first service station to fill up with 19.2 gallons of regular fuel—

that is Gulf gas—

—for $4.97 or 25.9 cents a gallon.

Now I have seen gasoline advertised in stations in Detroit as low as 22.9 cents a gallon. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, gasoline down to 22.9 a gallon.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): They pay 43 cents a gallon themselves.

Mr. B. Newman: Granted this is an American gallon and as a result is smaller, but when you translate the 22.9 or 23 cents a gallon for gasoline into Canadian volume and Canadian prices you are buying gasoline for less than 30 cents a gallon.

An hon. member: How do those poor companies survive!

Mr. B. Newman: Now at that price Mr. Speaker, one would wonder where the gasoline would come from to be able to retail it at approximately 30 cents a gallon to a Canadian. But let me read you a little more of Mr. Kent's comments.

A comparative purchase of regular fuel in the city of Windsor (Shell) selling at the slightly reduced price of 52.9 cents a gallon costs $8.46.

In other words in Detroit you paid $4.97 for the same amount of gas that you got in Canada, in Windsor, for $8.46.

There is even the factual story of a Windsor service station operator who fills his gas tank in Detroit whenever the opportunity arises. He cannot afford his own prices here.

An hon. member: Oh my!

Mr. B. Newman: Now I want the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs to listen to this. This paragraph will shock him.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Their gallons are smaller.

Mr. B. Newman: To continue:

There are also reliable reports that United States tank trucks fill at the Sarnia refineries and haul into Detroit.

Here we have Canadian gasoline, so it is said, being sold in Detroit for approximately half the price which it would be sold in our own Canada.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): That is what the bootleggers used to do during the temperance days.

Mr. B. Newman: And further:

Even with fuel oil some of American lakers go into Sarnia to obtain their oil because the price is reportedly cheaper there than from the U.S. sources.

Now if that is right, Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong in the state of Ontario.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): There sure is.

Mr. Bukator: We knew that a long time ago, so surely the government did? That is not going to enlighten it now, it has known that for years.

Mr. B. Newman: However, Mr. Speaker, not only should the government investigate the difference in the cost of gasoline across this province, but it should also look into the whole picture of the marketing of gasoline and the relationship between oil companies and service station operators.

Both British Columbia and Alberta have undertaken such comprehensive studies. Alberta's 744-page report took four years. Why has not Ontario undertaken such comprehensive studies? Why not?

Mr. Bukator: They have run out of pigeon holes.

Mr. B. Newman: Senator Phillip Hart, senior senator from the state of Michigan, is now chairing an investigation into monopoly and antitrust practices in the United States oil industry. I can safely say that his findings will be similar to the presentations made to the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs' committee on franchising by Mr. Ken W. Langdon, who happens to be a former Windsorite and is now executive secretary of the Ontario Retail Gasoline and Automotive Service Association.

Senator Hart has been given 60 days within which he must submit his report. Now if they can do it within 60 days in the United States, surely, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister could have a committee look into the picture in the Province of Ontario and maybe even before the next election come down with an answer to the problem. Maybe then our consumers would be able to get gasoline at a reasonable price; a price which they are entitled to pay.

The Ontario Retail Gasoline and Automotive Service Association brief in no uncertain terms shows how the international oligopoly in the petroleum industry—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. B. Newman: That is right, oligopoly.

An hon. member: That is what I was wondering. I am glad we got that straight.

Mr. B. Newman: —has economic power far greater than that of the combined power of all 10 provincial governments in Canada. It shows the helplessness—yes, even hopelessness—of the service station operators in their dealings with the oil companies—their attempts to have oil companies follow the cigarette industry's ban on promotional gimmicks, games and giveaways.

These station operators need a bill of rights for themselves. They request a bill of rights for service station operators. It is one of their prime concerns and it is hoped that the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs will appoint a mediator to chair such negotiation meetings.

Of special interest to me, Mr. Speaker, is the brazen misleading approaches used by oil companies in their advertising for new station operators. For example, on May 1 and 2, 1970 the following Texaco ad appeared in the Windsor Star:

This Texaco service station could be the income opportunity you have been waiting for!

This Texaco station will offer an excellent opportunity for the man who wants to be in business for himself and make a good income. Prime location. Our research indicates strong profit potential. Only small investment required.

However, Mr. Speaker, a Windsor member of the retail gasoline dealers' association commented concerning the above. This is a Texaco station located at 278 Tecumseh Road East in Windsor on the northwest corner of Tecumseh and McDougall across from the Kennedy Collegiate Institute and the Chrysler truck plant. It now goes under the name of Collegiate Texaco.

This company advertisement in the Star says:

Our research indicates strong profit potential.

However, Mr. Speaker, here is the history of this location.

A man by the name of Denomme left the business in December, 1959. Wright leased it from December, 1959, to May, 1960, being in business for only five months. Indig followed Wright from May, 1960, to March, 1963, for 34 months of operation. Dingwall followed Indig from April, 1963, to March, 1965, for 23 months. Plumb, a very capable operator, took over from March, 1965, to April, 1965, maintaining the station only for one month. Now Grouleau had it from June, 1965, to April, 1970, being in business for 58 months and then going into bankruptcy.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the oil company should have disclosed complete and truthful information about the past and potential profit potential of this station to anyone interested. Such callous business tactics should not be tolerated by the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs who has a responsibility both to the buying public and to the lessee.

This is only a Windsor example. I imagine it could be duplicated in many other parts of the province. In Ontario, from 3,000 to 4,000, or 25 to 35 per cent of the service stations change hands each year. One of the province's largest industries, distributing one of the most basic products in the economy, suffers from an incredible mortality rate. Major brand name gasoline dealers or franchise dealers pay from two to nine cents a gallon more for the same gasoline as do unbranded and non-major gasoline operators.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, operating a business in which you are:

1. Not free to set your own hours.
2. Not free to buy the gasoline you choose.
3. Compelled to buy designated brands of miscellaneous items at prices that are not always competitive.
4. Not free to advertise your own name and compelled to advertise the oil company.
5. Compelled to pay for promotional advertising programmes and contests sponsored by the oil companies.
6. Compelled to accept lease and contract charges or abandon the business.

However, in the service station business there are two freedoms. There is (1) the freedom to do everything the oil company "suggests" and (2) the freedom to go broke.

The oil companies advocate freedom of enterprise for themselves but practise economic slavery for the operators.

So says the "Alberta Gasoline Marketing Report" on page 30.

The Toronto Daily Star on June 5, 1969, had an article dealing with this very same problem. The headline on the article read: "Are Gas Station Dealers Slaves of the Oil Companies?" Reading through the article, one cannot help but conclude that the headline was aptly placed and aptly reflective of the complete article.

The second article on that same page by Ron Lowman—both articles were by Ron Lowman, Star staff writer—has the headline: "You Can't Beat the Oil Company so the Dealer Quit." It is concerning a gentleman by the name of Ernie Barnett who just could not make it as a gas station operator because of the tactics employed by the industry itself.

Is it not time, Mr. Minister, that Ontario got into an in-depth study of this problem, or accepts the findings of both British Columbia and Alberta and passes a bill of rights for service station operators and puts prohibitions and restrictions on oil companies, exactly as is proposed in the "Alberta Gasoline Marketing Report" on pages 38 and 39 and that Ontario enact a Franchise Fair Dealing Act, similar to that of Massachusetts?

The time is now. Let us protect the service station operators. Let us bring the price of gasoline down in line as to what it should be, not only in my area of the province but in all parts of the province and, especially, Mr. Speaker, in the northern part of Ontario, an area that has been too long penalized by such operations.

Mr. Bukator: Too bad the whole group is not here to listen to this good speech. All these prominent men ought to be here and listen to that.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to at this time make a few comments concerning rent supplements. With the acute shortage of housing throughout the metropolitan areas of this province—yes, even in smaller municipalities—the plight of the person with a large family or the one on a limited income or on a fixed income, the plight of the underemployed, the plight of those in lower-paying jobs, the plight of the large number of unemployed—some receiving unemployment insurance benefits, others living off savings, if any, or borrowings from credit unions, finance companies, and so forth—and the plight of many, many senior citizens who were never able to purchase their own homes, concerning the cost for shelter, their plight is extremely serious.

Some are fortunate enough to get geared-to-income Ontario housing and as a result pay a reasonable rent, if in one of the above categories. However, most people are not that fortunate. Is it not about time the Ontario government has a new look at the least fortunate who desperately need housing that they can afford. It is said, and rightly so, that Canadians pay out in rent proportionately more of their consumer expenditures than do people in most countries in the world. Many—yes, far too many—especially senior citizens, pay more than 50 per cent of their total income solely for housing. The minimum wage earner is another example, as is the under-employed or part-time worker. I could go on and on listing categories, Mr. Speaker, but that would not solve the problem. The real solution is the building of more and more housing, and now with unemployment being as critical as it is what better way could one help solve or minimize two problems at the same time: one that of unemployment; and two the need for housing.

Up until the time the need is met, a large segment of our society will be taken advantage of by some unscrupulous landlords by paying more than a fair share of their income for shelter.

Were there no shortage in housing, then one would never read, as I do now, from the May 2, 1970, issue of The Windsor Star. The headline is "A Welfare Mother Tells of Her Rat-Infested and Insect-Ridden Home."

I do not intend to read any more, Mr. Speaker, this is enough. It speaks for itself of the acute needs for decent housing at a decent rental. As I said earlier, those who are fortunate enough to get into geared-to-income housing are really getting subsidized rental accommodations. Those who are not able to get such housing are being financially penalized by being required to pay a disproportionate amount of their income for housing or, on the other hand, in many cases required to live in substandard accommodations or eat less.

Mr. Speaker, if one fortunate group can receive a rent subsidy or supplement, then why should not those not so fortunate be likewise assisted? The federal government provides some persons on old age security with a guaranteed income supplement. Why should not Ontario, through the Ontario Housing Corporation or The Department of Social and Family Services, or both, step into the breach and provide a rent supplement or a rent subsidy?

If the government of Ontario is a little hesitant to include all of the categories that I have mentioned, I suggest that they stage the programme by starting with senior citizens first. I suggest that the office of aging in The Department of Social and Family Services undertake to set up a bureau to deal with rent supplements. The names of those receiving old age assistance are now readily available to this branch.

I would suggest that along with the application form received by a person when he becomes entitled to his basic pension, the application for the supplement would go, in this province, a description of the rent supplement plan. It should be automatic that qualification for the supplement will enable the pensioner to receive the rent supplement.

He can then apply to The Department of Social and Family Services giving them the necessary statistics and, after one home visit, should receive the rent supplement himself. The supplement should cover the amount of rent per month in excess of 25 per cent of the total pension received. I hope that we can think about this question in a non-partisan manner because Ontario must take steps to remedy this problem immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to, as I have now for some six years, bring to the attention of the House my comments concerning mobile or portable housing. I would have liked to have made quite extensive comments on housing but for the sake of time, I will curtail my comments and make mention once again about the slowness with which portable or mobile housing is being looked upon in this province as an assist in the housing crisis.

Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that mobile housing is the only answer to our present housing crisis, but it sure can go a long way toward reducing the crisis. This method of housing would have many advantages;

1. It would enable small municipalities, especially in slow growth areas to attract and hold new industry.

2. It would enable municipalities to plan in a more leisurely and economic fashion, instead of being stampeded into housing developments.

3. It would assure housing to persons moving from one area to another.

4. It would be one way that a housing surplus could be provided a community, thus easing the disastrous rent spiral.

5. It would force owners of substandard housing to bring that housing up to an acceptable level.

6. It could be used as housing for farm labour.

7. When the housing crisis in any municipality was overcome, these mobile or portable units could be transported to another area.

8. When they have served their purpose or their master they could be sold as summer cottages.

There are many other advantages that could be mentioned in making a case for portable housing. Mr. Speaker, it is over six years now that this was first brought to the attention of this government, and it certainly is about time that some action was taken on this.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few comments at this time to the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko). Unfortunately, he is not in the House, but I know he is one who will read Hansard, and as a result notice the comments that have been made in the Legislature. And, as a result, act accordingly.

Mr. Georg G. Boukydis, president of the Ontario region of the Canadian Restaurant Association, wrote a very short letter to the Windsor Star, and here is the letter. It is headed "Just fine society":

Sir:

I was surprised to read in the Star that a hotel near Windsor was given only the minimum fine of $5,000 for wickedly serving beer without the prescribed sandwich.

Legally the fine could have been as much as $25,000.

Given the barbaric attitude of Ontario's Liquor Control Act toward punishments, it could have expected that the offender would be at the very least have been put in stocks in the public square, or maybe the rack would have been deemed more appropriate.

So much for Ontario's version of the just society.

These are comments by one individual concerning the Liquor Control Act. Here is another extremely interesting comment, dated March 12, 1971, "Laughable Paradox of Ontario's laws":

The fact that a Windsor area establishment received the minimum fine of $5,000 for serving beer without a meal points to several things. The first is the antiquity of the thinking behind many of the laws in Ontario which deal with liquor and the manner in which it may be purchased, served or consumed.

The Ontario Provincial Police should not be faulted for bringing the charges against the offenders. The law is there for them to uphold. Obviously what is needed is a completely amended law.

Nor should the judge be criticized for the $5,000 fine, he was merely acting within the confines of the particular piece of legislation and handed down the minimum sentence. Strict application of the law rather than turning a blind eye toward chronic shortcomings due to changes in attitude and untimeliness is perhaps the surest way to get our well-paid legislators to update outmoded laws. Most certainly the average citizen will start to complain to his elected representatives if some of his laws, dated almost to antiquity, are brought to bear.

The minimum fine of $5,000 for sale of a glass of beer without a meal also points to the inadequacies of some of the other laws controlling even more severe crimes against society. Take pollution for example. It is laughable that a wealthy corporation faces a fine of $5,000 for the first offence when it pollutes its environment.

Think of the difference between the two. What a paradox! What a laughable paradox!

Surely on a scale of values, any polluter should be subject to a far larger fine than $5,000 for failing to ensure no pollution occurs if someone is subject to a fine of $5,000 for illegally serving a beer.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): One glass of beer?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes. You know this very well, Mr. Member for Victoria-Haliburton. He knows the injustices—

Mr. W. Hodgson: I am from York North.

Mr. B. Newman: I am sorry, York North. You know the injustices of—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will address the Chair.

Mr. B. Newman: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member; he certainly does know the injustice in this circumstance.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): If he does not, he had better sharpen up.

Mr. B. Newman: He is on my side there.

Mr. Gaunt: All members up there need to be complete is Eagleson. That is a reactivated Chicago gang up there.

Mr. B. Newman: With pollution being such a major threat to the environment and population, what is needed is severe handling of offenders rather than the kid glove approach now taken through our laws. It is time our legislators do just that.

Not too long ago Chief Justice McRuer submitted his final report, the fifth report. On April 17 an editorial headed "Fast Action Needed on McRuer Report" makes the following comment:

Among these is Mr. McRuer's recommendation for a change in liquor laws and their administration and enforcement. The province's liquor legislation has been a previous target for McRuer criticism. Now the final report specifically recommends a relaxation of some of the arbitrary powers of the Liquor Licence Board as well as the removal of some present licensing functions of the Liquor Control Board.

Surely the answer is in a complete revision of the Act, Mr. Speaker? By the way, once again to the Provincial Secretary, I am just wondering when the report from his department concerning the study undertaken by his predecessor about keg beer is going to be released? If only from the aspect of the use of fewer bottles and cans, and the lessening of the bottle and can pollution problem, this government should consider the sale for home consumption of beer in kegs.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of unemployment is probably the most serious problem, next to one's personal health, that one is ever faced with in a whole lifetime. With new techniques, processes and so forth, the idea of providing everyone who wants it or needs it with gainful employment seems to be getting more difficult daily. With rationalizing in industry, with runaway plants, with plant closings, with curtailment of production necessitating layoffs, municipalities as well as labour find themselves in a most difficult position.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of unemployment is universal. Most industrial nations are now faced with it. It is easy to blame the hon. Mr. Trudeau, or likewise the hon. Premier of Ontario, but can you blame both of them for the US problems? Who do you blame for Britain's woes? An UP article headed, "British Unemployment Hikes" says:

Unemployment in Britain increased to 3.4 per cent in April with 814,189 listed without jobs, the highest figure in 31 years, the government said Monday in a monthly report. The Conservative Party government blamed the continuing rise in unemployment on inflationary policies of the previous Labour Party government.

So who do you blame?

Mr. Bukator: They are both wrong. They do not know what they are doing. They need a Liberal government.

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Cannot blame the Liberals over there.

Mr. Ferrier: There are not any Liberals; wise country!

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, blaming one does not solve the problem. It does not help those in their fifties who, as the Detroit Free Press headline the other day said, "Will Soon Form a New Aged Poor Class" because they may never be called back to work in some areas and in some types of industry. Blaming someone does not solve the difficulty of those injured on the job and able to undertake only light work, and let out of their employment with little hope of any recall. Blaming someone does not help those who were forced—or is that too strong a word?—to accept early retirement at a pension reduced to a point where they may be in great difficulty in making ends meet without some part-time help.

The severity of the problem requires a non-partisan all-out war or attack on the number one economic problem. I shall make a series of suggestions later in my comments as a partial and temporary answer to this social evil.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to show how concerned the people in my own area are in this respect. For example, a headline of April 21 of this year says, "Operations Moved, Cosmetic Firm to Pare Staff." Approximately 30 of the company's 50 employees are going to be laid off. A second headline says, "Contract Lost." The date is April 3, 1971, "Canada Bread will lay-off 27." Another headline dated April 3: "Indefinite term: Kelsey Hayes lays off 200."

These are only the layoffs that I mention, Mr. Speaker, but there are other aspects to the problem. There is the aspect of the proposed imposition of restrictive tariffs by U.S. Customs that can have an adverse effect on employees in the Dominion Forge plant in the city of Windsor. There is the effect of the imposition of duties that may have an adverse effect on Dominion Twist Drill Limited.

In a letter from Mr. A. R. Anderson, President, of February 23 he points out to me:

We are gradually being edged out of the market by imports brought in and resold at a cost much less than we can manufacture, and these are being purchased by the large automotive manufacturers and chain stores; also by government departments.

Then there is the problem Fabricated Steel Products Windsor Limited are afraid of, which is—thermal moulded boat hulls are being imported on a reduced tariff so that the company itself cannot compete with the imported product.

Mr. Speaker, in my own community at the present there are 5,333 registered for employment, there are 5,307 receiving municipal social service assistance, but there are 15,928 receiving unemployment insurance. I would assume—and I hope—that many of these receiving unemployment insurance are not permanently laid off; that they will have the opportunity to return to their jobs.

In an attempt to focus attention on the seriousness of the unemployment problem, the Essex and Kent Building and Construction Trades Council and the Windsor and District Labour Council called a mass meeting for April 4, 1971, for the purpose of organizing jobless men and women in the community so that they may act and speak collectively on their own behalf.

The meeting was held on Sunday, April 4, 1971, and it was chaired by Vic White, chairman of the full employment committee of the Windsor and District Labour Council. Present at the meeting were Mr. Harris of local 200, Mr. St. Pierre of local 195, Mr. Brooks of local 444, Mr. Frank Hutnik of, I think it is local 494, the Carpenters' Union.

The group met and had submitted to them a series of 12 recommendations. They discussed the recommendations and approved all of them. I will not read the recommendations at this time, Mr. Speaker, but I will read the result of the meeting. The meeting selected and formed a committee to do the following:

First: So that they may have an effective voice to all levels of government.

Second: To open up employment opportunities.

Third: To assist in solving the problems of the unemployed person by directing their personal problems to the pertinent authority and to see to it that they have equitable consideration.

Fourth: To be as free as possible from any political ties.

Notice that fourth aim of theirs, to cut themselves off from any political ties—a very noteworthy gesture on the part of the unemployed.

The Greater Windsor Foundation is a non-profit organization devoted to making Windsor a better community in which to work, to play and to shop. Under the leadership of a most able president, Al Baker, this foundation was asked by city council to sponsor a meeting to look into (a) the worsening of conditions in the local area, (b) the stimulation of the local economy and employment and (c) the reduction of the welfare situation.

In addition, they had three points to consider. First, the reasons for the slowdown in the construction industry and what measures could be taken to improve the situation. Second, the effect of the auto integration on employment and merits of supporting a broadening in the auto integration for advocating the extension of integration to other industrial areas, and third, the stagnation of new industrial development in Windsor and what steps, if any, might be taken.

The meeting itself was chaired by George Burt, who is a well-known labour leader in Canada. The meeting, held on April 15 in council chambers, had invited to it people from all walks of life, from both union and management, as well as the three levels of political endeavour.

During the meeting, some substantial and noteworthy comments were made. For example, Frank Hutnik, financial secretary of Local 494 of the carpenters' union, made this suggestion: that with the help of senior governments, the city undertake the development of the Ojibway area into a free port. The development of a Windsor free port would not only provide a considerable amount of jobs in the construction of the physical facility but would establish year-round employment in the operation of the port.

Dr. R. C. Quittenton, who is president of St. Clair College and an outstanding citizen in the community—very outspoken concerning the needs of the community—said that ways should be found to harness welfare recipients and the unemployed, to a massive cleanup campaign.

On the management side, John McGivney, representing Chrysler Canada and representing the company's president, Ron Todgham, and Robert J. Daragon, representing Ford of Canada, said that their companies had laid off employees in the past few months because of market conditions but now that the markets were picking up, they anticipated full employment for some time to come.

Mr. Daragon said Ford hired about 2,000 workers in the last year and that more than 200 were employed in the summer as replacements, and I quote his comments: "If all goes well, we shall be needing more replacements this summer."

However, Mr. Steel, the city manager, termed the unemployment problem "monumental." He said neither federal nor provincial governments have provided any answers and the burden remains with the municipal government. The city manager said the city needs works of several million dollars, especially in the sewer programme, but he cannot introduce expenditures in his budget because of the burden they would cause on the taxpayers. He said any budget should be commensurate with the taxpayers' ability to pay.

The meeting concluded, Mr. Speaker, with the following headline which was aptly put: "Jobless Meet Fails to Find Solutions."

However, as a result of the meeting, the mayor was asked to create a mayor's committee on unemployment, and he did select 14 individuals who were to look into the problem and report.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few suggestions as to creating employment. I do so knowing that all of these do cost money and they are always limited by budget restrictions. For example, one of my suggestions is a seasonal works programme, similar to a winter works programme. A winter works programme has been suggested by the hon. member for Essex-Kent and endorsed by all members in this House. A seasonal works programme could be planned so that at any time unemployment reaches a critical stage it could be thrown in and fill the breach and provide needed employment.

A second suggestion, we could require citizens to sort their home wastes into bottles, separating them from cans, from paper and from waste. This would mean added costs to municipalities, and so some type of grant would have to be made to compensate for this added cost because the added cost would mean added manpower. However, with the collection of bottles, cans and papers individually, we could have all of these recycled, we would have an ecological assist and an elimination or partial answer to the problem of unemployment. This would also extend, in years, the needs of the sanitary landfill of the various communities.

A third suggestion is the problem of crime in the big cities. We see from our neighbours to the south how serious it is. Let us not have our citizens being afraid to walk our streets at night. Terry Wills, a Canadian writer in the legislative press gallery, who lived in Washington, DC, can certainly tell you what it is like to be within sight of the White House and not be safe on the street. Let us make our cities safe 24 hours a day; to help to do this will require manpower, a special kind of manpower, more policing; in other words, more police officers.

To ask municipalities that are hard-pressed to provide the funds for more police is not realistic today, unless some of the municipalities' financial burdens are lessened substantially. Provincial grants would have to be made to increase protection to people—at least I think the government could implement a pilot project in this respect to see if more policing would make our streets safer.

A fourth suggestion: On May 8, 1964, a select committee of the Ontario Legislature was appointed, among other reasons to look into the employment opportunities of youth. As an example of increasing employment opportunities, the junior forest ranger facilities are only used during the months of July and August; I would suggest that they also be used in May and June and the month of September by university-attending students, and in the summer months by students who are being accommodated today. The facilities are there; there is no added expense at all. It simply involves putting the university students into the facilities and giving them some worthwhile training.

I would prefer more facilities for the junior forest ranger programme. I would like an expanded programme, but that would entail the developing of more facilities which would mean a greater financial involvement and I hesitate to do so because of that. However, we must always consider the physically handicapped youth. They should never be forgotten in any of our programmes, as they generally are last hired and first laid off. The facilities of the junior forest ranger programme could be used in off-seasons to prepare the physically handicapped to develop some type of skill that would enable them to have a fair share of our economic abundance.

On page 126 of the youth committee report, one of the recommendations is that a province-wide campsite be undertaken by The Department of Lands and Forests to provide camping facilities to non-profit youth agencies at a nominal fee. Camp grants for the assistance of non-profit youth agencies which are presently available are inadequate and should be adjusted to more accurately reflect present day costs.

Mr. Speaker, in my own community is a group of students who have written to the Premier and suggested that he give most serious and favourable consideration to this group of teenagers who now represent only three high schools—Assumption, St. Mary's and Forster—but soon will include all Windsor high schools in their project to try and alleviate poverty in the community. Robert Richards, president, and Francis Reeve, vice president of the group called STOP—Students To Oppose Poverty—has written asking the Premier for assistance.

I am not going to take the time of the House to read into the record their communication to the Premier. However, I would say that theirs is not a new project. For over a year and a half these teenage students have been working with underprivileged welfare children of Windsor.

STOP, Students To Oppose Poverty, would like to become more deeply involved. They plan on running a camp to which children from the disadvantaged would be brought, taught many skills, and have developed new attitudes toward society. They want to show that someone cares and is willing to help those who need help and guidance.

Mr. Speaker, it is now up to the Premier. I ask him, please, to consider this request from concerned students to aid the disadvantaged.

Another suggestion I could make concerning the alleviation of the problem of the unemployed is the need for an expanded housing programme. This has been mentioned by many other members in the House, and it covers the needs of all communities in Ontario, and I can say that the city of Windsor is no exception.

Unfortunately, housing at today's prices precludes many from not only ever achieving their dream of home ownership, but it even precludes the dreaming of home ownership. However, I would like to submit two suggestions to this government, not only to help the unemployment problem, but also to help people achieve the dream of home ownership.

For example, (a) I would suggest that the government undertake a home mortgage interest subsidy programme for those below a certain fixed income, this income to be derived after detailed study, but to be as low as possible. The HUD programme in the US, programme 235, as I mentioned in last year's debates on The Department of Trade and Development should be seriously considered.

A second suggestion on this line is the removal of the provincial sales tax on building materials, to show good faith and thereby encourage the federal government likewise to do the same.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): They are pretty hard to encourage.

Mr. B. Newman: Theirs is 11 per cent. The Ontario government's is five per cent. They have substantially more to lose than this government.

This government should show its good faith. Remove the sales tax on building material. Even remove it on condition that the federal government removes it then, to make it fair. I would suggest that this tax subsidy—that is the removal of the sales tax—be deducted from the selling price of the home.

Now even the group in Windsor that organized themselves—the unemployed—made the suggestion of the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax. Most of their recommendations actually dealt with the federal level. However, in spite of that, they are substantial and noteworthy.

For example, that same group recommended that federal and provincial governments finance the development and installation of all utilities—meaning services—toward the development of serviced lots for home building. They likewise suggested that the governments be petitioned to clean up the slum areas and waterfronts.

Mr. Speaker, I could suggest that, naturally, all of these suggestions will require the expenditures of maybe a substantial amount of funds. As a result, I do not say that the government should come along and implement them, but should look into the potential as far as employment is concerned in the adopting of some of these suggestions.

One is that the province pay a tax on all of its properties. In this way, if they paid full municipal taxes then municipalities themselves, getting these funds from the province, could undertake some of the worthwhile projects that I had mentioned previously, or maybe other projects so that they, themselves, could provide substantial assists to alleviate unemployment.

Another suggestion is the financial assistance toward the cost of construction in operating municipal sewage control projects. The IJC made a recommendation that unless we seriously go into control and abatement our Great Lakes will become dead in the not too distant future. If the government can see the light of day, there is another way in which substantial employment could be created.

"The doctors in the community, seeing the need for chronic care facilities, made mention in a letter to me that I transmitted to the Minister of Health that because of the lack of chronic care facilities, many acute care beds in our hospitals are being occupied when they normally would not be occupied, were we to have nursing home facilities. The doctors estimate that anywhere from five to 15 per cent of our hospital beds now are being occupied by patients requiring chronic care, when they could be placed in by far cheaper facilities.

Mr. Speaker, another way that this province could assist in creating employment is if they took to heart the recommendations of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, in which they make mention—and their proposals are few but extremely noteworthy—one of their proposals is the reduction of corporation taxes on a formula basis in proportion to the company's participation in export markets.

A second is to provide low-cost financing for automotive parts manufacturers needing expansion and renovation capital, or working capital, or for anti-pollution equipment.

The third is an extremely noteworthy one, one that had been taken care of by the federal government but was quickly picked up by this government. That is the elimination of the retail sales tax on machinery and equipment used in production, either directly or indirectly. Were this government to consider seriously the presentation of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, I think substantial employment could be created.

There is another problem, Mr. Speaker, and that deals with both levels of government, the federal and the provincial, concerning students wishing to upgrade their skills. In the first instance, they go into an upgrading course which generally requires 64 weeks of attendance. In other words, 16 weeks for each year—requiring 16 weeks for grade 9, 16 weeks for grade 10, 16 weeks for grade 11 and 16 weeks for grade 12.

However, the agreement with the federal authorities is such that the federal authorities will only purchase from the Province of Ontario, 52 weeks of upgrading programming. The student who has never had grade 9 is able to get 52 weeks of upgrading so he gets up to as far as grade 11, has four weeks of grade 12 and is cut off. He can no longer get financial assistance. The government says at that stage, "You are no longer required in this programme. We cannot help you complete the programme."

Were the provincial and federal governments to put their heads together and solve this problem, we would find that many of the students who are now in the upgrading programmes would be able to complete their four years of high school and then go into a skill-training programme. They are not allowed to go into a skill-training programme without a grade 12 education. They cannot get a grade 12 education, because the programme as set up now only allows them to get four weeks of grade 12. As a result, not being able to develop a skill they find themselves thrust into the ranks of the unemployed.

The skill-training programme can last up to one year. However, normally, it takes about 40 weeks. My suggestion is that the provincial and federal governments get together and combine the skill-training and upgrading programme, so that the student can have the full 104 weeks of training—60 in the upgrading, and 44 in the skill-training.

Mr. Speaker, on a very parochial basis I can make mention of a series of other ways of relieving the unemployment picture. For example, on Lake St. Clair the province has purchased a park, but the park remains just parkland. Surely we could employ people to develop that land now so that for the summer time it could be put to use.

There is Peach Island in the Detroit River. I would suggest to the government that it consider a purchase, or a lease purchase, of the property so that the unemployed could be used at this stage in enlarging or developing the programme, or, at least, so that it could be held for future development.

I could suggest the development of a seignery or a Jesuit village, as I have proposed years ago, in the French section, or the early French settlement section, in the Essex county area. I would like to suggest that holiday provincial parks be used as a junior forest ranger on-the-job training area. We cannot accommodate all students who would like to take the junior forest ranger programme, but we do have provincial parks that could have an on-the-job training programme where the student would live at home and simply report daily to the park for various types of junior forest ranger programmes, and in this way enable himself to develop a skill and also earn a few dollars.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): There is SWEEP.

Mr. B. Newman: I do not see any of that SWEEP in the Essex county area.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Oh, it will come!

Mr. B. Newman: If it will come into the Essex county area, I think it is good and I will commend the minister for it.

I would even suggest to the Premier, now that he is here, that he extend the junior forest ranger programme right into the cities and have junior forest rangers associated with the parks department, so that these youngsters could, under the guidance and direction of some parks personnel, do almost exactly the same thing that they are doing up in the northern regions of the province.

The government could accommodate the youngsters and develop a lot of new skills and thereby develop attitudes in these youngsters—the types of attitudes that we want them to have. We do not want them to be bitter at all. They are stating that government is not able to come along and provide the opportunities for jobs.

I could also mention to the government that the tourist reception centre now on Huron line is closed. For heaven's sake, why do we not open it and employ some of our university students, if not on a full-time basis at least have it open on a weekend basis in the off season? Let us employ half a dozen young university ladies taking care of the tourist reception centre and providing information to the many people who pass through our area on their way to other reaches inside the province.

The building cost approximately $100,000 to build and it is only staying there. All during the winter months and weekends we have tourists coming in, wanting to go to various ski areas in the province and having no place—once they get off the bridge—to find where they could actually go and be accommodated. Back in 1959 the government fought a campaign on building a provincial public building. Now is the time, when there is a surplus of labour, to consider the centralization of all of the offices in the Windsor area by constructing that building and providing needed employment.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I would like to conclude my remarks by bringing to the attention of the government something that to me is probably a more serious way of looking at unemployment. Now that we are confronted with large numbers of unemployed, is it not about time that we took a second look at our export-import picture? We should now be looking into the matter of labour content or man-hours principle. If we are going to make it fair to all concerned, should we not be looking beyond the idea of wage parity and think now of labour content parity?

If we are to develop our Canadian economy and provide employment for our ever increasing population we must go beyond the dollar value of our exports and imports. We will never be able to provide increased employment opportunities if we export products that require little labour application while we import high labour content products.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain there must be a greater concern shown to the export-import job opportunities, rather than seeing our balance of trade being solely expressed in dollars and cents. Our balance of trade statistics should also reflect and include our job opportunity position. Since we have the natural resources that are needed by many nations in this world, and since the world's greatest gobble of natural resources is our best customer—that is, the United States—should we not include in our negotiations both the dollar value of the goods we export to them and the labour content required to produce these exports, and permit an import from them of equivalent dollar value and equivalent labour content? Our economists can arrive at some formula that would be fair to all parties involved in this quest for world trade.

Mr. Speaker, I more than likely have spoken a little too long. I could extend my comments in many other fields, but as the estimates of the various departments come down in this House, I will, at that time, make further comments.

I would like to close, Mr. Speaker, by bringing to the attention of the House just this one little item. Here we have a nylon washer that could be stamped out by the millions. A nylon washer, very, very simple—yet it cost 55 cents. Surely somebody is being really taken here on an article like that? Thank you very much.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): What is that again?

Mr. B. Newman: A nylon washer—55 cents.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Would the member send that across to me for a minute?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to get into the main import of my address because of the lateness of the time. If you wish me to—

Mr. Speaker: I was just wondering, because Mr. Speaker's list indicates that the member for Kent (Mr. Spence) was the next speaker on the list. I was just discussing it with him, but he agrees to have the hon. member for Thunder Bay carry on.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): The member is only going to speak six minutes.

Mr. Stokes: First I would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and your deputies for the worthwhile contribution you both have made to the proceedings in the House, and hope that you will continue to perform that function as you have in the past.

I did want to make a few brief comments, Mr. Speaker, on the Speech from the Throne as it affects northern Ontario. I am happy to see the Premier (Mr. Davis) in his seat because, not being a very frequent visitor to the part of the province that I happen to represent, I am sure that some of my comments will be of interest to him. I hope that he will take them into consideration when he is formulating future plans for his government for whatever length of time is available to him.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! If the hon. Prime Minister or any minister wishes to engage in the debate he will at least please be in his own seat.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The Premier must consider himself told off.

Mr. Stokes: The Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, was a 16-page document outlining the programme in response to the requirements of life in Ontario during the 1970s. It is stated that the ministry will listen closely to the problems of the people and will act swiftly to resolve them.

What evidence was there, Mr. Speaker, that this government understood the needs and the aspirations of the north? Two paragraphs were devoted to the need for action in this 16-page document. One was:

Existing regulations and standards of the Northern Ontario Development Corporation are being revised so that the assistance will be more readily available to small Canadian-owned businesses and to certain segments of our service industry. A programme of immediate assistance has been launched to improve or re-locate tourist establishments.

Number two:

A new Department of Transportation and Communication will be created to take on the former responsibilities of The Department of Highways and Transport. An immediate function of the new department will be to undertake a review of the cost of transportation of goods in and out of northern Ontario.

What will these announcements mean to the communities which go to make up the northern portion of our province? Is the study which was commissioned by The Department of Treasury and Economics and announced at Lakehead University last October 13, to be shelved? This study was conducted by Mr. Wilbur Smith and is already in the hands of the government. But the government insists on having another study to study the study.

Design for Development for northwestern Ontario, Mr. Speaker, reflected the aims and aspirations of our people because it was formulated in consort with them and, in particular, with the capable assistance of the Northwestern Ontario Development Council. The reaction to phase 2 was positive and constructive and presented an excellent plan for immediate action on the part of the provincial government. It was not even mentioned in the Throne Speech.

I find this very disturbing, Mr. Speaker, when one considers that, of the 10 economic regions, across the province, only two have progressed to the phase 2 stage. One is the Toronto-centred region and the other is our own in northwestern Ontario. Yet, there was no mention in the Throne Speech.

I believe it is fair to say that our Northwestern Ontario Development Council and northwestern Ontario joint chambers of commerce have worked arduously and in a very responsible and positive way to focus attention on the needs of our citizens in northern Ontario. I personally have taken advantage of every opportunity to define the problems and to offer concrete and constructive proposals for government consideration and action.

Where have we failed? I do not think we have been negative in our approach. No one realizes better than we ourselves the huge treasure of natural and human resources that we possess in northwestern Ontario. No one has worked more diligently to extol the advantages and virtues of life in the north. Granted there is a dire need for expanded health services and facilities to many isolated communities. Granted there is a need for better educational opportunity for our youth, but surely all of these things are possible, if the orderly development of our natural resources is managed in a fashion and in a way that will bring maximum return and benefit to our people in the north.

As has been pointed out to you on previous occasions, six out of every 10 jobs in the forest industries are located in southern Ontario. This was made evident by the Hedlin-Menzies report commissioned by the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle). Four out of every 10 jobs are located in the north where the greatest percentage of our forest resources are found. If these figures were simply reversed, it would mean an additional 50,000 job opportunities in northern Ontario.

If processing of our mineral wealth were to take place in northern Ontario this too would provide many thousands of jobs in this area.

A report released just a few days ago by The Department of Mines and Northern Affairs—I am sorry the minister is not in the House now—revealed that the total value of mineral production in Ontario for 1970 was $1.6 billion.

It is ironical, Mr. Speaker, that the communities in northern Ontario which are facing the greatest difficulty are those which owe their existence to the mining industry.

I have often heard it said that the problems facing northern communities are insurmountable and that we should let them die. I am not prepared to accept that point of view.

There is not an area on the face of this earth that has been so richly endowed with such wealth and such potential. I am not aware of any other place which offers clean air and water in such abundance. I am not aware of any other area which offers such a variety of interests and attractions to the ever-increasing number of tourists seeking respite from the asphalt jungle.

So I say to those who have resigned themselves to the "conventional wisdom" that we will always be a have-not part of the province and a have-not part of this country: "Move over and make way for those of us who wish to be rid of the tab 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.'"

We have the potential to fashion a life style which will be the envy of all, and I am sure that we are dedicated to the task of providing a living condition which will ensure all our people equal opportunity and freedom from want.

However, it is not sufficient simply to lament or criticize. This will accomplish nothing. We must be constructive, we must be positive and, above all we must be unified in our efforts. It is not simply a matter of groups of people coming together to share each others' problems. It is much more than that.

It is not enough to study and restudy, to survey and resurvey the problems of the north. We must commit ourselves to the task of establishing our own priorities, formulating a plan of action, and move forward together with the resolve to fashion a way of life that our children and their children will thank us for.

Mr. Stokes moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the hon. member for Thunder Bay resumes his speech, he might permit me a moment to announce that we have a group of 40 people in Mr. Speaker's gallery who are the Business and Professional Women's Club from Hamilton.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE (Concluded)

Mr. J. E. Stokes: (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I saw the group to which you referred in the company of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Pritchard). I am sure she would like me to remind the House that they are friends of hers and we all welcome them to the gallery.

I think that it is also appropriate, Mr. Speaker, that I should be speaking on behalf of perhaps the newest and the least developed portion of Ontario—I speak especially of the northern part of Ontario, and in particular northwestern Ontario—at a time when we have a lot of young people representing the Boy Scouts of Canada in both galleries. I think it is appropriate that they should be here when someone in the Legislature is speaking of the great potential that we have in both human and material resources in this province yet undeveloped, and just crying out for the kind of governmental action that will bring people from that area into the mainstream of economic, social and cultural life of this province.

Just before the break, Mr. Speaker, I was speaking about this potential and about the Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region, Phase 2 and how hard and how dedicatedly the people of northern Ontario worked in making the government and The Department of Treasury and Economics aware of the potential and what their aspirations were and what solutions we felt were available to this government in order to achieve and accomplish those ends.

I would like to refer briefly, Mr. Speaker, to a critique of the Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region, Phase 2 by the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce. All through this critique, it highlights the need for attention to the exorbitant costs of transporting goods in and out of northwestern Ontario.

We have a wonderful plan in the Design for Development, but I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that none of the aspirations and goals are going to be realized until both the provincial and the federal governments come up with a comprehensive and a realistic freight rate structure and transportation system that will allow us, and particularly the people of northern Ontario, to develop that tremendous human and material potential that we have waiting for us and bestowed upon us by such a—

An hon. member: Tories will not do it.

Mr. Stokes: —benevolent providence.

It is very important that this government realize that nothing will happen in that part of the province unless governments take the kind of action that is necessary to do away with the many things, such as the high cost of transportation, which mitigate against the kind of development that is so badly needed.

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, when one considers that all of the entrepreneurs up there have been faced with as much as a 50 per cent increase in freight rates over the past four years. Governments from time immemorial have been telling us that because of our geographic location and our great distance from markets, it is almost impossible for us to enjoy the same standard of living, the same level of income and the same equality of opportunity enjoyed by people in other areas of the province and the country. We from northern Ontario do not buy this.

As I said earlier, northern Ontario is the repository for some of the greatest mineral and forest wealth anywhere on the face of the earth. And yet, when one considers the plight of many communities that are slowly dying for want of a viable economic base, for want of the kind of development of secondary industry that is so necessary to bring that area of the province into the economic mainstream, it is not going to happen by accident. It is going to happen when this government, or some other government, dedicates itself to the task of using all the technical expertise that we have available today and using what financial resources we have to develop that huge storehouse of resources for the benefit of the people who live there.

That area of the province contributes well in excess of $2 billion of new wealth annually. Unfortunately, very little of it remains there for the development of secondary industry for the providing of services of people who live in that area. And this government has done very little to accomplish that, certainly since I have been around in the political scene in the Province of Ontario.

There is so much to be done, Mr. Speaker, by way of organizing our affairs for the orderly exploitation of the resources by the complete rethinking of our forest management policies, our forest harvesting policies and our re-allocation of timber licences, where we have about 13 land barons who have effective control of all the timber resources that we have in this province; when we have small entrepreneurs who are just crying for sufficient resources of raw wood fibre in order to provide employment and some economic viability to communities that are slowly dying unless this government takes action.

I see the Minister of Education is in the House tonight, and I would like to draw his attention to the guidelines that his predecessor (Mr. Davis) invoked on school boards across the province. They may be legitimate guidelines in certain areas of the province; they may be legitimate in southern Ontario and in eastern Ontario. But I would like to suggest to the present Minister of Education that these guidelines are completely unrealistic in northern Ontario. If he thinks that the students—the children, the adults of tomorrow—from northwestern Ontario are going to enjoy equality of educational opportunity under those guidelines, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that he is deluding himself.

Hon. R. S. Welsh (Minister of Education): Those ceilings are weighted.

Mr. Stokes: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Welsh: Those ceilings are weighted.

Mr. Stokes: The minister would have a very difficult time convincing the people of northwestern Ontario that that is the case—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): One-tenth of a point.

Mr. Stokes: When the minister makes a statement like that—

Hon. Mr. Welch: They are treated differently from the south.

Mr. Stokes: Yes, worse.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No!

Mr. Stokes: Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker, that it costs 15 to 20 per cent more to acquire the services of a teacher in northwestern Ontario than it does in any other place in the province? Is the minister aware that the capital cost of building school and educational facilities is about 20 to 30 per cent more than it is in any other place in the province?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): He is aware of it but does not care.

Mr. Stokes: Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker, that we are taking children 120 miles a day by bus, round trip, to composite high schools in northwestern Ontario?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is the minister aware that the high school teachers are not fully qualified?

Mr. Stokes: Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of building schools runs anywhere from $7 to $8 per square foot more in northern Ontario than it does in southern Ontario?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: I am telling the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the teachers, the students and the trustees of the district school boards in northwestern Ontario tell me that the minister's guidelines are completely unrealistic. If he wants to provide quality of educational opportunity everywhere in this province, regardless of where people live, he had better take another and more realistic look at his guidelines.

Mr. Martel: He had better train the teachers equally too.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. members do not understand the guidelines as they apply to northern Ontario.

Mr. Stokes: The minister wants to suggest that to the trustees and those who sit on the board and to the high-priced help that we had—directors of education right down to administrators, principals, vice-principals and the teachers themselves. He should ask them how realistic the present guidelines are.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member can just find out what they are.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Speaker, because of the exigencies—

Mr. Martel: Does the minister know what they are?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Sure.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Speaker, because of the exigencies of time, I am not going to dwell too long on any one of these particular topics, but I do want to mention—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Ask the member for Peterborough.

Mr. Stokes: But I do want to mention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission has operated for—I do not know how many tens of years in this province. I see the vice-chairman just coming in to his seat now. Maybe he can enlighten me. But never in that time has northwestern Ontario ever had representation on that commission.

The Prime Minister made an announcement of a task force that has been set up to study all of the ramifications pertaining to the operation of Ontario Hydro. There again, nobody from northwestern Ontario was appointed to serve on that board.

The people of northwestern Ontario, Mr. Speaker, are getting just a little bit fed up with being ignored when any of these surveys are going on. When any of this consultation is going on it is in many cases without the knowledge of and without any consultation with our people.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are getting a little bit fed up. We demand equal time and we demand that we be recognized and that we be represented on these various boards.

An hon. member: You are getting more than your fair share now.

Mr. Stokes: I think that I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, with the complete support of 90 per cent of the people who live in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Pitman: That is the point.

Mr. Martel: Studded tires, for example.

Mr. Stokes: Just this afternoon I had hoped that I would get an opportunity to get up and ask the new Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) what he was doing about the representations made by one of his colleagues, the newly appointed Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier). I know that he got about four columns in a recent edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail for—

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): The hon. member will not get a thing.

Mr. Stokes: No, I probably will not. But if it will get any action, I do not mind spending a few moments talking about it.

Mr. Martel: What is the Minister of Mines going to do?

Mr. Stokes: But I think that 400,000 people in northern Ontario know the value of studded tires in this province—

Mr. Martel: Did the minister read the papers?

Mr. Stokes: Indeed, the new Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs knows it. For his own reasons he cannot get up in this House and say so, but I know that he feels just as strongly as I do. And I know that if he had a little bit more courage, he would stand up and echo the sentiments of the people—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: —he represents in Kenora riding and speak on behalf of retaining studded tires in northern Ontario where they are so badly needed.

An hon. member: Break now; come on.

Mr. Martel: Sit in the back row and—

Mr. Stokes: I will even give him time if he will take advantage of it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: One other thing that I would like to mention is the farm tax reduction programme that was instituted jointly by the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) and the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart). It is an excellent programme, Mr. Speaker, and I have advised every one of my constituents who are taxed under the farm assessment programme to take advantage of it, to cash it and to use it as they see fit. But it is very ironical—it has come to my mind and to my attention in the last couple of days that Domtar—

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Are they farmers?

Mr. Stokes: No, I would not think so.

An hon. member: They might have some horses.

Mr. Stokes: Domtar actually received a cheque on behalf of the farm tax reduction programme.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Don't tell me.

Mr. Stokes: They actually received a cheque.

Mr. Gaunt: What abuse!

Mr. Stokes: I know of one mining company, Mr. Speaker, that got an $800 cheque because the patented land that they hold tenure to is assessed as farm land.

So it helps some people but it helps an awful lot of people it was not designed to help at all.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It helps the farmers, the member knows that.

Mr. Stokes: All I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that when these programmes are thrown out by the province I think that they should be operated so they help the people they were meant to help—

Hon. Mr. Welch: It helps people who wanted it.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): That is who it helps.

Mr. Stokes: —not a lot of people who are just cashing in on expediency.

Mr. Speaker, I had made a commitment that I would not speak any more than 15 or 20 minutes and I am going to try to adhere to it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am for that.

Mr. Stokes: But I am going to suggest, through you Mr. Speaker, to this government that if they want to retain the little bit of support that they have in northern Ontario in the next election, they had better listen very carefully to any spokesman from northwestern and northeastern Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The man from Fort William.

Mr. Stokes: —because there is a move and a wave of disenchantment in northwestern and northeastern Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Look what happened in Fort William.

Mr. Stokes: —the likes of which this province has never seen.

Mr. Martel: Call the election.

Mr. Stokes: I am going to suggest to the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) that because of the negligence of his department and the policies enunciated by his department, we could have another member representing the New Democratic Party in Ontario in Cochrane North next time. The minister may have a little lead time, but not very much.

Mr. Jessiman: They had one; how about Ted Freeman.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: I can spend a considerable amount of time here speaking in more detail about the timber management policies of the department under this minister—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member is always negative. Let us be positive.

Mr. Stokes: I am not going to do it. I am giving the minister time to put his house in order.

Mr. Jessiman: Ted Freeman had lots of time.

Mr. Stokes: If I have to, Mr. Speaker, I will publicize just what is actually going on within that department to the detriment of development in northwestern Ontario.

I suggest to this House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we have the greatest—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He tries for the best of both worlds.

Mr. Stokes: —storehouse of human and material resources any place on the face of the earth. We have the people, we have the expertise, we have the will to get on with it—all we need is assistance by way of realistic, meaningful government programmes to give us the necessary impetus to get this thing going. I know that we have the resources to do it, the people in the north have the will to do it—if you do not believe me, ask the chamber of commerce, ask the Northwestern Ontario Development Council, ask any of those people—

Mr. Jessiman: Ask Ted Freeman.

Mr. Stokes:—including the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. Jessiman: Who replaced the NDP member?

Mr. Stokes: He is being a little bit hypocritical right now, Mr. Speaker, because when we talk about these things, about the needs and aspirations of northwestern Ontario, he agrees with me right down the line. But he lacks the intestinal fortitude to get up here where it really counts and say so.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Watch your blood pressure.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: I think, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allotted to me—

Mr. Pitman: You will not get him excited again, will you?

Mr. Stokes:—I have time to pinpoint the feelings of people in the area of the province that I represent. If this government thinks it deserves the support of the people in the next election it better start listening to people like the chamber of commerce, people like the Northwestern Ontario Development Council and people like myself, who speak on behalf of all the people in northwestern Ontario. If you look after human needs and human wants you will make that part of the province a better place to live. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): In rising to take part in this Throne debate, I wish to extend congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your kindness shown to me during your term of office, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, I wish you well.

I would like to extend—though he is not in his seat—congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) on being elected Prime Minister of this province, a position that very few men ever held. I know his task is no easy one. I know he will be called on to make many very important decisions, and I wish him well.

An hon. member: Not too well, but well enough.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex Kent): Even though we will short-term him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Let him make his own speech.

Mr. Spence: I wish to congratulate the hon. members who have been named to the cabinet since the last session. There have been seven. I know it is an honour to them; it is an honour to the ridings that they represent; and I wish them well. Also, to the other cabinet ministers who have been changed from portfolio to portfolio, I wish them well.

Mr. Speaker, I have said all the nice things. So now I will have to say something of a warning to them—

An hon. member: Not necessarily.

Mr. Spence:—because I will have to tell them that their term of office is going to be very short.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the government some of the things that concern and bewilder many citizens of the Province of Ontario. The people cannot understand why this government—which is one of the biggest institutions in this province—collects money from the taxpayers and turns round and rebates it back to the municipalities and to the individuals. What could be more inefficient and costly than this way of doing things?

Surely a government which has been in power for 26 or 27 years should have learned by now to handle things better than this? Why, if a housewife handled her money in this way, Mr. Speaker, even the most long-suffering husband would show her the door—and maybe that is what the long-suffering taxpayers will do at the next election.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Hear, hear. The poor husband and the poor taxpayer.

Mr. Spence: The farmers, in particular, feel that they are getting a very raw deal, and the public sees that when the money rolls into the Ontario Treasury it is spent, not always on essentials but on frills. I am not against sensible expenditures on education, Mr. Speaker; I want the best possible education for every boy and girl of this province. We all realize that a sound education system is a good investment for everyone. But, Mr. Speaker, people wonder when they have to scrimp and save to furnish expensive palaces that have nothing to do with the actual business of teaching and learning.

The government no longer asks, "What do we need?" Now it says, "This year we will take 30 per cent, or whatever, of the gross provincial product, one way or another, and when we see what this percentage brings in, then we will decide how to spend it." That is the way it is done today, Mr. Speaker.

My constituents have had just about enough of the present Ontario government's policy. I know that even many government back-benchers feel as I do, and they would speak out in a similar fashion if they dared. But they have to obey the whip, and so they stay silent.

It seems the civil service has got itself a good thing, with all these fragmented repayments on the go. Mr. Speaker, they will be the last ones to rock the boat. Unfortunately, too, some municipalities are now taking the easy way out and are starting to accept the idea of the basic shelter exemption as a fact of Ontario life. After all, this was intended to be only a temporary measure. The municipalities have become less vigilant in their initial demands than they otherwise might be. They know that if they set too high a mill rate, Queen's Park will come back with a bigger cheque. This does not make for good local government practices.

There are farmers in my area getting three or four different small cheques, but they are not fooled. They know that they were overtaxed in the first place. The old people are not fooled either. They were not born yesterday, in more senses than one.

When I go to my riding on the weekend, people say to me: "Well, John, what are they doing about high taxes?" Then I have to tell them that when we want to do something positive about costs, as in the human resources committee or the public accounts committee, we cannot even get to first base. Mr. Speaker, this government does not really want to get down to matters seriously, but only wants to do a little window dressing in preparation for the coming election.

How else can anyone explain the Premier's refusal to engage research staff for the service of the human resources committee—people quite independent of those who stand ready to defend their actions and their jobs—so that the committee can really look at the functions of education in relation to costs, and decide what is worthwhile and should be continued, and what is wasteful and should be scrapped?

Mr. Speaker, people all across the province can see for themselves that the Premier and his government are not really sincere in their promises to look into the great duplication and waste in our education system, and really have no honest intention of ensuring the taxpayer will get full value for his education tax dollar. Because of the government majority on the committee, the courage of one Conservative ready to speak his mind will have no effect. We must admire the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith). What he did on Tuesday afternoon was to put himself in a position where he could sleep nights with an easy conscience.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is more than the Liberals can do.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): They have an easy conscience but they are not going to sleep.

Mr. Gaunt: Uneasy lies the head—

Mr. Spence: I admire him for standing up for his convictions, but I have no doubt that he will pay the price in his position within the Conservative caucus. I hope he did not have any high hopes of becoming a cabinet minister in the near future.

Mr. Ruston: We will make him a Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Spence: I wish to congratulate him on seeing where the real values in this life are. Maybe he should not give up all hope of becoming a cabinet minister at that, because the Liberal Party of Ontario welcomes men with courage and integrity. As we shall be forming the next government, he should not give up the idea altogether. That is right; that is the kind of man we need.

In spite of all the setbacks caused by the negative attitude of the Premier, I know that my colleagues in the opposition will pursue the question of education costs in relation to benefits with all their might. They know their goals, and they have my backing all the way in their efforts to make the human resources committee an effective committee.

At the same time, I know the opposition members on the public accounts committee will get down to the real question of how last year's money was spent in relation to what the taxpayers got for it.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The member means "wasted".

Mr. Spence: They do not want to conduct a witch-hunt, like the late Senator McCarthy in the United States, but Ontario's McCarthy obviously leans in the other direction. How can he investigate his own department? How can he sit across the table from the people he has been working with for the past several years and be objective in studying what they have done and what they are doing?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): He is just going to be the executive officer.

Mr. Spence: Is that right? We have to do something a little better than that.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against Dr. McCarthy whatsoever, but I would say he is the wrong man for the job. He is too close to this whole question. What is needed is an inquiry under the direction of elected representatives from every party in this House. Such an all-party committee needs an adequate research staff to carry out the detailed research and give advice when it is necessary.

The government must demonstrate beyond a shadow of a doubt that it is sincere in the matter of selectively reducing education costs. It must reappportion the base of education taxes so that the property owner is relieved of this unfair burden. Then, maybe, we shall feel that this government is getting somewhere. If these things are not done, the government will never satisfy the people across the Province of Ontario that it is honestly trying to eliminate duplication and waste from our education system.

Reassessment is another disaster, Mr. Speaker. Some parts of Ontario are now reassessed at market value; others are not.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): It is one disaster after another.

Mr. Spence: I must say, Mr. Speaker, the mistakes that have been made in some of the assessment offices across this province concern me greatly. Every man is subject to making mistakes, but in the township in which I live, 15 farmers have not received their $25 tax rebate cheque as yet. One of the reasons is that the assessor who assessed those 15 farms assessed them as residential property. I wonder what is wrong with that assessor, Mr. Speaker, when one of the properties has 400 acres, has farm equipment and livestock, and yet is classed as a residential property. Another farm has 250 acres and is equipped with machinery and livestock, and another of 100 acres is classed as residential property.

We have contacted the assessment office and asked if anything could be done to change this back to farm property so that these people could get their $25 tax rebate cheques. It has been impossible so I have come to Toronto and called up The Department of Municipal Affairs. I am not critical of the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) because he has held that office just a very short time, but I must say that one of the officials told me that they could do nothing. There had to be an order-in-council passed. I must say that all the red tape here in order to correct a mistake is unbelievable to the average individual. If the man on the back concession of our county had a problem to solve and he did not have somebody to go to or was not familiar with Parliament, he would never get these things straightened out.

I do hope that this Prime Minister and this new cabinet will cut the red tape so that the average individual can understand how to correct a problem or how to improve conditions. I hope that is done because the red tape is getting so thick it is beyond the little man to do anything.

I must say to my colleague from Perth (Mr. Edighoffer), who said in the House a few days ago that the new assessment is completed in the riding of Perth and that this assessment is going to be kept secretly on file until after the next election, that it is unbelievable to hear statements like that here in the House—that they will not break out the new assessments until after a provincial election is called.

The government intends to hold a carrot in front of the electors of this province to coax them to vote for them and, then, after the election bring out this new assessment, which will be stunning and which will frighten the taxpayers of this province.

An hon. member: That is what you call a loaded carrot.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to escalate the war between Ontario and Quebec over the interprovincial trade in farm products, but I would not be fair to my constituents if I did not observe that the people in my area—for example, some egg producers, vegetable producers, cattle producers, hog producers—view these barriers with alarm. Any action to restrict trade between the provinces, Mr. Speaker, concerns many of us. They know they will be the losers in the long run and perhaps even in the short run. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) has been listening to a lobby of big producers who misguided him.

I must say Gordon Hill of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture should have taken a poll before embarking on an endorsement of restrictive policy between the provinces. They would have discovered that far from having 100 per cent support their membership would have been split 50-50. Those who can see a little further are opposed to restrictive legislation. Some of them are going to go to law about it while others will show their sentiments by voting against the government which brought this law into being.

Let us hope that there will be no retaliation from Quebec, because our agriculture industry—

Mr. Sargent: The government is tearing down Confederation.

Mr. Spence: —is already facing very great difficulties and problems at the present time.

It seems that we have the fastest regulator in the west at the corner of Bay and Bloor. Regulations for the broilers were in the Toronto Daily Star on Monday afternoon and in fact the Star had the text over the weekend.

So you see, this government can move fast when it wants to. The pity is that we move in the wrong direction and it will have to be undone, if not by the Supreme Court of Canada, then by way of repeal when we form the government. Liberals believe in free trade across the provinces. It is just as simple as that.

What a situation we have now. The income of many of my constituents is liable to be cut as the market for their produce is cut off as a retaliatory measure. Meanwhile their taxes will continue to go up in all proportion as re-assessment proceeds. Their hard-earned money is to be used to pay education costs which the elected representatives of the people are not permitted to examine in any constructive or objective way.

Finally, with their incomes reduced and their taxes increased they will be given rebate cheques and the government will expect them to applaud.

At the same time, over here in the gleaming new office buildings at Queen's Park—

Mr. Sargent: Better than the Taj Mahal.

Mr. Spence: —floor after floor of expensive offices will be filled with civil servants employed to send out these cheques.

Mr. Sargent: I just picked it up at my office last night.

Mr. Spence: In fact, more people will be working at sending the taxpayers' money back to them than are needed by the provincial government to collect the money in the first place, because some of the taxes are collected by the federal government and some by the municipalities. The money goes round and round, and sometimes some of us do not know where it goes.

If the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) had become Premier of this province all this would have been different. He told us himself that: "No one department should receive 41 per cent of the budget." He also said—

Mr. W. G. Pitman: There is an idea.

Mr. Spence: —"Winning is just the beginning," and to turn this around, "Losing is just the end," the end of our hopes that this government will relate education costs to functions and to the earning power of the people of Ontario.

The only hope, Mr. Speaker, is the old saying: "A new broom sweeps clean," and we in this party are just the people to do the sweeping.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, that comes as a surprise. We usually have one or two of the opposition speak before we call on two of one party.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): No interest shown.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Two for one.

Mr. Bukator: One thing about it, I am always prepared. My speeches in this House are not hard to make, because I have been here a long time.

I prepared an exceptionally good speech for this evening and then I left it at home when I came in from the Falls. This morning when I left home I forgot to pick it up and bring it with me, so you will have to contend with me this evening by way of—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Off the cuff.

Mr. Bukator: —speaking to you about the things that I believe are right and wrong with this government.

First of all, I would like to say how pleased I am to see these young page girls that we have with us during this session. They have done an excellent job for us and I want to say to whoever is responsible for having them here, I am very pleased with them. They are doing a good job and I hope the education that they get here with the members will help them in the paths of life. And by the time they are 21 years of age, I know how they are going to vote. They are intelligent young people, and that way we know we will have them in our party.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bukator: I say nothing for the boys because they have always served us well and it is nice to see them doing such a fine job for us. We do appreciate it.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): The girls are going to vote for us.

An hon. member: Two votes is all they are going to get.

Mr. Brown: You cannot blame them.

Mr. Bukator: I can say one thing for the member for, where is it—

Mr. Gilbertson: Algoma.

Mr. Bukator:—Algoma, he is a very optimistic gentleman, and that way you can stay in the game a little longer, at least until the coming election.

Mr. Speaker, many things have passed through my mind in the last few weeks. I look at the shuffle in the cabinet and I see the ministers who were not fortunate enough to become cabinet ministers getting to be Ministers without Portfolio.

Mr. Sargent: Even the back-benchers are cabinet ministers now.

Mr. Bukator: I think the government has made another mistake when it did not honour the only lady in the party with a high office.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Bukator: This lady, in my opinion, has served her party well.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear, Mrs. Pritchard.

Mr. Bukator: It may be that she supported the wrong one in the leadership convention. That does make a difference, you know.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): She picked the wrong horse there.

Mr. Bukator: Anyway, I want the member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Pritchard), to know that we, in our party, are with her. We respect her for the job she has done in this House for the period of time she has been here.

It seems that you start out complimenting people, and then you lower the boom. I was going to start at seat number one, the former Prime Minister of the Province of Ontario, (Mr. Robarts), and I would like to make this distinction. I was told that the Prime Minister is the man who is the leader of the federal government and the Premiers are the leaders of the provinces. When Mr. Robarts was asked how he came by that title, he said that when he moved into the office of the Premier of this province, on the door it said "Prime Minister", so he accepted that. That is how he became the Prime Minister of the Province of Ontario. Somebody put the name on the door.

I would say, too, watching him all the years that he was here and Minister of Education before becoming Prime Minister, he served the province exceptionally well. I want that to go on the record. I have respect for this man for the time that he has served and the job that he has done for this province.

Mr. Sargent: Do not lay it on too much.

Mr. Bukator: I will tell you how brilliant and intelligent this man was: He knew that someone was going to lower the boom on him and he quit before he was fired. He said, "I am not going to be defeated. I am riding the crest of the wave." Nobody sits on a pedestal in politics. They were riding the crest of the wave; he knew it would crumble and the thing would fall and that he might drown with his party. So he moved out and he has now become one of the most prominent and capable politicians in the Province of Ontario. Who knows, he may even go to the federal House.

He was a great man. He has supported Confederation and worked hard to bring this party together, but is it not remarkable how quickly those people in the government now have torn the thing apart. With this farm bill alone, they have now balkanized, as my friend from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) says, the Province of Ontario. We are going to have divisions of a type that this country has never seen before, because the people of Canada now cannot trade with each other without having to contend with each other's laws.

Mr. Sargent: Barriers all over—for every commodity.

Mr. Bukator: And so the people will have to make a choice in the very near future about the Premier (Mr. Davis) and his new government—and I am sorry that the new Premier is not here. I watched the convention with interest and how close he came to being beaten by an individual who had no right to win that leadership at all. He was a rebel, a maverick, in that party. They finally made him Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) and then he contested. I watched with interest until all hours of the morning and noted how well he conducted himself with his pleasant smile, and I thought, "My goodness, I would have voted for him myself." He would have been another—who was the fellow who took over for us in 1934?

Mr. Gaunt: Mitch Hepburn.

Mr. Bukator: It struck me that he could have been another Mitch Hepburn. And that would have been good for the province, because it is about time some of the oldtimers with their old methods were put out of office. Not that we have anything against them individually, but the ideas they carry though in this modern day and age are not fitting to this particular way of life. They have come to the place in this game where they have forgotten that they are dealing with people, dealing in the 1970s rather than the 1930s and 1940s. There are some of them in this particular House right now who were elected back in 1943 and even before that. Their ideas have not changed a bit.

So this is what the people have to contend and wrestle with—consult their consciences, if you will, in the next provincial election and look over the possibility of whether they want to go to these radical socialists to the left. I am sorry that I only have three or four to deal with.

An hon. member: What a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Sargent: That is all they will have the next time too. They will be lucky if they get five next time.

Mr. Bukator: Can you imagine, with what few they have here in the House, there is only one millionaire in this crowd of five. He could conduct some of their affairs, I believe, because he knows something about free enterprise and yet he claims he is a socialist. I do not know how the man could become a millionarie in the free enterprise system and still believe in socialism. I cannot understand it.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): It might interest the member to know that we are for free enterprise.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: But we do not believe in socialism for the rich!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): This is the waffle, waffle talking.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, I wish they were all in their places this evening.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bukator: I wish they were all in this place this evening. I would like to give them a portfolio—make them the ministers of the different departments and put in their hands the industries, the resources of this country, and let them administer the affairs of this province and see what they would do to us. It would take another century to put the show back on the road again, as my colleague from Owen Sound says.

Can you imagine putting the wealth of this country into the hands of a gang of people who would run it in their own way—take it or leave it, the industry will stay here. The wages people will get will be a certain amount and all things will be done by this small handful of people who cannot run their own affairs properly.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): They would fire all the civil servants.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): He did not say that.

Mr. Bukator: Oh, yes, if the civil servants do not become socialists immediately they will all be fired.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What did these fellows say about patronage this afternoon?

Mr. Bukator: I will say something about that. I do not believe the people on the government side of the House are right. What business have they got feathering the nests of their political friends?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Terrible.

Mr. Bukator: Now getting down to the facts of the province—the ministers and the affairs of the province: the minister who interjected was the Minister of Prisons and Reforms at one time.

An hon. member: Correctional Services.

Mr. Bukator: That was after that. First it was Prisons and Reforms, then it was Correctional Institutions. He came into the county of Welland. They decided they would have a form of regional government before they had regional government and the county of Lincoln and the county of Welland would have one beautiful big prison block where all the prisoners would be treated properly and this fine establishment would be built. I was invited to this lovely dinner—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member is thinking of the federal government. It puts up prisons; we put up correctional institutions.

Mr. Bukator: We decided in St. Catharines to get together and this minister came down with a pocketful of pens like the President of the United States. He signed a contract with those two counties that now the government would take over and would build a lovely new jail-house and a new county building of the type of which we would be pleased. So I applauded him, and everybody did. As a matter of fact, I thought I would get my picture in the paper with him but because I was from the opposition I had to stand on the side while the minister and the authorities shook hands. I said to myself, "This is fine; at least they gave me a lovely dinner." So, remembering this particular process within the last week I received a letter from this great hockey player, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps), "We are coming to your part of the country in the next week and we would like you to be our guest because we are going to build a new court house for you." This is three years later—I wonder why this would happen at this time.

Mr. Sargent: We have not got any in Owen Sound. The former minister promised one in Owen Sound. They are still talking about it.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, I am going to interrupt while they are butting in—it would take me all night to say what I have to say. So, as I said, the Minister of Correctional Services, a fine gentleman, has invited me to a second—the first one, I guess, must have been the dress rehearsal.

An hon. member: He has a healthy appetite.

Mr. Bukator: Now we are going to get this new building, and I thought there must be an election coming up. However, I understand they are going to turn the sod and they almost have the plans complete. I hope this time this fellow is a little more broad-minded than the former minister and he might have me in that picture at least, so that if the building is ever built they will say they have the member of the opposition who assisted them. Because when I was on county council, back in 1949, 1950 or 1951, we were talking about the obsolete old jails in those two counties, and they should have then been rebuilt. And we came down here to Rev. Foote, I believe it was, who was then the Minister of Reform Institutions—they are changing these titles so fast I cannot remember them all; it was the same job but with a different name.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Sounds like the NDP.

Mr. Bukator: It did not happen under the previous administration and maybe the new minister will provide this for us. And before it happens, in case it does, I say thanks to that fine gentleman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One is ready to open in two weeks.

Mr. Bukator: Very good, but not the ones we were talking about for three or four years.

Mr. Sargent: How many did the former minister build?

Mr. Bukator: The vice-chairman of Hydro has just left and I want to talk to him about some of the problems that we have to wrestle with in the Province of Ontario in connection with Hydro—the Hydro employees, the pensioners of that particular institution who have worked here so long and so well for small amounts of money and have finally set aside a little money for pension. I understand, if I were to look into the records, that there are millions of dollars in the pension fund. I was hoping that the vice-chairman would be in his place tonight and I could persuade him to finally get on his feet and say—

Mr. Sargent: He is driving home in a big black Cadillac.

Mr. Bukator: There is always a black car sitting out in front of the building to take him there. I understand at the Royal York Hotel they have one at the front door and one at the side, because he has so many problems to contend with and wrestle with that he does not remember what door he goes out of and they do not want to miss him. They have a car waiting for him to bring him back to the Parliament buildings and at this time of night they will take him back down again. All I am asking him to do is forget about the cars; I think he is entitled to them. I think he is entitled to the extra money he is getting for being vice-chairman of Hydro.

Mr. Sargent: He is not.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): If there are any fewer members over there, there will not be enough jobs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: Would it not be nice if they would consider the pensioners and give them just a little bit more money to maintain themselves?

Mr. Stokes: Some of those water rentals?

Mr. Bukator: Water rentals are things that I could talk about for hours, but I feel as the speaker for the NDP did, that 20 minutes is not too long to touch all of the bases. I will leave that for another time. I will give you all the facts and figures on how we are being taken on the Niagara Peninsula, but not tonight.

Mr. Stokes: I have some idea myself.

Mr. Bukator: I would think that on the one item only, the Hydro should consider increasing the pensions of the men who served them so well for so many years. The money is there, the millions are in their funds and they ought to increase their pensions because in this day and age people are not better off on fixed incomes. People who are on pensions just cannot maintain themselves with the way prices of everything have gone up, especially the increased taxes for school purposes. School costs have increased so much in the last year or two, and over the last five or six years, and there is no let up. They have finally come to the point where they are going to restrict the spending of the school boards because they know they have gone too far beyond their budgets and they cannot continue to maintain themselves.

The school boards which we had in some areas of the county were good. Half of the counties had boards which represented both high schools and public schools and they served their people well. They were elected to those offices and they did an exceptionally good job.

However, the Minister of Education, the present Premier of the province, decided we would have county systems regardless whether we wanted them or not. They had representations before the committee asking, "Please, leave well enough alone. We are doing well, we are quite content with our boards."

The proof was there that they were doing a good job. But, no, the minister says, "We will try the county system." And the school costs increased so badly that no one could maintain themselves, especially people on fixed incomes and pensions. This is another problem they have to wrestle with.

You know, if the NDP or the Liberals had been in power for any length of time doing some of these things that are wrong, you could blame us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Spence: That is right.

Mr. Bukator: Who has been running the government's affairs for the last 28 years—

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Nobody.

Mr. Bukator: —but the Conservatives themselves? If there have been increases and if there have been faults—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): By the choice of the people.

Mr. Bukator: It is the people on the right hand of the Speaker who have forgotten the people they represent. They have become not individuals who serve the people or stewards for the people, but they have become somewhat of a prince or a king in a kingdom where they run the affairs of the province as though they were their own.

I come to the man who has caused more grief for the Province of Ontario than any individual I have met in this House since 1959. That is the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough).

He put it so badly in debt—

Mr. Sargent: A hell of a mess!

Mr. Bukator: —and he has taken regional government and imposed it in four or five areas. He said these things would work because he was told by his experts; and he would not interfere with the way the province's affairs were run in these regions, because once they were elected they could run the show.

I recall a meeting in St. Catharines with the judges and the magistrates and the Ontario Provincial Police and the local police. We talked about the police question for a long time. I said, Mr. Speaker, at that time to the former Attorney General (Mr. Wishart)—who is also not in his seat; you know I like talking to empty chairs because they do not talk back. You can say what you like and they do not come back at you and say: "You are wrong."

But the former Attorney General, for whom I have a lot of respect, was at that meeting that evening. I said, "Mr. Attorney General, tell us if you are going to give us regional type of policing, if the townships and the villages and the towns and cities would have policing equal to what they have in the city, it will cost more money. The city of Niagara Falls would have to have another 18 policemen and five more cars."

I remember the former Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch)—as he is leaving the House—saying to me that it was utter nonsense on the radio; I did not know what I was talking about. The member for Niagara Falls did not. I said it will cost money, and the members know what it has cost in the last five years; just look back—

An hon member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bukator: —look back and see what the increases are. Then project the thinking; who knows, maybe the people of my village will pay another three, four, five mills on a $5,000 assessment; it is only $25 but I want it.

The Attorney General says we will not inform these men how they should run their affairs. They are intelligent people and they can run them; we are not projecting. It is a good thing he did not.

Last year the cost to that region, of what the Minister of Education, the hon. member for St. Catharines, said was the greatest thing that ever came out of Queen's Park and was going to be the finest thing that they ever had—the increase alone for tying the police systems together was an additional million. There were $350,000 more to be picked up by the taxpayer. So the former Minister of Municipal Affairs came down there with a beautiful car and a lot of support. No doubt, the Minister of Education was there when he gave them $350,000 last year to help with the police and said, "This is what is going to help you over the hill."

What happens this year? Who is going to pick up the tab for $350,000? Because the costs are still there. So I say to the government—

Mr. Sargent: The taxpayers should sue them; that is what they should do.

Mr. Bukator: Finally, we watch this leadership convention and we see the former Minister of Municipal Affairs walk across the floor and say to the present Prime Minister, "I am for you; I am going to support you." The first thing we know he is sitting on the right-hand side or the left-hand side of the Premier and becomes the provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Worton: Misery loves misery.

Mr. Bukator: If he does not do any better with that job than he did with regional government, and if he does not do better with that job than he did with provincial assessment—I tell members that the people of his own riding—I happen to have, by accident, a clipping in my hand. It is strange how it got into my desk: Regionalism: Newkirk Roasts It; McKeough Backs It.

The Treasurer will back it until the next provincial election and then when the government goes to the hustings to talk to the people about its stewardship, it is going to be defeated. We see it all over the Province of Ontario.

I said to the former Premier of the province, "We do not have to beat you. The things that you do and the way that you handle the affairs of the people of the Province of Ontario are the things that you will be governed by. When the people see what you have done that is wrong, they are not going to vote for us because they like us; they are going to vote against you because they do not like what you do. That is the way you are going to be defeated in the next provincial election."

I only wish I had four or five more hours—

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): That is a negative attitude.

Mr. Bukator: It is nice to hear from the member for Frontenac-Addington away back there. I have lost track of this former Minister of Energy and Resources Management who had no energy.

Mr. Sargent: He was Public Works.

Mr. Bukator: He now has no energy and resources.

Mr. Simonett: I have no resources; I have energy, yes.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, he has the northwest—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: From what I hear, his resources are not too bad either.

Mr. Bukator: I wish those people would quit butting in while I am talking.

Mr. Simonett: Surely the hon. member does not mean that.

Mr. Bukator: I have never known a nicer fellow. I hope that when the geese are running well next fall up in Moosonee that the member for Frontenac-Addington will arrange for the Liberals to go up and get a shot at those because he now owns the Ontario Northland Railway, I believe—or he is second in command—so I hope he will arrange for a trip for us to get in a bit of Canada geese.

Mr. Stokes: Does the member want the use of the private car too?

Mr. Bukator: Would that not be nice?

An hon. member: Do they have one?

Another hon. member: That would be a dead end for the member for Frontenac-Addington.

Mr. Sargent: The "Simonett Special."

Mr. Bukator: I wanted to touch on so many things, but I was told that the government is trying to get through the debate this evening and would like us to cut it short so we can be on our way by four in the morning at least. I do not have too many ministers to pick on; there are not too many in the House to pick on.

I might say, while I look the crowd over, it is an exceptionally nice thing to see a man who sticks by his convictions. I remember one of the Conservative members who walked up and down the halls and many of his fellow members did not even speak to him because he took a stand on the health problem. A fine gentleman, the member for Quinte (Mr. Potter).

I watched the shuffle in the cabinet and what had taken place, and I said, "There is a gentleman who is entitled to the little bit of a break that he got." The member for Quinte is going to serve us well. Thank you very much.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands came in, how nice it was to get that invitation from him to go and turn the sod of this jail that was supposed to have been opened three years ago by the then minister. I am looking forward to the turning of the sod in a very few days.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do not let him get into the picture.

Mr. Bukator: I wanted to get in the picture, but he cut me off.

Gentlemen, this is a serious business. I have made many friends since I came into the Legislature in 1959. I know that there is not a man in this House who does not want to do what is right by his position and the people he represents. I believe that if we were in that position that they are in, we would do it a little different.

Right or wrong, I think we have some plans we could put into effect that the people would appreciate, because I think we in the opposition, who deal at the grass roots and hear the problems of the voters—and I think they are listening to us; we have listened to them—the day may come that we will be sitting on that side of the House. And I hope then when we get to that position, we will not treat them any rougher than they have treated me for the last 12 years.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I thought this evening I would take a few minutes to review the state of the situation for emotionally disturbed children in the province since that was the major reason that turned me to politics and brought me to the Legislature some four years ago.

On April 1, 1971, The Department of Health put into effect The Children's Mental Health Centres Act, which provided regulations and licensed some 19 centres in the province. This Act covers 950 children who were previously covered either by the parents, by Children's Aid Societies or various other departments of government.

I would like to compliment the government on this Act. There was a time when many people thought the Act was designed primarily to drive the Browndale organization out of existence. As it turns out, I supported the Act from the very beginning. The province has needed such an Act.

The revisions and amendments that were made to the Act prior to its actual passing were all good. I think the Act stands as a monument to the province. I am very impressed with the children's division of The Department of Health that has been established and the manner in which they have gone about setting up the regulations and introducing the programme.

I do need to point out, however, that the Act, the regulations, the licensing that went on—good as they are—did not create any new beds for emotionally disturbed children. That does not in any way detract from what has been done. It simply points out the fact that after waiting some eight or 10 years for increased and improved services to emotionally disturbed children, we still have to wait some more. The Act simply licensed those services that were already providing for children.

There is an anticipation in the community and in the child-placing agencies for additional beds. There was the dream and the hope that the problem and the burden of emotionally disturbed children being carried by Children's Aid Societies and other welfare groups would be ended when the Act came into being. The fact of the matter is the problem has not been solved. As so often happens when we sit down and begin to do a serious job about one of our social problems, we discovered that we were only seeing the top of the iceberg and that the one good thing we did to tackle the problem impresses us with the fact that there is so much more yet to do; and so it is with The Children's Mental Health Centres Act.

First, it is not providing enough beds at the present time. For some $14 million or $14.5 million, 950 children are going to be served in the Province of Ontario. We have somewhere in the neighbourhood of 250,000 children who need to be served. One per cent of that 250,000 is seriously disturbed children who require intensive facilities. We are going to have to find more money. The Treasury Board is going to have to find a way to see the relevance and importance of services to these children.

I know it was a great struggle for them to come up with the $14 million. The Act was supposed to come in last fall and it took until April 1 before it was finally brought into effect. But when we look at the priorities, when we look at the expenditures of government, surely we can find more than $14.5 million to put into this important work?

One of the problems that comes as a result of beginning to tackle the problem of emotionally disturbed children—one of the byproducts of this new Act—is the fact that we begin to see some of the miscalculations, or some of the foolish moves, that were taken in the past. I will just take a moment to talk about the area where the largest number of unserved, emotionally disturbed children exists at the present time in the province.

In The Department of Reform Institutions—where some 20 to 50 per cent of the children are emotionally disturbed—somehow, either by policy or by ignorance, children were placed under the jurisdiction of that department when they should have been more appropriately placed either in welfare or health, or in my preference The Department of Education. The fact of the matter is the government is now doing a very thorough and proper job for emotionally disturbed children, but it is not reaching children who are under The Department of Reform Institutions.

Either The Department of Health, children's division, should have jurisdiction over the emotionally disturbed children in that department, or that department should quickly move to collaborate with this new children's division to set up proper services within its jurisdiction. I think one of the reasons why the reform institutions were allowed to collect such a large number of disturbed children, was primarily because of some bad professional advice.

There was a thought that operant conditioning—a technique that has been discarded in many jurisdictions of the world but was introduced in Ontario at a time when it was being withdrawn in other centres—there was advice from people who practise operant conditioning that these children could be served in reform institutions even though they were seriously emotionally disturbed.

Operant conditioning is a method which was developed by the rat psychologist a number of years ago. Essentially it says you reward desirable and good behaviour and you punish bad behaviour. By itself it is not necessarily bad. Most parents and families use this method in their own, untechnical way in the raising of their children, and it does work.

Unfortunately, reduced to a method, applied to an institution, used by people who do not understand it and who do not have relationships with children, it can become a dangerous tool. As practised in reform institutions, it is a very seriously dangerous tool to be used on young children who have no choice of whether they have it applied to them or not.

In those parts of The Department of Health which practise operant conditioning in the mental hospitals for the adults—there are unfortunately some children still there—and in the Ontario schools for retarded children where it is still used, it is also a dangerous tool. The danger comes in that people do not understand the dynamics of how it works and why it works and what they have to put into it themselves. There is not proper supervision of it.

I would suggest to the ministers responsible that they immediately investigate the use of operant conditioning in their departments; not with an idea of necessarily stopping it, not with an idea of necessarily having heads roll, but with an idea of bringing a tool that might be useful into proper use. These people should not be meddling around with techniques they are incapable of handling.

The social agency in the province that carried the greatest burden for emotionally disturbed children prior to this Act was, of course, the Children's Aid Society. They struggled with it, they tried to get financing for it, they suffered the burdens of attack from budget departments of local municipalities, of the provincial government, The Department of Social and Family Services; and generally they were struggling in an uphill battle to find some way to provide resources for the children they were charged to be responsible for.

I would like to say, as I have said on other occasions when I talked of the Children's Aid Societies, that we in the Legislature must recognize that we ask the people in these agencies to carry on the parental conduct, supervision and guidance of children who are orphans or whose own natural parents cannot do it, on behalf of society, on our behalf. We give them that heavy burden of responsibility, and time and time again we fail to provide them with the means to carry it out in the manner that we would like to do if we were left in charge of that onerous responsibility.

Now the burden of disturbed children has been taken from them. The agencies, in a natural way, are feeling a little lost. They need to be understood; that something they struggled for and fought for has now been turned over to other people's responsibility.

They are now left, and they will soon discover, all of the other urgent problems that are just as grave as this problem of emotionally disturbed children, which still rests within their jurisdiction. But they are going to be faced once again with the same problem: They will not have the means or the funds or the wherewithal to provide for those children.

One such group of children, of course, is that older, adolescent child, the child who has gone through a treatment centre, the child who has gone through a foster home, the child who has lived in his own family but who now cannot hack the authority structure of that home or cannot function within the family unit, whatever it might be—a foster family, his own family, an adoption family, a group home—but is not yet ready to be independent in the community and needs some kind of support to bridge him over.

In previous times, and still now with extended families, such a son or daughter is sent to a relative, an uncle, a cousin, a friend and there, out of the immediate involvement with his own family and the authority structures of that family, he is able to buy the time that he needs to become independently functioning.

There is a large number of children who have moved out of the parental structures, who have no place to go and no one to defend them, because we have small, nuclear families. And so they are on the streets. They are without proper food, shelter or clothing, and Children's Aid Societies will be finding the necessity to protect such groups more and more. We do not have funds to supply the Children's Aid Societies.

The most significant area—and the area that has always been lacking in this area of work—has been the lack of funds for prevention, where they have an opportunity to hire the qualified staff and enough numbers to get out and work with families before the child is removed, keeping families together.

I do not want to take more time—we are trying to finish the debate this evening—but I do want to close on one other issue which I think is a very vital issue. It has involved me deeply; I have spent a lot of time and worry and problem with it; I have spent a lot of money on it. It is the zoning bylaw problem when it comes to placing people in the community.

We know now that we must not continue to build large-style institutions. We know now that the family model is a more appropriate way to take care of people, whether they happen to be delinquent children, mentally ill children, emotionally disturbed children, retarded children. Right now, for instance, we have just witnessed an exposé of the conditions that everybody knew existed in the Orillia school. We have known about them for a long time.

The pressure that is on The Department of Health now will tend to move the government, for political reasons, to update that archaic institution, and there is a danger that we will build more institutions when we should be moving away from institutions. It would be possible within less than one year to remove every child in the Orillia school into small, family-like units in the community, properly supervised, with adults around who can care for them. It is perfectly safe for the community to have those children because they will be supervised by people, not by bars and not by covered cribs.

This can be done—it can be done more cheaply than to build the institutions. It has more humanity to it, it has more relevance to it, and I would very much urge the government to look at that. But the problem remains that the local municipalities can exclude these children from any area within their jurisdiction, and they have done that in the borough of Scarborough and in the borough of Etobicoke.

They have done this despite the fact that they know they are on very shaky ground legally. We have fought the issue in the courts to the Supreme Court, not because we like to violate zoning bylaws, not because we feel that somehow it is good to have a battle with municipalities—we do not and we never have—but because we believe that because a child had a mental illness, that because a child was without his own parents, did not mean that he should be restricted from living in any area that he might live in if he were living with his own family.

We thought it reduced us as a society to do this to children and we thought it important enough to spend money to try to get it decided in law.

I will tell members quite bluntly and quite flatly that the decision in the court is something that the law, the lawyers and the jurisdictional people in the province need to look at very carefully, because it was not a credible decision. It was a split decision. It was a decision that should be reviewed and reversed. It is not a sound legal decision that will stand the test of time.

I would suggest that there be provincial leadership to set a standard of what a municipality can do in setting restrictive zoning bylaws to prohibit children from living in certain areas of the community, particularly in those municipalities which do not have the good common sense to provide for their children, who come from homes in their own municipalities, to be treated in that municipality.

In Scarborough and Etobicoke the children who come to the Children's Aid Society, who come into the treatment centres from both areas have to be treated in communities outside of Scarborough and Etobicoke. I ask the government what kind of an attitude is that? What kind of gross, reduced political manoeuvring produces that?

It is a shame! It is a shame to the people who live in those areas. It is a shame to the politicians. It is about time they made a change.

We tried to elicit the co-operation of agencies a number of years ago to stand together and exercise some power against them. It was not possible to do that. Today the scene has changed. It is possible to exercise pressure on municipalities to change this kind of restrictive legislation. I would encourage the government to take the lead. I would encourage the government to pass regulations that would set limits on what a municipality should do with set guidelines.

I am going to close on that note. It has been a pleasure to work with both of the parties on both sides of the House. I hope that I have an opportunity to have contact with the members after the next election, as well as during this period of time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have three things I would like to talk about, hopefully for no more than half an hour, and the order of the comments I would like to make follows directly on from the remarks of the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown).

I would like to say that his credibility on the issue he has just discussed is total, with my own findings. For the last few months I have been, if you like, studying the question of emotionally disturbed children, the question of mentally retarded children and the multi-handicapped children in our society and how our society treats them.

I would say that the research I have been doing in the last few weeks has given me a much greater awareness of the tremendous sense that the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine makes when he makes a speech on this subject.

I say, sir, that if he was a member of this party—I suppose even in a non-partisan sense—I think that if only he would believe more in the democratic system, the possibilities of the legislative parliamentary system, he would remain in this House to make a contribution in this area.

No one speaks for the children in our society. The children in our society do not vote. The mentally retarded or emotionally disturbed children do not have a vote. I think that we must have spokesmen for them.

I hesitate to begin what I hope will be a very fruitful contribution in these next couple of months on this subject in any general sense, but I would state that one article that struck me in particular, that I was reading just yesterday, makes this point. It is very simple and it is a point that the hon. member has just made.

The reason many young children and teenagers who are mentally retarded get pushed away into institutions away from their communities is not a medical reason. It is a sociological reason. It is the attitude of the community that so often forces parents to put their children who are mentally retarded into institutions such as Orillia.

I would add that the article makes the point that many of the medical people involved in this area have become so specialized in the area of mental retardation that they want the children in institutions so they can study them. They have a vested interest in encouraging parents to send their children away from home care, from day care, into institutions.

As the hon. member has just made the point, in many communities the social prejudice against the children who have a problem in mental retardation and their families is such that the parents become isolated from their communities because of that fact—because their child is different and because they love that child they try to protect him by withdrawing into their own family unit.

Eventually the pressure becomes so great on the family that the only option remaining to a family, when the child reaches the age of 12 in particular, is to send that child away from home care—which is very low-cost in terms of tax-paying dollars—into the high-cost institutions such as Orillia.

Mr. Speaker, in a sense I am not ready to engage in that type of analysis at this time—perhaps two weeks from now in the budget debate I might get into that area. One thing that I would like to set straight now has to do with the question I asked the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) concerning the use of the children in Orillia as guinea pigs in the testing of vaccines that were not allowed on the market by The Departments of Health, provincially and federally.

My question to the minister was a very simple one. I asked him whether, in fact, children at Orillia had been used as guinea pigs in the testing of vaccine and other drugs. He promised to come back and report to this House and answer that question. He took it as notice. He has not answered that question to this day.

I would like to put a couple of things on the record, Mr. Speaker, because I did have a number of very negative phone calls from people who said, "Your charge is totally irresponsible. It was shrill—what are you saying?"

I would like to put the following factual information on the record. I just hope the Minister of Health will answer the question in some detail because the question has to do with the attitudes of our society; with the medical profession's attitude toward mentally retarded children in our society. I use this as a case example, if you like, of that attitude. I will try to keep my remarks brief and to the point on this issue before moving on to two other questions, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to state simply this: That at the meetings I have been at with parents of mentally retarded children who are living in the Orillia institution, the essential point that comes across is that once the child goes into Orillia they, the parents, have no rights to know what is happening to their children in that institution.

For example, a child in Orillia can be transferred out of Orillia into a nearby hospital, if you like, and the parents are not even notified. A child can even have an operation performed on him and the parents are not notified. A child can have what has been termed in Orillia, particularly in the tiny tots ward, severe chronic dysentery which has been running through that ward for the last two months, and the parents are not told.

Half the children, for example, Mr. Speaker, in the tiny tots wards have got gums that are bleeding, infected—there is lack of dental care. The children come home for Christmas. Their gums are bleeding. The parents have not been told.

What I am trying to say, sir, is that the fundamental problem is that the profession, the department in charge of Orillia, has a basic attitude that parents are no longer parents once they place their children in an institution like Orillia. The communication gap is total.

With the rubella test vaccine for german measles—this is a case example—and I put this in the record before—the parents received a form letter, sir, which simply said, Your child will be used to test this vaccine unless we hear from you stating to the contrary within 10 days. In other words the assumption was these children could be used. They were the discards of society, their value to society was nil and they could be used as guinea pigs. The thing that interests me, sir, is this: There was enough evidence to show that the rubella vaccine should not be used in children who are more disadvantaged or unfortunate than other people in our society.

The point is simply this: For example, a professor of paediatrics at Yale actually conducted a study of 15 army recruits all of whom had been vaccinated with the new rubella vaccine two months previously. Then she compared their susceptibility to rubella with a similar group with natural immunity. When german measles hit the two groups, those who had been vaccinated had an 80 per cent re-infection rate, while those with the natural immunity had only a 3.4 per cent re-infection rate. This professor concluded that more research must be done.

That was knowledge available to The Department of Health of this government which approved the testing on these mentally retarded children in Orillia; they knew that the probability was that these children would have a higher re-infection rate because they had been used and tested in this way.

In the August, 1970, issue of Ladies' Home Journal, the following comment was made concerning this vaccine.

The vaccine against german measles, rubella, is made in several ways. Doctors have been reluctant to give women the first ones marketed because they are likely to cause arthritis-like pain and joint-stiffness in adults.

The newest vaccine, a particular strain, is much safer. But the government-approved labelling in the US says joint symptoms were reported as less common, generally milder and of shorter duration than with other rubella vaccines. But even with that newest-developed type of vaccine, there are known adverse effects on the persons vaccinated.

Now why were the parents so upset? They were upset for a number of reasons. They were not treated as parents; they were informed that they had 10 days to opt out—not that they had 10 days or a month to opt in. They were saying—they said this to me and I am sure they said it to other members in this House—"Why cannot our children have the same rights as other children in the school system?" If someone wants to fool around with a vaccine or a drug with ordinary children in the school system, they have to get the permission from parents to opt in, not to opt out. Why this discrimination against the child because he is mentally retarded and in an institution? They are concerned with that.

The thing that struck me most severely in this, sir, is that Richard Wilson, the Orillia hospital administrator, tried to justify the fact of using these children in Orillia as guinea pigs for this vaccine—and I quote from the Globe and Mail story of April 7, 1971—"because the condition of many of its patients arose because of the mothers contracting german measles during pregnancy."

That is totally misleading, that is inaccurate and it verges, I think, on a total falsehood, because the letter that was sent out to parents was a form letter. It went to parents where the women had not had german measles. That to me almost destroys what verges on an untruth by the hospital administrator and discredits his story.

The second point is that the majority of the girls in Orillia will not be having children. I think this is a safe statement to make. So how can Richard Wilson, the hospital administrator, try to justify the use of these children for this vaccine by saying he wanted to see what the effect would be on them and presumably on their children? It is a totally irresponsible coverup, if you like, by Richard Wilson, the hospital administrator.

I would like to make the following conclusion to this, Mr. Speaker. It is simply this, that the Ontario Hospital committee of the Metropolitan Toronto Association for the Mentally Retarded made a recommendation to the then Minister of Health (Mr. Wells) and I quote directly:

The Ontario Hospitals committee of MTAMR would recommend that children in Ontario Hospitals should not be used in studies other than those that have a direct bearing on their particular affliction. It is to be made known that we are not against vaccines or clinical evaluations, but we are definitely against Ontario Hospital children being used for these clinical evaluations. We have done this study at the request of concerned parents and we ask that our report be forwarded to the hon. Thomas Wells, MPP, Minister of Health.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): Did the member not think that test had some bearing on the affliction of those children?

Mr. T. Reid: That is the point I am making—I am making two basic points, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member does not understand much about rubella vaccine.

Mr. T. Reid: I understand the file I have in front of me and I understand the wishes of the parents, which apparently this government is too insensitive to understand.

If the government wants to test this vaccine, test it on people in our society who have much, not those who have the least.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Does the hon. member know it was tested that way?

Mr. T. Reid: Why did the minister use these children in Orillia as guinea pigs? Is he trying to tell me that the reason is that he is interested in testing out what would happen to their children because they have been vaccinated with this vaccine?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister is not prepared to say that. He has just refuted the basic claim of Dr. Wilson in using those kids up there as guinea pigs.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The aim is to eradicate german measles properly.

Mr. T. Reid: And if a child is mentally retarded, the minister is prepared to use him as a guinea pig.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They were not guinea pigs.

Mr. T. Reid: What justification can the minister make for using those children as guinea pigs?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member does not understand the whole programme. Does he know where the other tests were done?

Mr. T. Reid: I do not understand the whole programme?

I am concerned with mentally retarded children whose parents have been denied the right available to other people in our society to opt into a programme, instead of having to opt out within 10 days. There were parents who were away on vacation, who came back and had this letter in front of them, that their child was going to be used as a guinea pig unless they opted out. But 10 days had elapsed. I have a copy of that letter here sent to parents by T. M. McCleary, MD, director of the hospital unit. I find that a despicable practice.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member does not understand what it is about. He just does not understand.

Mr. T. Reid: I do not understand? I understand the basic rights of people in our society, Mr. Speaker. I understand that in our society people are not used as guinea pigs unless their parents or they themselves say they shall be used as guinea pigs.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He just does not understand.

Mr. T. Reid: "I do not understand," he says. This government was prepared to say to the doctors of the medical profession in charge of this programme: "Go ahead. These mentally retarded children are the rejects of society. We do not want them in our community. We shove them away into these institutions. Go ahead, use them as guinea pigs. Give the parents 10 days to opt out. Do not ask the parents."

You know, Mr. Speaker—the final point—Dr. Wilson makes a claim here that the reason is that there is some relationship between the use of this vaccine and their mothers having german measles. You know, Mr. Speaker, the letter which he sent to parents was a form letter with the "Dear" and the "Mr. and Mrs." typed in, and probably it had a stencilled signature too. After all, there are over 1,500 children up there so it does not matter. Have a form letter. Send it out. Send it out to all the children. Just do not send it to the children whose mothers had german measles.

Now in here it does not state one reason why they want to use their children as guinea pigs. It does not give a reason in the letter. It simply says this vaccine has been developed to give protection against German measles.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There was no hazard in using the vaccine.

Mr. T. Reid: No hazards at all?

Mr. Speaker, a point of fact here. I quote from the hospital committee of the Metropolitan Association for Retarded Children. One parent had a seven-year-old child in Orillia whose record in Orillia says: "No injections, subject to convulsions." Do you know that that parent received this form letter from this Dr. McCleary, and that family was so upset it tried to phone the minister.

Many parents try to phone through to Orillia and they cannot get through. They said, "Do you not realize that you must not inject my child because, according to the medical record available up there it says that this child ought not to receive injections unless it is a matter of life and death for that child."

Hon. Mr. Wells: He would not have received it even if the letter was sent.

Mr. T. Reid: They did receive it. The minister's credibility is totally shot.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member does not know anything about it.

Mr. T. Reid: I do not know anything about it? No, of course not. I do not know that children in our society have some basic rights.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All the member is looking for is headlines.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The member for Scarborough East has the floor.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I conclude this section because I said I would take just a short time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The greatest misrepresentations and ill-founded facts I have ever heard!

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the correspondence I am quoting from is from the chairman of the Ontario Hospitals committee of the Metropolitan Toronto Association for Mentally Retarded Children.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am talking about the whole specious argument that the member is trying to bring out.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this is just fine with me because this shows the type of philosophy after 28 years that this government has developed compared to the approach that we have. We happen to believe, Mr. Speaker, in this party, and I am sure the NDP probably have the same feeling—

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will stake my reputation against the member's with the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister's reputation is shot. He is a fraud and he should get out of that government.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will stake my reputation.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister's reputation is that of a staller in the medical profession. His voice is for the vested interests in this society.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member should ask the Ontario association who they would rather face. I will stake my reputation against his on what I have done for them.

Mr. T. Reid: No, Mr. Speaker, my facts come from the parents. My facts come from the Metropolitan Toronto Association of Mentally Retarded Children.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let the member ask the Ontario association who they would rather work with.

Mr. T. Reid: Do you know what our view is, Mr. Speaker? We would not have allowed and we will not allow, when we have the responsibility of government, mentally retarded children to be used as guinea pigs for the testing of vaccine or drugs—

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member is nothing but a cheap headline hunter.

Mr. T. Reid: —and it has nothing to do with their ailments. We would simply outlaw that. Do you know the other thing we would do, Mr. Speaker? We would pass a law in this society saying one thing very simply: that before children, particularly children under the age of 16, are to be treated with vaccine that is not approved on the market—

Hon. Mr. Wells: That vaccine was approved by Ottawa.

Mr. T. Reid: —that they and their parents must give explicit written permission before that happens—

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. T. Reid: —not simply an opting-out process.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, can I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. T. Reid: No. Sit down and shut up.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That vaccine was approved and the member cannot deny that. Ottawa approved it for use.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Scarborough East—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the ignorance of that particular man over there is total. The letter that Dr. McCleary sent to the parents made it quite clear that this was an experiment, that this vaccine was not on the market.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It has to be approved for experiment. Ottawa will not allow it unless it is.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, has the minister not got the guts to stand up for the mentally retarded kids in our society? He should get out of politics.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member is totally irresponsible—a cheap headline hunter. That is exactly what he is.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I shall be dealing with the absolute chaos that this minister, former minister, created in a number of areas later on, and I shall have—

Hon. Mr. Wells: It will get the member lots of votes in Scarborough East, I can tell him that.

Mr. T. Reid: —tape-recorded evidence if he wants to use it. Mr. Speaker, I believe that children in our society have basic rights. I believe that mentally retarded children have more than basic rights, and I consider it immoral and improper for mentally retarded children who are locked into an institution to be used in such a fashion. I conclude my remarks on that issue with those comments.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. T. Reid: You should be ashamed that you ever allowed it. You should get out of politics.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Just wait until the minister answers the questions.

Mr. Speaker: You are not supposed to be talking across the floor. Will the minister please—

Mr. T. Reid: You know, I happen to agree with Richard Doyle about what he said about the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You say you happen to agree with him?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, that is a very interesting observation from you.

Mr. T. Reid: You are a regressive reactionary.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Thank you. At least I am not in favour of legalizing marijuana like you.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I am not in favour of mentally retarded children in the jurisdiction of that minister being used for the testing of vaccine without the consent of their parents or by themselves.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member is in favour of legalizing marijuana. That is why I am a reactionary because I am not in favour.

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, and the minister would like to lock up all the 16- and 17-year-olds—

Mr. Speaker: Would the member for Scarborough East continue his—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another area. It has to do with The Consumer Credit Reporting Act—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): How about pistols at dawn?

Mr. T. Reid: Pistols? I will take him on with a dagger.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): The minister did a nice job.

Mr. T. Reid: The second comment I would like to make, now that the Minister of Health cannot stomach facts has to do with The Consumer Credit Reporting Act introduced this afternoon.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I thought until this Act was introduced that we were heading into a spring election because the government had no legislative programme whatsoever.

Then this bill came in—it is a long bill; 17 pages—and a couple of other bills came in. I thought, well, the government is serious about having a legislative programme. Then I have changed my mind in the last couple of hours.

I have read this bill over and I find that basically it is a bill that is concerned more with the rights of credit reporting companies than with the rights of the persons whose privacy has been invaded by those credit reporting companies. There are two points in particular—two fundamental points in particular—and it is on the basis of these two points that I shall urge my colleagues to vote against this bill.

The first thing is that bill does not say that a credit reporting company must inform the people on whom it has collected this information by invading their privacy with a statement that it has collected such information. In a bill that I have introduced in this House twice now—introduced in the 1968-1969 session, entitled An Act to Provide for Data Surveillance—I made it quite clear that it is on the private enterprise sector that the responsibility rests—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. T. Reid: A point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am very interested actually, Mr. Speaker, in what the hon. member is saying and I am certainly very interested in his comments on the bill that was introduced yesterday. I introduced it and I will be most interested to hear his comments on it and I trust I shall profit from those remarks.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): We are getting to the point of order? I trust we are getting to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Certainly. If the member can just bear with me for a moment, he will get it. He will get it. But, Mr. Speaker, this is no part of the material in the Speech from the Throne. A debate on this bill should come on second reading and in committee.

Mr. T. Reid: I am not debating. I am telling the minister what is the matter with it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am most interested in hearing what the hon. member has to say about the bill but I think this is the wrong place. I would appeal, Mr. Speaker, not only to you but to the hon. member. In view of the fact that we are trying to conclude this debate, let me have the benefit of his remarks at the proper time and place. I am quite serious and I am anxious to hear him but not tonight on this subject. This is not part of the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, to get my remarks back in order, I would say that in the Speech from the Throne there are many references to the way in which this government would try to humanize government, would try to make society a bit better place for the individual to live in; that this government was very much concerned with the quality of life of the individual.

I would say, by way of brief examples, sir, that the attitudes reflected in the Speech from the Throne have not been proved to be shown in some of the actions of the government since. I simply say this that in a Liberal government, since we are concerned with the questions of the individual in our society—the right of the individual to be protected from invasion based on commercialization, invasion based on the profit motive—we behave that individual privacy comes before the right of companies to make a profit by invading a person's privacy.

In our government programme, we would for example, sir, do the following types of things: That when we identify firms such as credit reporting agencies, which are engaged in investigations of people's backgrounds, which are engaged in surveillance of people so that they can make money and profits, we would say that in that particular area such companies which are, if you like, almost blood-suckers on the privacy of individuals, such companies would have placed upon them the legal requirement that they must inform the individual on whom they have collected information that they have in fact done so and that they would provide, perhaps by a simple mechanical step or by pressing a button on a computer, capability to send a form postcard to all the people whose files have been stored in the brain of that computer, stating: "We have a file on you—we have collected information on you. It is available to you for your perusal at the following address."

We would say, sir, the individual in our society has the fundamental right to receive that type of information from people who have collected information on him for sale to make a profit. For example, in the bill introduced this afternoon by the former Attorney General—the present Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs—that bill is based not on the interests of the individual, but on the interests of the companies. Our philosophy would be the exact reverse.

I just add, sir, that the wording we would have in such a bill would be that "any person about whom information is stored or collected shall receive from the company not later than two months after his name is first programmed into the data bank or stored in a file, a printout or summary of the data contained therein which relates to him."

By way of conclusion, sir, the second major point in this regard we feel is that this bill introduced this afternoon is basically unenforceable. Credit companies are engaged in other forms of activity. They use the information collected by spying on people for employment purposes. They supply it to lawyers who are interested in cross-examining witnesses. They supply it to investigative agencies. This bill does not say that the companies must tell that individual on whom that report has been compiled that that report has been sold to-so-and-so for some purpose.

Our belief is that when information which is basically collected by invading the privacy of an individual is sold or bartered or traded in the fish market of the commercial world the person about whom information is being sold ought to know who the buyer is. We say that, again, it is the fundamental right of the individual in our society to have that knowledge.

I say, in terms of the Speech from the Throne, sir, that our attitude would be very much different.

Mr. Speaker, I have really only one more thing to say. It really is what I was going to start off by saying. I shall not make more than a few minutes.

I would like to reiterate, as I have done over the past two years, my belief in this place—my belief in the democratic parliamentary system as we know it in Canada and as we know it in this province. I say, sir, that I am terrified of the alternative methods of society acting collectively to determine how the individual is treated in that society.

What I am concerned with is the attitude of the governing party opposite toward the basic democratic processes of this place, and particularly of the standing committees and the role of the back-bencher in the Conservative Party and the role of the opposition members.

I simply make two points, I suppose. I find, not only among the young people I talk to, but among many adults, voters in the riding of Scarborough East, that this place has become unbelievable to them. They do not believe that this place is serving the people of Ontario, that this place and the civil service are sensitive to the needs of the individual in our society, nor that this place is really interested in what happens to them and their children.

I would say, sir, that I, as a member of Parliament in the provincial Legislature, felt a particular sense of disquiet for the attitudes of this government as propounded by one of its spokesmen in the press and in his place today during the question period concerning the patronage system that is employed, particularly in the licensing agencies.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The member had better look back at the history of his own party.

Mr. T. Reid: I am in the Liberal Party to make it a better, cleaner and a more democratic party.

I would just like to dwell briefly, sir, on that question of patronage, which one member of this government referred to "as a way of life" that is proper in the democratic processes of government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: I had some constituents from Scarborough East here this afternoon. No wonder they have less faith in the democratic political process of this province than they have ever had before, after listening to one particular minister of this government almost brag about the way the patronage system works in the area of licensing agencies.

You know Mr. Speaker, the definition of absolute corruption is that those who sponsor corrupt practices do not know they are being corrupt. I think that is about the most damaging statement that can be made about the government opposite.

I just state, sir, that the Oxford English dictionary defines the word "corrupt" in a number of ways. It says:

To turn from a sound into an unsound, impure condition, to make rotten, to infect, to debase, to defile, to make venal, to become putrid, to rot, to decay, to foster the perversion of integrity.

Sir, this government has governed too long; it does not know it is corrupt.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It is the traditional thing for those who wind up the debate on the Speech from the Throne to speak briefly about those comments which have already been made during each speech and also to comment briefly on what we are about here as legislators.

So I congratulate those who have played a part in this debate. I think there have been some very useful, worthwhile contributions. I have not agreed with all that has been said on either side of this House.

One would have hoped there might have been more ministerial involvement. I live for the time when the Speech from the Throne becomes a dialogue between those who govern and those of us who are mere back-benchers in this place. That has not happened yet. I think perhaps the new Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) might very well—I wish he was here so I could suggest it to him—think over the proposition which has been presented by myself and others in this Legislature that we should have television cameras in this place all the time, constantly, prepared to pick up whatever is said, whatever is done in this chamber at all times.

The member for London North (Mr. Robarts), the previous Prime Minister of this province, did not feel that television cameras had any place here on a continuing basis. He saw them simply as something which should be here on state occasions, when the budget was being presented, and when the Speech from the Throne was read.

I think, too, this medium might very well provide a different message for the people of Ontario if they were here. I am not at all sure that we can change the rules and create a meaningful dialogue. I am sure that a medium, such as television, could force us into different ways of carrying on our business. The very effect of that presence—that continuing presence of the medium—would indeed force us to dialogue, to interchange, to pose idea against idea, instead of simply reading hot speeches to each other across the chamber. We might make it, indeed, a place where there is some change of view on both sides of Mr. Speaker's chair as the debate went on. Perhaps that is too great a hope.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): It might make it relevant.

Mr. Pitman: Yes indeed! I submit what the member for Sudbury has just said is perhaps the greatest fear I have of this place. I, too, share with the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) a great faith, a long-held faith, perhaps as a result of a long study of the parliamentary conditions of this country. But I say to those who govern, that we can become irrelevant; that this place can become a facade; that we can be telling stories and spinning tales that no one is listening to; that we indeed can become so irrelevant that all the power and meaning and bite takes place somewhere else. So I simply say that this may be the easiest way too bring relevance into this chamber.

My congratulations must go, as is traditional—and I do not resist these traditions; perhaps these are the traditions which make our lives here, in this place, civilized as legislators—to those who have taken over the seats of power in this government; to the new ministers, particularly the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps) who is sitting in his place here tonight and to those ministers who have changed portfolios.

I think it might be said, Mr. Speaker, that we in the opposition have tried to be generous. We have not attracted with all the vigour which might have been expected. We wanted the ministers to find their way into their seats and find out who the deputy minister was and where their departmental offices were before we broached some of the subjects which no doubt they would have expected. We hope they will soon get to know some of the details. We hope they will not get buried in a trivia.

But they can be sure that over the next few weeks, as long as we are allowed to stay in this place, we shall try to discover whether their competence is sufficient to guide the destiny of this province.

There have been embarrassments. We have all been embarrassed by the lurching from crisis to crisis since we have arrived here. We all cringed and shuddered as the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) explained the housing development which was going to provide so much employment. Then we cringed as he re-explained it. Then we shuddered as he explained it again. And every time he explained it there were fewer jobs, fewer houses, fewer opportunities, and less living accommodation, and the horror of the whole thing became apparent that it was, indeed, a facade, that it had very little reality at all.

We indeed had great hopes and we still have some hope left—as the Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) said, “A little bit of hope”—that the new committee system would provide an opportunity for those of us who sit on the benches here to really know what is going on. It has not been in the best interests of this province that we have been prevented, log-jammed. We realize now that we may have been new wine in these committees, but it is going into very old bottles, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that those bottles are going to break apart unless there is some flexibility; unless there is some realization that the standing committee can be more than just a place where people go and carry on some irrelevant conversation with a few of the deputy ministers and officials of the various departments as they come before us.

We have been appointed, for example, in the human resources committee, to talk about the costs of education. I am sure that there are those to your right, Mr. Speaker, who joined with me yesterday as we saw the complete hopelessness of those of us here in this House. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you yourself were in that meeting. You realized, surely, the hopelessness of the activity which went on for five solid hours yesterday in room 2, down here in the west end of this building!

Because we did not have the information, we could not take any kind of comparative approach or analysis as to what was going on; either at OISE or in any other part of the educational system. We could not really take a look at the statistics which were brought before us from the Ontario Secondary School Teacher's Federation and give any kind of feeling of expertise. We could not tell anybody to check on that fact on page 14, or find out whether that is a relevant programme for OISE on page 3 of the great pile of material which was placed on our desks as we sat before the chairman on that occasion.

And so we went through the motions. We asked questions. We flailed around in the dark. We watched as they gave us a song and dance routine which was really very—and I do not mean that in a deprecating fashion at all; I was impressed; one cannot help being impressed—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They are past masters.

Mr. Pitman:—I suggest to the member for Sarnia that the educational system is filled with people who can tell us magnificent things about programmes, but never really tell us where it fits into the total picture of what we are doing with kids in the Province of Ontario. That surely is what it is all about.

What we want to be able to do is to take a look at one college of applied arts and technology and say why is it that it costs so much more to administer this college than that college? Why do you have to have three administrators for every person in the classroom at that college and two in this college over here? Why does it cost so much for a student, to teach him a certain course at that college and so much less at this college over here? Why are we teaching that course when the course is available over there in the high school or university?

Mr. Bullbrook: The member echoes many speeches I have made.

Mr. Pitman: Indeed, I think that these are echoes of speeches which I myself, have made, and I say this with no lack of recognition of what the member for Sarnia has brought to this House.

But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that what process we have gone through for the last three weeks has not given lustre to any new government. There have been no new waves; it has been entirely backwash. Unless we in this Legislature are given an opportunity to look honestly in the human resources committee at the cost of education, I can assure you the people of Ontario will not be served. I simply say that, and I hope that we will see a change of attitude. I intend to bring certain efforts to bear upon that committee and I hope they will be accepted.

We have had in this House an unemployment debate. In that unemployment debate I think it became very clear—it was unfortunately never concluded—that this government could do something about unemployment, and it could have done something about unemployment over the past number of months, both on the short term and in the long term, and it has sought to do very little.

One of the things I think is rather interesting, because it came out in that debate—and I want to say something about this, because the Speech from the Throne was filled with it—is this phrase, “the quality of life.” This is becoming one of those catch phrases which now covers up a great deal of very foggy thinking about what life is really all about.

But, nonetheless, one of the things which bothered me about a speech which was made by one of our friends over here on this side—about those who are on welfare not wanting to work—was that he said that we must not allow welfare payments to get so high that people would rather be on welfare than work. Heaven only knows, Mr. Speaker, there is no political party which has had more to say continuously about the minimum wage and the need to provide a decent wage for anyone who carries on work in the Province of Ontario.

But I want to say to those people in this Legislature or in this province who have made deprecating remarks about those who are on welfare, indicating that there were those who would rather be on welfare than work—this is not so. One of the programmes which this government brought forward very late—indeed, well after the time when it should have come—this programme for assisting municipalities to provide work in those municipalities, should have come last fall, not in March; and one wonders why it could not have been more long-term than to have it cut off on June 30.

Nonetheless, that very programme pointed up exactly what I believed about the people in this province: They do want to work. Because when that programme was brought into the various municipalities across this province, if that programme was announced, they found that there were hundreds of people who phoned and asked to work—they wanted to work; they were willing to do any kind of work rather than accept the dole which we in this province hand out to those who are on welfare or those who are on family benefits.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): How many do not want to work?

Mr. Pitman: The hon. member obviously does not believe what I have to say and really does believe that people do not want to work. I simply say to him—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What he is saying is that everyone who cannot find a job is a bum. That is what he said.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Evans: Because the NDP are the socialists.

Mr. Pitman: I want to say to the hon. member that there were no people phoning him and saying, “I do not want to work.”

Mr. Evans: There were lots of them.

Mr. Pitman: I suggest to the hon. member that if he really believes—this is what is wrong with this government; they have no faith in the people of Ontario. They believe that people would rather be bums than work. We on this side say that if we give people a chance to work, they will work and contribute and make this a better province. That is the difference.

Mr. Stokes: And that is the excuse that government uses to deal effectively with the problem.

Mr. Pitman: I want to say there were hundreds of people, and indeed when this government brought down the programme to provide young people with jobs, they found—and they will find—that there are hundreds and thousands of young people who want to work who cannot be given work by this government. When the appropriation is not large enough, the programmes are not ambitious enough, there simply is not enough imagination to provide these young people with activity during the coming summer. I think that is the point that has to be said and has to be made. In fact, one might well say what a pathetic effort on the part of this government to really face up to the problem of youth unemployment.

We know there are going to be hundreds of thousands of young people on the labour market every summer. I asked the former Prime Minister when there was going to be a long-term planned continuing programme to deal with unemployment of youth in this province. One would think that the whole matter of the release of hundreds of thousands of young people, who are going either into university or into colleges of applied arts and technology and who must find somehow support in order to carry on their education, was something unique that took place every June, or every April or May. Do you think that these young people had never appeared before?

I simply say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a continuing phenomena, if one wants to call it that. There is no reason why this government cannot cope with that kind of a situation and to send out, as happened just a few days ago, a young person to organize a SEED project in a community is unfortunate in terms of timing.

The SEED project—for those who may not be familiar with it—is a very, very complex, different kind of a project to provide learning experiences for young people. It began as a summer programme in Toronto—I think it is called the “shared experience” programme. It involves a very complex relationship with a great many—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): What is the abbreviation?

Mr. Pitman: Shared experiences—and something—D.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is an acronym, not an abbreviation.

Mr. Pitman: I might say to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, I get so lost in all of these programmes that I am scarcely able to remember what they all mean.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Now he is contradicting himself.

Mr. Pitman: I can simply say this to him. This is a very complex programme because it demands a focusing and a dovetailing of activities going on in the private sector and the social services sector. It demands a great deal of co-operation from community resources, our existing educational institutions and so on.

Here, in the month of April, a young person who is actually part of the SEED project in Toronto—who is on part-time and still going to school—is setting about the task of setting up four of these operations throughout eastern Ontario. They are setting up twenty-four of them across Ontario.

As I say, I give full marks to the government to conceive that this was something that could indeed be spread across this province and be of value to the young people of this province. But one suggests, why is it that one has to do it in April?

Is it not something that should have been developed last September and October? Is this not something that could have been developed with the co-operation of young people?

What will happen with many of these projects, and perhaps with the minister's favourite one—the SWEEP project, which he is so proud of—is that young people are going to be dragged into this too late. They are going to be brought into the programme, and they will not be given a very effective way of carrying out their activities. It will be disorganized. There will be people around the community who will say, “These young people do not want to work. They do not want to play any real part.” And simply because they were not given an opportunity to be a part of the initial planning and development of the entire project.

Here is something again which I think characterizes this government. They have no faith in people. They have no faith in young people. They will not give young people the opportunity to participate at the planning level—at the level where these young people can, indeed, involve themselves in the long-term objectives of our society. I simply say that that is, I think, one of the unfortunate aspects of all the programmes that have been brought before us since the beginning of this session.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk a little bit about the whole question of regional development. This, of course, is one of the gaps in the Speech from the Throne—not an unexpected gap. We in this party have watched with mounting horror the tortured, convoluted efforts of this government to cope with the planned development of this province. We have tried to be patient, we know how ill planning sits with this government. How tasteless it must be in the mouth, after so many years of suggesting that planning was not really a necessary function and role of government to find that one really has to plan in a modern technological society.

We have tried to be patient and to understand and we watched as the government set up its Design for Development. We listened as the Prime Minister told us the magnificent plans for the years to come. We wondered about the 10 economic regions and their viability. We questioned development councils, we recognized immediately that they were inadequately representative, we were unable to see any effective relationship with the existing municipalities and the existing municipal structure.

We recognized the complete alienation of these economic development plans and the process of regional government which was going on at the same time. We watched in wonderment as we saw the gaps that lay between The Department of Municipal Affairs, where regional government apparently was being processed, and the department of the Treasurer after The Department of Economics and Development gave up the ghost, so to speak, in the area of economic development.

We looked in disbelief as the Minister of Trade and Development began floating his EIO loans all over the province, spreading economic development like peanut butter across about 75 per cent of the land surface of the province.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): It was disaster.

Mr. Pitman: And we laughed as the government tried to explain all the charts and the arrows and the boxes. Indeed, one cannot but help remember that wonderful evening we had here one night, Mr. Speaker, as the provincial Treasurer at that time stood in his place and tried to explain what was really going on and what box we were in now as compared to where we were supposed to be going. Of course, in great large letters at the end was the term "goals." It had to be recognized, that to believe that you could move toward goals rather than to try and build on the goals, was a process that would end in complete disaster.

Well, the disaster has come upon us and it has come upon us with a vengeance. Now we have lost patience, Mr. Speaker, we have lost patience.

The Toronto-centred region plan was the last straw. The mountain laboured and brought forth not a mouse but a monster. A few pages of misconceived, wrong-headed nonsense. This broke all the bounds of credulity.

Mr. Sopha: Oh no, the northeastern plan is worse.

Mr. Pitman: We already heard about the northeastern plan, and I would hope that the member for Sudbury might tell us a bit more. I am sorry the member for Sudbury was not here when the leader of this party spoke about the northeastern plan. He brought—

Mr. Sopha: What does the member mean?

Mr. Pitman: —gales of laughter and tears to the eyes of those who sat and listened.

Mr. Sopha: What does the member mean, I was not here?

Mr. Pitman: Perhaps he was, I am very sorry, I did not realize the member was here.

Mr. Nixon: He is very rarely absent.

Mr. Sopha: A member can only be absent with the permission of the House.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, when the history of the next Prime Minister comes out, I think they will look back on his days in the opposition and they will say when he was discussing the Toronto-centred region and the northeastern region plans that was his finest hour.

I do not want to repeat what my leader has already said about the American obsession in this plan, this tying of Ontario into the horrors of the northeastern United States. One watches one's television set each night to see the quality of life which is expressed from across the border and one realizes that that is what this government intends to tie us into.

Mr. Haggerty: The member does not want that?

Mr. Pitman: One recognizes what distortions have been made to the north. Surely, I do not need to say anything more to what the member for Thunder Bay has already stated here tonight. One recognizes the wreckage of all the other plans which have gone on; the wreckage of the Lake Ontario Regional Development Council; of the Central Ontario Regional Development Council. The minister during the last debate on this plan said he was going to tell us how these would all tie in. If he can do that tonight, Mr. Speaker, I will believe that he can fit any square peg into a round hole.

I want to say that this policy which this government has followed—essentially using a good part of the Province of Ontario simply as a solution for the problems of Metro Toronto—is not one with which I can agree nor with which my party can agree.

The government of Ontario is elected by all the people of Ontario. They have a right to expect an overall sketched-in provincial plan which local people are then able to deal with, are able to place into context with, their plans, in which they are able to see some direction. That surely is what this government expects of any municipality which brings an official plan before it. And yet this is the very rule which this government has refused to follow itself.

Because there is no provincial plan, because there is no land-use plan—that is why your whole regional development lay in a shambles. That is why regional development has been noticeably absent from any comment in the Speech from the Throne.

I suggested, Mr. Speaker, that it does not fit into other development plans. For example, the blueprint for progress of the Lake Ontario Regional Development Council recommends giving greater emphasis to assisting the expansion of existing industries and “the possible use of transportation subsidies as a stimulant to industrial growth” and “the policies to be adopted in the manufacturing industry should be encouraged to locate in those parts of the region which have reasonable industrial growth prospects.” Obviously Peterborough and other sectors would normally be a growth centre in that region and yet that is something which the regional plan has simply ignored.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Naturally.

Mr. Pitman: Naturally, I say to the minister; naturally, indeed. Yet the Toronto-centred region plan designates this whole area as recreational and suggests moderate growth can be expected. Well, in the context of this concept and the obvious plans of the department, as well as the experience of the Ontario government policies of non-designation for EIO loans in the past few years, it is little wonder that the people of that area regard their future as one of moderate goals being interpreted as synonymous with stagnation.

I think it is important to take a look at what this report says about recreation. Here is another blind spot in this government. Because of its hangup over recreation it never has been able to really grasp what is meant by a leisure-oriented society. It has never been able to grasp leisure in terms of the last quarter of the 20th century.

This is why, for example, so many of the embarrassments of this government revolve around the use of Algonquin Park, around the ravaging of Quetico Park and, of course, around the monstrosity of allowing the Niagara Escarpment to escape into private hands and then having to buy it back for several times what it originally would have cost it if the Gertler report had been accepted by this government.

It is the complete inability of this government to conceive of what recreation is really all about.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The hon. member has a bigger land inventory than any district in this province.

Mr. Pitman: The minister's comment shows us exactly what I wanted to say about the whole area of recreation.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: One hundred thousand acres right there.

Mr. Pitman: We are moving toward a leisure society and the need for land designated specifically and unalterably for recreation must be identified and protected. However, the recreation needs of our society will become increasingly more sophisticated and will range from parkland within the urban complex, much of it highly specialized for recreation use such as tennis courts and skating rinks, to the wilderness areas of Quetico Park.

There appears to be no appreciation—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: There seems to be no appreciation of the spectrum—

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): A member of the Quetico committee is right there beside the hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: I must remind the member for Fort William that I do not think Quetico Park is in the Toronto-centred region. I think that really has escaped the horror of that particular plan. There appears to be no appreciation of the spectrum of recreation needs and thus, obviously, the lands that will be needed as a result.

Instead, the entire zone, with hundreds of square miles, is set aside as recreational. Now, much of it is already agricultural, of course. Some of it is already being used as an industrial growth centre. Many areas, of course, have towns and villages.

One of the interesting things, for example, if I might just react to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The hon. member will not get out of Peterborough on the weekends.

Mr. Pitman: —the point that I think is so obvious is that so few of the parks which are under Lands and Forests are very close to the large centres of population. Here you have the whole Toronto-centred region area and—how many?—three parks are within a short distance of our largest area of population.

Mr. Stokes: That is out of 108 in the province.

Mr. Pitman: That is a perfect example of the simplistic, the totally inadequate approach to recreation which this government follows. Now the minister, I suppose, believes that by having Polar Bear Park—

Mr. Nixon: Most of the parks are for polar bears.

Mr. Pitman: —and having designated it, it is going to be a great resource in terms of the people who are going to be concentrating in the Toronto-centred region.

Mr. Nixon: Tundra. Permafrost!

An hon. member: White whales and polar bears.

Mr. Pitman: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that points out the very thing I have been trying to say.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: If the hon. member wants a wilderness, we will give him a wilderness.

Mr. Pitman: I suggest to you, sir, there has to be a gathering of land and lakefront, both close to Metro Toronto and farther distant, of different-size lots and for varied purposes. A transportation policy must be adjusted to serve this need. In addition, the information being gathered by the Canada land inventory should be examined before such a recreation policy is determined. Now, in the sketchy concepts of the Toronto-centred region, we are led to believe that this great area of land is going to be recreational. I suggest to you, sir, that it is incomprehensible; it is irrational and it is pointless.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Give us some solutions. Tell the government what your plan is.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to keep within my limit tonight. I am going to resist the approaches of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. I would be very glad to consult with him on any occasion, at any time, to provide solutions to his problems.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: On any occasion.

Mr. Pitman: Now, may I say—

An hon. member: He is trying to provoke the member to reveal the NDP plans.

Mr. Pitman: May I go on to a second matter which involves this very plan. That is the worship of growth.

Mr. Speaker: For the information of the hon. member for Peterborough, and the hon. members of the House, standing order 3 calls for adjournment at the hour of 10:30 p.m. Perhaps I might inquire of the hon. House leader if it is his intention to introduce a motion to sit beyond the adjournment hour?

Mr. Nixon: The House cannot quit now. The Premier just came in.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I move the House continue to sit beyond the hour of 10:30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I think in order to do this properly, sir, we should have a motion to adjourn the debate and then we will introduce the other motion.

Mr. Sopha: Just a bunch of lawyers.

Mr. Pitman moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Now, perhaps we could have the other motion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the House continue to sit beyond the hour of 10:30 p.m. for continuation of business.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): It is probably a mistake.

Mr. Speaker: Now, perhaps, we could have the proper order of business called.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough may now resume his speech.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is the hockey game over?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Was there a game tonight? I did not know. I have been busy listening to the member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Oh, I cannot believe that. Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on to a second assumption on which this full regional plan is based and which I think has very little relevance.

First, there is a worship of growth, a mindless worship of growth in this document. The conventional wisdom is expressed better in this document than anyone can find in any comparable one that the government has brought out in the recent past. There seems to be little recognition of the fact that some very real and disconcerting information about our ecology is changing our attitude toward growth as a necessary element for the health of our economy and society. It is an assumption of population and industrial growth and its concentration in the region. There seems to be an acceptance of the inevitability of rapid growth, which is most unsatisfactory in a plan which sets its sights on the year 2000.

During the first half of this century as Canadians, as Ontarians, we have depended upon growth in our population and our industry as a basis of prosperity and a rising standard of living. So in reference to all the scare literature, or quotations from sources which predicted destruction of our planet, one cannot help but realize that the most traditional and conservative scientists are deeply concerned and disturbed over the assault upon our ecology which emanates from our growth mania—population growth, industrial growth, consumption growth, waste product growth, pollution growth. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is exactly what has happened in this particular document.

One would have expected that the term "moderate growth" would have been a more appropriate term to be applied to the Toronto-centred region itself. One would have hoped that the growth syndrome would not be so ingrained in this government that they would be putting upon the Province of Ontario a programme for the year 2000 which has essentially the term "growth" as its slogan. One would have expected alternatives for some control led growth society, some kind of balanced society. Steady state society is the one which has been put forward, rather than a cancer-like growth of population in the Toronto-centred region. Surely it is more logical to propose modern growth centres across the province, particularly in northern Ontario. Is it not illogical, Mr. Speaker, to concede that zone 1 of the Toronto-centred region plan, which now has less than 40 per cent of the population, should have in the year 2000 some 45 per cent of the population. Surely dispersal of population in this society, for psychological reasons as well as ecological considerations, would seem to be necessary but I am afraid that concept is completely lost in the concept which governed the Toronto-centred region plan.

One would have thought it would have made a commitment to a lower population figure perhaps on an accompanying policy with The Departments of Health, Education and Social and Family Services, which might encourage population control rather than encourage population growth.

Of course, the third assumption is that a city is just a collection of people. I am not going to spend much time on this—I question very much bringing 5.7 million people into zone 1; I question very much depreciating the life of communities outside the Toronto-centred region.

There is much more to a city than simply a collection of people in a certain area of land. There is a history and tradition. There are some parts of Ontario which are, which could be considered, simply places where people sleep so they can work in some other part of Ontario. That is not true about parts of northern Ontario. They do not want to see their sons and daughters leave; they do not want to see their able people drawn and sucked into the vortex of this monster which the government calls the Toronto-centred region.

I suggest that this government should withdraw the Toronto-centred region plan, should rethink all the assumptions upon which that Toronto-centred region plan has been based. They are out of date, they are totally out of context with all the thinking which is going on among urbanologists around the world. Sociologists everywhere are warning society not to allow those counter bases to develop, not to allow the kind of linearity which has been suggested in this concept as continuing.

Finally, of course, one could also comment on the simplest concept of pollution control. One would think that all one has to do with waste product is dump it into a lake. The idea of 5.7 million people being placed along the shore of Lake Ontario because it is the easiest place to dump waste, would be surely one of the most irrational propositions that has been placed before the people of Ontario. That is, presumably the reason why linearity is to be followed, spreading industry along the shore of Lake Ontario all the way to Port Hope and all the way down to Port Colborne—so they can cheaply dump products into Lake Ontario, making it surely what this government has allowed Lake Erie to become.

I reject that proposition. Surely what we should be doing now is making sure that every effluent of every waste disposal system is acceptable in the waters of any lake or river in the Province of Ontario. And I suggest for that reason the whole concept or linearity has very little logic, once one accepts that proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude merely by saying that I reject the values which have been placed before the people of Ontario in the Toronto-centred region plan. I will not repeat what my leader has already said about that plan. I simply state that this government, which talks about the quality of life, has failed totally to involve that concept in what seems to be now the provincial plan, that is, the Toronto-centred region plan. It is an adaptation to a mindless, conventional wisdom about growth, production, consumption and waste and pollution which I find totally unacceptable.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): What would the member have done?

Mr. Pitman: We demand that there should be provincial planning.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): They have not looked at the plan.

Mr. Pitman: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we have the plan; there is very little of a plan to look at. I might say to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, there is very little of the plan that one can look at. There is only 20-odd pages. In fact, if any town planner brought that plan into—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Where does the population come from?

An hon. member: Where is the green belt?

Mr. Pitman:—The Department of Municipal Affairs, he would be thrown out on to Bay Street.

An hon. member: Right.

Mr. Pitman: Yet this government brings that kind of plan for people to try to cope with. Nearly all the town planners, nearly all the experts in planning—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Let the hon. member tell us what he would have done.

Mr. Pitman:—have been totally overwhelmed by the stupidities and the inadequacies of that plan. They cannot react to it in any effective way. I asked the previous Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton)—

Mr. Martel: That is right.

Mr. Pitman:—if he would let us see all the other submissions that were being presented in regard to this plan and we still have not got them. We have not been allowed to see those. But I would say to the minister that until we get the next stage, he is quite right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The plan has the effect of controlling growth.

Mr. Pitman: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that one thing that the minister simply cannot say is that it is controlling growth. There is not a single indication in that plan of how the government is going to control growth—how it is to get industries to regroup from one place to another.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Where are the green belts?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member just wants this to go to Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: No, I do not. No, I can assure the Prime Minister I have no interest in that aspect. Tonight, I am speaking for the people of Ontario, not for the people of eastern Ontario, nor any other part.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I am not a bit bashful about asking for something for the people in the north.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nor should the hon. member be.

Mr. Pitman: I can assure the Prime Minister that he cannot find in that plan any way by which he can determine where industries are going to go. It is not in the plan. Perhaps the minister has seen the next stages, but we have not seen them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Have a little faith.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: The final comment which the Prime Minister throws across the aisle is, "have a little faith." After four years in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, that is one thing I am left very little of in terms of the plans and the prospects that this government has placed before us.

May I go on?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member is still without faith after four years!

Mr. W. Hodgson: Let us get to the next one. The hon. member has not made any points on that one.

Mr. Martel: Where did they get him from?

Mr. Pitman: We have suggested a provincial plan, with the land-use plans—my goodness, Mr. Speaker, we are getting to them tonight. They are really getting very restive over there.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder where they were before they came in. They have been quite active.

Mr. Pitman: We have also suggested that we must tie in any future development of—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did the hon. member look in the dictionary and find out what the word "corrupt" meant?

Mr. Pitman:—regional government with regional planning and regional development, and we have suggested on this side that there should be no further regional development until there is tax reform.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: We are not going to allow any other part of this province to enter the morass which has resulted in Niagara, Carleton and the areas where regional government has been brought in without the proper financial resources.

Mr. Stokes: Without an adequate financial base!

Mr. Pitman: One can certainly say, when the hon. minister talks about faith—

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Remember what David Lewis said last night.

Mr. Pitman: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attending a meeting in which there were officials from the board of education speaking to all the local town councillors from all the townships and villages in the area and one of the most interesting explanations, which I found rather amusing, was how the new assessment works in this area.

They were showing that the board of education in the city received, not one set of assessment figures, not two sets of assessment figures, not three sets of assessment figures, but four sets of assessment figures. One set was from The Department of Municipal Affairs, one set from The Department of Education, one set from the local township and another set from the regional assessment office, and they were all different.

And the board of education—

Mr. Stokes: And the Premier asked the member to have faith.

Mr. Pitman:—does not know on what set of assessment figures they are supposed to base their grant projections.

That is the kind of confusion which this government has placed upon the people who are trying to carry out their responsibilities in their area of activity in the province of Ontario.

Thirdly, I would suggest that there be a task force outside of this government to examine what has happened already in the regions where regional government has been brought in.

We have heard a great deal from the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) and it is pretty horrifying. We want to see what mistakes have already been made by this government when it brings in regional government without the proper opportunity for the people in the area to have some input into what kind of regional government they are going to have. We want to see exactly what has been going on before there is any further development in this direction.

Mr. Martel: The Prime Minister does not think so. He is very uncomfortable with what is going on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who is uncomfortable? I have not been more comfortable in years.

Mr. Pitman: I might say to the amiable Prime Minister, we want to see immediate assistance to the existing municipalities. This government has no right to leave the municipalities of Ontario in a state of suspended limbo, waiting to find out what they are going to do, whether there is going to be regional government or whether there is not going to be regional government. They are unable to really plan their development, are not given the grants to plan their development, are not given an opportunity to provide better services, and are not given support to provide intertownship and county-based services for the people of that area.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): The hon. member does not even know what he is talking about.

Mr. Martel: Where did that come from? Send him back to watch the rest of the hockey game. They are playing overtime.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: I only wish the hockey game had lasted longer, with longer overtime so that the hon. member could have amused himself in some other way.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member for Peterborough does not know what he is talking about when he talks about regional government.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: We have not heard the member speak.

Mr. Martel: Let him give us his maiden speech.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I will take any one of them on about regional government.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: There is some mystique, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: He had better do it in a hurry, because he will not be here long.

Mr. Pitman: There is some mystique in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, that noise in the back row somehow gets the member to the front row. I wish that perhaps the Prime Minister might suggest to his members in the back row that this really is not the most effective way to get there.

Mr. Nixon: Vote against the government if the member wishes to get a promotion.

Mr. Stokes: I think the minister should give that cat more rope.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Pitman: We have heard a great deal from this government about planning and preserving our environment. I would like to read just a few comments from the previous Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in regard to this matter and then talk a little bit about how it is working out day by day in at least certain parts of Ontario.

He said—and this is at the provincial-municipal conference, that love feast that took place about a year ago at the Ontario Science Centre: I finally discovered then what the Science Centre was all about. There was a time when I thought it had something to do with science, and I could not understand why I had to walk through so many palatial halls and go down a great big escalator to find any of the science.

Now I have discovered, of course, that it has mainly to do with the science of public relations, and this is mainly used to bring people together to give it to them and, believe me, the municipal officials got it about a year ago.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): No, no, no.

Mr. Pitman: No strategy or continuing strategy—they were told they were partners and what wonderful people they were and how they were going to get involved from then on in any continuing discussion on municipal-provincial affairs. Well there has not been one word since—not a single document since—and it has also disappeared in limbo.

Mr. Sopha: The member has not got it right. It is where we are going to put those relics.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, let me quote the Prime Minister:

During the next decade we shall place less reliance on economic growth for its own sake and more on the fulfilment of values of society. If we are going to control our destiny, we must be prepared to make certain commitments and accept that there must be personal sacrifice for the benefit of society at large.

Governments may have to forbid certain types of development to prevent pollution, the destruction of the natural beauties of the countryside or the loss of unique landmarks. Industries may not be allowed to establish in the locations of their choice. Housing developments may be prohibited in certain areas.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): That sounds like a good speech. I must have made it.

Mr. Pitman: For years, Mr. Speaker, I have appealed to this government to put subdivision control on southern Ontario. Only when there was a desecration of a good part of southern Ontario by Whiterock Estates and various other groups did the minister finally act to frustrate that kind of development and to stop the desecration. But it showed how easily townships could be put upon by interests which were as large and as effectively financed as these operations are.

I want to suggest that something even worse has taken place in this province. I do this with some hesitation because I do have some concern over what takes place in the lands about this province. My children and our children have to grow up in this province, but I do this tonight because the matter has already been brought to the Legislature floor by the member for Victoria-Haliburton, and I do not think anything more can be said which can provide any further initiative and opportunity for those who are carrying out a massive desecration of the Province of Ontario.

As members have already heard from that member, there was a case in a Peterborough court on February 12 which recognized that section 26 of The Planning Act had a very large loophole; in fact, you could drive a truck through it. It discovered that it was quite legal for solicitors to register entire holdings of a landowner by conveying parcels of land by a single deed—a single deed, a single cheque, one person acting as an agent for several others. The land could be conveyed from one person to another.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? That means a great deal. That means the entire process of forcing developers to submit a plan of subdivision to The Department of Municipal Affairs, or even a local planning body, is totally avoided. No consent is necessary; these transfers can take place in any part of Ontario.

On March 8, the Minister of Municipal Affairs was told of that particular action which has taken place and what it meant in terms of The Planning Act in this province. On March 17, I received a copy of that letter and I sent a letter to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) expressing the hope that he had read that letter and realized what its implications were.

On the first week of the session I went to the Minister of Municipal Affairs privately and I asked him to bring legislation into this House which would allow that loophole to be plugged, because unless it is plugged there will be thousands of lots which will be severed in this province against the interests of planning and development, and pollution control and against the interests of township financing, and what have you.

Within a month, there have been 12,000 lots created in the Province of Ontario, in Victoria county, Peterborough county, Renfrew county and Sudbury. I say to the Minister, who is not here and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that plans of subdivisions which were turned down by the community planning branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs have now turned up and are now registered as land fit to be built on in the Province of Ontario. In the Lindsay registry office alone there have been 800 lots that are now registered; in Ops township, Somerville township, Fenelon township—cottage country, Mr. Speaker, where lakes and rivers abound, where the people of Ontario will look for their recreation needs in the future.

There are instances where plans of subdivisions were turned down. I ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs or any representative, to look at lots 5 and 6, concession 10, township of Somerville, in the name of Mr. Riel—34 lots which were turned down as inappropriate for development but which the community planning branch of this government is now registering for building in the Province of Ontario.

Lot 18, concession 10, registered by Mr. R. G. Wood, in Somerville township, 11 lots and 33 lots, have both been turned down by the community planning branch. In fact, this is a dandy. These lots are virtually on mud dredged out of a lake. They are about one foot above the lake. The community planning branch does not even know—now the minister can smile about this, but I can assure him that there are township officials across Ontario who are crying because they do not know what to do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are not smiling about it. I was smiling about Fort Lauderdale.

Mr. Pitman: Fort Lauderdale is not rural Ontario, I can assure the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know. But I was not smiling about Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: He would know more about that than the member or I.

Mr. Pitman: For a government which talks about conservation and protecting water resources, which talks about appropriate opportunities for proper land development, this is a desecration of the Province of Ontario. There are lawyers staying up all night preparing the deeds to be registered on land which has been turned down by the community planning branch—as I say, 12,000 lots across this province. I mentioned just one or two.

I can say this: When is the minister going to do something about it? I have appealed to him again and again. I bring it forth publicly, only because it has already been brought to this forum by the member for Victoria-Haliburton, and I have waited patiently for something to happen. I am going to make a charge. It is very rarely I make a charge in this Legislature. I am going to make a charge that this government is purposely delaying action until some of its friends, who have been embarrassed considerably by the efforts to control land in this province, can get the land severances they want. I think—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hope the member can prove that. I hope he can prove that.

Mr. Nixon: Or what? Cut his head off?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Nixon: What is the Premier going to do? He cannot read him out of the party.

Mr. Pitman: Can the Prime Minister tell me why it has taken two months to bring any kind of legislation into this House, when the minister has known about it, when this decision came to him on February 12? Is there any reason why it should have happened? Is it not the Conservative members who are having the most embarrassment over this problem? Was that not one of the things which he has indeed talked about many times as he went about rural Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Pitman: Well I am very surprised. I am very, very surprised, I think—

Mr. Martel: What are they doing about it?

Mr. Pitman: I ask this government to get that legislation in here as quickly as possible. They will receive the utmost co-operation on this side to get it through. But I am disappointed, I am shocked, at what has happened in terms of subdivision control in the province of Ontario as a result of the delays of this government and the pressures that have been put upon this government.

Mr. Martel: Where has the Premier's smile gone? Watch that composure.

Mr. Pitman: I want to talk a little bit more about one or two other subjects. One is the Ontario Development Council. This monster which has given away $26 million to put a pay cheque on Main Street, as the member for Don Mills used to tell us; what a leading government economist has publicly called "a can of worms." I ask this government in this area, how do you answer the Canadian taxpayers when they will charge at the next election that their tax money has been used to Americanize the Canadian economy? How is the Ontario taxpayer going to react when he discovers he cannot even find out those companies which has not carried out their responsibilities?

I suggest that there is some difference between a private company which receives private financing and a private company which receives public financing. There is a public responsibility and that responsibility has not been carried out. If I might be allowed as one of the amateurs who do not know what is going on in the outside world, as referred to by Mr. Etchen, I suggest that the real world is that Ontario is being sold out. In fact, I might even quote one of the friends of the government, one of the best friends of the government, Mr. Eddie Goodman. It is a fine quote—

Mr. Sopha: Fine fellow!

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Goodman said:

In the past decade the outflow to the United States in dividends, royalties, licence fees and other funds has far exceeded the amount of new U.S. investment in Canada. The outflow in a decade was more than $2.6 billion. The people like Trade and Commerce Minister Jean Luc Pepin and Stanley Randall who say foreign investment is the lifeblood of Canada are living in the 18th century. They must believe in blood-letting and it is our blood flowing south of the border that they are talking about.

Yes Mr. Speaker, indeed it is our blood. And in the decade from 1960 to 1970 new American investment of $5,497,000,000; dividends repatriated at interest of $6 billion; royalties and fees repatriated of $1,770,000,000—and what do we end up with? In 1960 to 1970—and these are American figures—minus $2,625,000,000.

In 1963, U.S. funds—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: I am sure the Prime Minister will have an opportunity later to correct my observations. Maybe Mr. Goodman is crazy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor unless there is a point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: In 1963, U.S. funds as a percentage of total United States investment were 10 per cent. In 1964 it was 7.6 per cent. In 1965 it was 20.8 per cent.

Mr. Sopha: What is that? The NDP vote?

Mr. Pitman: In 1967, 9.6 per cent; in 1968, 4.9 per cent. That is what the real U.S. investment is in the economy of Canada, and in Ontario. I wonder if this government really would like us to be like Latin America where from 1960 to 1970, United States corporations invested $2,640,000,000 and took out $10,194,000,000. Does this government not realize that this is a world-wide problem, that throughout the entire world the American multi-million-dollar corporations are raising 80 per cent of their capital locally? And what does it mean for us?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): The member's leader said 94 per cent.

Mr. Pitman: I am talking about the world. I think the member will find that he was talking about Canada.

Mr. Randall: That is why they call the member an academic weirdo.

Mr. Pitman: I try to use different figures than my leader does. It gives a little variety to the discussion.

We are losing jobs. Foreign firms are concentrating on natural resources which have small labour content. They export to the United States where the jobs really are in terms of employment. Foreign firms are doing their research and development in the United States. What does this mean for the PhDs who are trained and educated here in Ontario?

Mr. Randall: Has the member been out to Sheridan Park lately?

Mr. Pitman: We inherited a huge balance-of-payments problem. And, of course, our interests are always second. If we are closing a plant it will be a Canadian plant. I shudder to think, Mr. Speaker, what is going to happen if that horrible war in Vietnam ever gets over, if the Americans stop shooting Vietnamese and stop shooting each other. If that ever stops, heaven help us, because if a recession hits the United States, it will be Canadian plants that will be closing. It will be Canadian workers who are on the streets.

Mr. Randall: What if Communists stop shooting Americans?

Mr. Pitman: I am sure that the former Minister of Trade and Development may have an answer, but I am not sure it will be the one that the people of Ontario will want to hear.

Mr. Randall: I have all the answers, believe me.

Mr. Pitman: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a little about the whole question of education costs. Not just education costs because, as I said before and I will again, we have no right to talk about education costs until we talk about a programme.

We have tried in this House again and again and again to find out what the goals of the education system were; how they were related to the society in which we live; how we can evaluate the programmes which are being carried on in the schools; and how there can be some accountability in what is going on. I simply want to say that now we have reached the crunch. I want to say there is something more to this crunch than simply figures. I am not going to go over all that has been said about education costs, both by my leader and by other hon. members who have spoken. I want to say that the thing which bothers me most about what is going on in education in Ontario is the morale, the lack of morale, the undermining of morale which has gone on in all the institutions involved with education in Ontario.

That is very serious—I am sure the Prime Minister realizes that and, I am sure, so does anyone else who is involved with education in any kind of function where really performance is tied very much to motivation, rather than to income. You will realize to what extent morale decides the success or failure of a school or a college or a university—the morale of the faculty; the morale of the students.

One looks across the province and sees the erosion in morale which has gone on in this province. Look at the colleges of applied arts and technology. They have been in a state of upheaval ever since last fall.

This government brought in a Bill 217—we do not know if it will be introduced again, we cannot find out.

I asked the Minister of Education when it was first introduced. He said he had no way of telling if it covered the faculties of the colleges of applied arts and technology. The Treasurer certainly said it did cover them, indeed it did. Yet here is a piece of legislation which is so out of context with every tradition of academic freedom that we have in this province, every tradition we have of freedom of inquiry, it just boggles the imagination how this bill could have been introduced. How could it have sat on the order paper, you might say, as the cause of continuous debate throughout the colleges for the last six months?

Look at what it said and I relate this to the comments which the Speech from the Throne had about the quality of life—creating a society in which men and women can act as human beings.

Compulsory arbitration—no free collective bargaining for people who work in colleges of applied arts and technology. Two members appointed by the government, one appointed by the teachers—not even demanding unanimous decision in that circumstance.

Secondly, a whole list of areas which are non-negotiable at a time in our society when not only teachers but people who are working in industry want more and more opportunity to make decisions about their place of work and the kind of work they are doing and their relationship to others who are working in the same place, a shared decision-making which provides some kind of reality to what they are doing. At this time, a bill is brought in for these college faculties which cuts them off from that opportunity.

Third, penalties on the employees of $500 to $1000 if they withdraw services. A tribunal which can enter the employee's place of work, Mr. Speaker, of a professional person who is reading and marking and studying, and carrying on his activities in his own home. This is the kind of piece of legislation which is irrationally brought into this Legislature.

Well as I say, the undermining of morale has been absolutely horrendous across the province. Look at the secondary schools. The secondary school teachers are talking about a strike. We have indicated on this side that we would not wish them to go out on strike. They have every opportunity of using the ballot box some time this year to make their decisions known about how they feel about The Department of Education and what it has done. They are certainly concerned that some quality is disappearing. They certainly are afraid that the vulnerable people—those who are emotionally disturbed, students who need more help—are going to be hit by these cuts. They have had no real part in determining priorities, either as teachers or as trustees.

One cannot help wondering why it was not, when the Minister of Education of that day and the Treasurer of that day called all the board chairmen and all the administrators down to the Royal York, told them what the name of the game was and then let them go back home without ever giving any kind of a strategy for showing them how to cope with the next number of months.

Why is it there cannot be a continuing opportunity for dialogue not just between the trustees and the top administrators but between the teachers and other people in this province? Why can we not open up this whole business and let more people know what directions we are going in? We would establish some long-term goals. As the OSSTF put it recently, we might even be able to co-operate and define those goals and reach those goals.

But no, we do not get that kind of impetus from this government. Once again, it is a failure of faith in people and the fact that people do want to contribute, they do want to take part, in what is going on in this province. I simply say that the time has come, that morale will continue to go down unless there is some kind of a partnership concept.

One can talk about the teachers' colleges and the young people who are in those teachers' colleges now. Forty per cent of Althouse graduates cannot find a job and hundreds in other teachers' colleges as well. Now it is very easy for the deputy minister to say there is not going to be any shortage of jobs, but there certainly was last year. There were 700 or so.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, but the member should make a distinction between Althouse which is for secondary school teachers.

Mr. Pitman: All right, if the minister wants distinctions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Tell the House the hiring season is not over.

Mr. Nixon: It could go down to 35 per cent; that is about it.

Mr. Pitman: I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Prime Minister may be driven to tell us what will be the final percentage, but I think he should also mention that the Althouse teachers are teachers who have finished their university degrees. They are not people who are going to be sort of recycled into the university system. They are not people who are going to be able to step into another form of educational opportunity. That is the end of the road for them in their teacher education, unlike the teachers' colleges where there may be that opportunity, and yet we cannot even find out the numbers here.

The minister criticized me for not being more exact, but we have asked the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) and he cannot tell us how many teachers there are likely to be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He cannot tell the member?

Mr. Pitman: So I suggest to the Minister of Education that surely there are some things in this world which are known and have been known. I must say that it has not been helpful either for the Minister of Education to stand up and say there are too many lawyers, there are too many engineers—

Mr. Nixon: Ten million dollars in educational research and no predictions of this.

Mr. Pitman: That is the private sector, and for the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White) to say it is because of unemployment and inflation is even more disconcerting in terms of the facts.

The fact is that we know how many children are being born. There is not an immense immigration or emigration going in and out of Ontario. We have a general idea of how many teachers are likely to leave the profession—we have an actuarial figure anyway of the number of teachers who are likely to be retiring. In other words, it seems to me—

An hon. member: The teachers are leaving too.

Mr. Pitman: —that the one thing that we can decide, at least to some extent—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member for Peterborough worried?

Mr. Pitman: —is the general need in terms of classrooms and as part of the input to programmes which are being developed.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: Surely we have some way of being able to tell with greater accuracy. Indeed, I can remember sitting in the supply committee of this House two years ago and saying to the Minister of Education that he was oversupplying, he was over-enrolling his teacher's colleges; that we were indeed going to have exactly the kind of problem that we have now.

Mr. Nixon: OISE forgot to even look at that. The minister did not ask them to.

Mr. Pitman: I was going to provide what I thought were some helpful constructive comments on areas which The Department of Education has not even looked at, which might very well be cost-cutting.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Samia): Tell us. Give us some ideas—seriously.

Mr. Pitman: I think there are a number of ways that we can cut costs. We could do it this way, by hacking and simply hoping that people do not get hurt, that there are not programmes that are going to be wrecked and destroyed. Or worse than that, that experimental programmes which could have helped young people are never going to be initiated because of these cuts. We can do it that way. We can up the teacher-pupil ratio; that is one way, but with a result there of terrible spin-offs. But I suggest that there are other things that have not been looked at which should have been looked at, as we move toward this period of some crunch in the area of costs.

First, the use of community resources. We never really tried to find out what the community could do in the area of education. We have equated education with schooling, and that which goes on in schools apparently has status and relevance. We have not realized what can be done in the community and what could be transferred. You cannot, as long as you are hung up on carrying out all your activities in school and institutional settings. I do not think that real cuts are possible. We have never really developed the concept of the para-professional; at least it is very embryonic. We have not really looked to see what could be done with people who want to participate, volunteers who are just starting.

In fact, in the Minister of Education's own riding a very significant piece of research is being done by OISE in that particular region, which will give, I hope, some very important and worthwhile developments in the future.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): It is a very progressive community.

Mr. Pitman: Thirdly, I think there are ways of taking a look at the curriculum. I suggest to the minister there is much curriculum which could very well be phased out. I think that more specifically job training in some of the CAATs might very well be done somewhere else.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say any more on this. I would like to, but I am afraid my time is gone. I want to ask this House to look at this resolution very carefully in conclusion. What we put forward here are a number of additions to the resolutions put by the Liberal Party. I want you to see these resolutions not just in terms of an additional series of activities—they are far more than that; what they represent is a change in thinking. I hope that a member of the minister's department has passed on to him a book which we have been sharing over the last number of weeks. It is called "The Greening of America," by a man called Reich. He talks about consciousness—

Mr. Sopha: That is not a very good book.

Mr. Pitman: I think the minister might very well understand what is meant by trying to improve this consciousness—

Mr. Sopha: It is a bourgeois book.

Mr. Pitman: I think it would help him to perhaps understand what these are really all about. Because it does represent, I think, a faith in human beings, a faith in the desire of human beings to participate in government; a faith of people in their local communities to direct their lives. I think that is the real meaning of what quality of life is all about. It is more than just meaning that people are going to be able to breathe the air, to swim in the water and not to be buried in their garbage. It means far more than that.

It means that they are just going to be given opportunities to get some form of income maintenance if they lose their jobs. It means that we want to produce in Ontario the kind of life which means that people will participate—both in work and in leisure; they will participate, as well, as citizens in a government. That is what this government has denied the people of Ontario in the last number of years.

So we put forward this resolution. First, to give some views to the existing government, but to give some idea to the people of Ontario of what the next government of this province will really be like.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to outline in general terms the policy of this government as it relates to the scale of benefits payable by the province's health service insurance plan during the period May 1, 1971, to April 30, 1973.

In addition, I will detail certain steps which the government intends to take toward improving the general operation and administration of the plan.

To begin with, may I briefly set out what seemed to me to be the two basically different approaches open to the government and to this Legislature insofar as the relationship between the government—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Where did he come from? This should be a statement.

An hon. member: Ottawa.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence:—and the medical profession is concerned.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): This is a ministerial statement.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The first approach is by analogy—

Mr. Nixon: I thought this was going to be a shattering attack on the opposition.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence:—and by use of such words as negotiation, agreement, arbitration, using them to characterize, as it were, the Ontario Medical Association as the bargaining agent of the profession, and the government in the plan, as management.

This approach has several flaws—one being that it is not supported by legislation; another being that it accepts the adversary system and the sanctions of that system as being appropriate. It focuses almost total attention on the OMA schedule of fees.

The second approach is to look directly to the government and its responsibility, firstly, to operate the insurance plan, and secondly, to establish a scale of benefits payable under the plan. It accepts the fact that the OMA schedule of fees and the OHSIP scale of benefits are different things and indeed could be very dissimilar in both nature and quantum.

The second approach recognizes, however, that the closer the two are to being identical, the better both the public and the profession will be served. It requires the OMA to be responsible and to be responsive insofar as public policy is concerned, and that the government similarly be responsible and responsive insofar as the practice of medicine is concerned.

The 1971-1973 Ontario Medical Association fee schedule reflects the substantial policy input of my predecessor and those officials of this department who were involved for a long period of time in comprehensive discussions with the OMA during the schedule's development. The new schedule includes an overall increase in total fees of 4.5 per cent, effective during the two-year period 1971-1973. It includes increased emphasis, supportive of general and family practice, and a de-emphasis of a number of specialists' services.

In the opinion of this government, Mr. Speaker, it is constructive and fair. Furthermore, the internal arrangement of the fee structure itself has undergone substantial modification, making it more satisfactory as a vehicle for insurance payments. For these reasons, the OHSIP scale of benefits for the period May 1, 1971, to April 30, 1973, will be the OMA schedule of fees less 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to address myself briefly to certain new policies which I feel will result in significant improvements in the operation of our health services insurance plan.

Mr. Nixon: That is not much of a breakthrough.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: At the present time some physicians are billing the plan directly for services rendered on behalf of some of their patients. Some are billing others of their patients directly and in yet other cases both the patient and the plan may be billed. This variety of methods of billing is confusing to the public and results in misunderstandings, complaints and administrative costs. In order to correct this situation, we have decided to require that each individual physician choose, with regard to his total practice, between billing all of his patients directly or billing the plan on behalf of all of his patients.

The new system will operate in the following way:

Within a given period of time a physician should decide upon his billing method by either billing the plan or by billing the patient, but not both.

Arrangements will be made to accommodate circumstances where a physician provides services to, let us say, a university clinic and the balance of his practice is a private arrangement.

If an exception is warranted, the physician would elect a method of billing on a practice basis for each of the two components.

Where the physician bills the plan he thereby agrees to send all of his accounts to the plan and to accept plan payments, namely, 90 per cent of the OMA fee schedule as payment in full.

Where the physician bills his patient or patients directly, no payment or payments accrue to the physician from the plan. The amount of the physician's bill and arrangements for its payment are in such case left to the physician and his patient to determine, and the only involvement of the plan consists in its payment as insurer to the patient as beneficiary, namely, 90 per cent of the OMA fee schedule.

To avoid misunderstandings, the physician who practices on the bill-patient basis has elected to deal directly with his patient as far as his bill and arrangements for payment are concerned. He will be required to notify his patient in writing when he proposes to charge amounts in excess of the scale of benefits. This notification should be made prior to rendering the service unless the particular situation makes this impractical.

Mr. Speaker, the plan and its computers are developing a capacity to provide complete and accurate profiles of the patterns of practice of physicians and of utilization by patients. This will give the plan the ability to improve to an extraordinary degree the detection of irregular, peculiar and unreasonable or fraudulent conduct by patients or doctors who may misuse or abuse the province's health services insurance system.

Our developing capacity to determine misuse and abuse of our plan, itself increases the responsibility of the plan administration, of the Ontario Medical Association, and of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, to act. All three organizations are at present involved in the attack on misuse and abuse. However, we intend now to call for even greater assistance from the OMA in programming our computers and in analyzing the statistical data from which the physician and patient profiles are themselves generated. And we intend to invest both the plan and the college with broad investigatory powers and sanctions in our attack on improper medical and/or financial practices.

I am convinced that the major changes which I have outlined will bring about a better administrative arrangement for OHSIP. They will erase some of the major problems as far as the public is concerned. In my opinion, this deals fairly with the profession and at the same time isolates those individuals who are abusing the plan.

A close co-operative arrangement between the providers of service, government and the public is essential to a successful programme. I am encouraged, Mr. Speaker, by the response which I have received in the few weeks that I have been in this office.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when I hear the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) announce the policy which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and some of my colleagues have promoted with vigour over many years, it is depressing. It depresses me to realize—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): Why? The member did not even understand it tonight.

Mr. Sopha: It depresses me to realize that in tomorrow's press it will be portrayed as if the Minister of Health has just rediscovered America.

If you cast your eye at the clock, Mr. Speaker, and look at the vacancy of benches over there, perhaps you will not think it indiscreet of me, nor an exaggeration to suggest to you that we have a prospect of arriving at the vote at just about the time the Black Knight closes, so the whip over there will not have to telephone the head waiter.

I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that your senior would be in the chair because I have some nice things to say about him—for a change. I was going to say to him that he has been much too quiet this year, and I fear that equanimity and equability are creeping up on him with age. For myself, if I had been him, I would have thrown the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) out the other day, but, of course, I am very partisan on that.

But I especially did want to commend him on the coeducational feature of the pages with the arrival of the page-girls. That is a major advance. And when, as last night, I viewed that taffy-pull in Ottawa going on and I saw the struggles of the females to try to get recognition on the governing council, then it is appropriate to point out that the Speaker is far more progressive than they are.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): One cannot mix with those socialists.

Mr. Sopha: I will return to them.

For example, I am glad to hear from my friend, the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman). I could not understand today how it is that it is he, in the absence of the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), and the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis), who asks the first question. Because that party being based on family units as it is, I would have thought when the member for Riverdale is away, the member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) would have the next priority. As far as family goes, that party is closer knit than the Cosa Nostra.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I do not have a single relative in the party.

Mr. Sopha: The member will never go anywhere in that party.

But before I go on, and in the light of what I shall say later, I want to give myself the pleasure of saying to the new Premier (Mr. Davis) of the province—we are not allowed to say “Prime Minister” over here; the Leader of the Opposition washes our mouth out with soap—

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): With soft soap!

Mr. Sopha: —I wanted to take this first opportunity of congratulating him on his accession to the office of the first citizen of the province, and it is with a special delight that I do so when I remember that many years ago—where have they all gone? Where have those years gone, Mr. Speaker?—we were alumni at University College and were members of the student government at the same time and we were called to the bar of the province in the same year. So I can, in a very keen and enthusiastic way, share vicariously in the progress he has made. He has amounted to something.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He is not a bencher.

Mr. Sopha: No, he is not.

Mr. Nixon: Well, there now!

Mr. Sopha: He does not have that, but he and I here, notwithstanding that august body, we play in a tougher league here than there; they will be no difficulty to handle with the practice I get here.

I just want to acknowledge to him the terrible responsibilities he has taken on and amid the good fellowship of politics to wish him all the best in future years.

Mr. Speaker, it was on the Thursday night that CKSO at Sudbury said that they got 1,000 calls complaining that the Tory convention had replaced Red Skelton. That is what they said. On the Friday night they got 200 calls which said that Eagleson was better, though I must say that Eagleson gave me terrible moments of anguish.

I want to hastily pass over the presentation to the former Premier (Mr. Robarts). I suffered a torture of soul when I watched that. Do you remember when he handed him the plaque and he said it cost 39 cents. It said: “Happy sailing, good wishes, R. Alan Eagleson, president.” The only thing it lacked was the autograph of Bobby Orr.

I could see that the Premier suffered great torment, but ultimately Eagleson saved the day. He saved the day from an otherwise droll affair. When I saw that he and not Eddie Goodman was to be the chairman of the proceedings I whispered a sigh of relief realizing that our chances would go up apace.

We are one of those among the captive audience from Sudbury. We have always had only one station—just one—the CBC, so we are very sophisticated television critics. When you have a steady diet you know what is bad.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): And there is plenty of it on there.

Mr. Sopha: And the CBC coverage was abysmally bad. I say that seriously.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Donald MacDonald was the only real contribution.

Mr. Sopha: But you have to recognize the CBC for what it is. It is a theistic hierarchy. It is steeped in theism. When you arrive at the top of the heap, the pinnacle of achievement in the CBC, no power on earth can remove you from those dizzy heights.

And one of the things in Canada, let me say in passing, that in respect to television we suffer from, is a dearth of intelligent criticism of the medium. Unfortunately, with the passing of Nathan Cohen there really is not a pithy, genuine and intellectual criticism of the way that medium operates.

The member for Scarborough West mentioned Eagleson’s observation on the length of Mrs. Davis’s skirts. I heard that. He did make an observation. I forget whether he said Mrs. Davis should wear longer skirts or shorter skirts, and it does not matter really. But that allusion is nothing compared with the vulgarity of the press and television in jamming microphones in front of the ladies, the wives of the leadership candidates.

I suffered a moment of the deepest sympathy for that nice Mrs. Al Lawrence when the cretin poked a mike in front of her face and said, “And now, Mrs. Lawrence, how do you feel now that your husband has been defeated?” How did he expect her to feel? She felt terrible. The noble lady—nice looking. I have never seen her in person. She must have felt terrible because, as Al Lawrence said, she worked his way through law school. So did mine, incidentally, work my way through, bless her.

But in all the tasteless, pedestrian, commonplace, hackneyed rhetoric of speakers and commentators—which I will deal with in a moment—there were moments of exultation.

Mr. Stokes: Donald MacDonald then!

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member should have kept him as leader.

Mr. Sopha: At 1 o'clock in the morning my wife and I were watching the final vote and I was on my feet when the CBC characteristically reported inaccurately that they had Al Lawrence ahead—do you remember?—and I was on my feet saying, "Go get 'em, Al!" I said, "Phyllis, the heads will roll if he is elected"—and roll they did. Some are almost out of sight. Somebody wake up the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) down there; tell him I am talking about him.

Oh, the attrition was very great. What about the member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme). And the member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall)—he leads the pack. But I want to compare that to another.

The member for York South was a commentator and, as I will point out later, I asked the CBC how come he was a commentator. They said, "Well, he went through this process, he was a leader." Well, he is among the fallen. The member for York South tonight is running for the presidency of the NDP; maybe he is making a comeback. How do we know? He should sit in the second row where the member for Scarborough West used to. I told the member for York South he needed rear-view mirrors to watch him.

The member for Don Mills is the next doorman at the Constellation Hotel. Supposing we take a straw vote to determine which position is more important—president of the NDP or a connection with the Constellation Hotel? I vote for the member for Don Mills.

To get back to the CBC—it really deserves a word, Bill Casey, we have seen him from time to time up here, is sort of a backwoods Chet Huntley, the affected droll, giving only the slightest hint of his boredom with mere politicians. At times I thought he was going to fall asleep. Maybe his mind was numbed by the paralyzing effect of the rhetoric he was hearing. The apple-cheeked youngster from the University of Waterloo—they said he was the head of the department of political economy—I do not have his name. I suspect he was not old enough to vote. Frank McGee—a Davis man—everything Frank McGee said was directed to promoting the Prime Minister. I wondered how it was that the Attorney General, or the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) did not have somebody up in the booth. Well, Frank McGee is a relic of an age that has gone.

Mr. Nixon: That is what organization is!

Mr. Sopha: He does not fit the description of a successful politician.

Mr. Nixon: They did not have time.

Mr. Sopha: Do you know what a successful politician is? There is only one definition. He is the one who gets elected. None other ever fits. Then there was the man, as I adverted, the man who has become a fixture at these leadership conventions—old Donald A. himself. There he sat with the pacifier. And every time he took the pipe out he gave the impression he was saying something profound.

Mr. Pitman: And he always was.

Mr. Sopha: Giving up weighty encomiums on the political process for the lay public. The inside dope from an inside dope.

One word he used and he kept using it over and over again; and so it would not spoil the savour of the word I have not looked it up. I do not know what it means; I am not going to.

Mr. Stokes: It was "computation," was it not?

Mr. Sopha: It was the word "extrapolate."

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): It was a word left over from you.

Mr. Sopha: No, I have never used it. I do not know quite what it means. It has something to do with the projection of numbers. He used it in connection with the first, second and third vote, but he was extrapolating all over the place. And they tell me one middle-aged spinster called up and said, "He has got to stop it."

The relieving feature in the whole piece was when Frank McGee's father-in-law came in—that grand old man of Canadian writers, Gratton O'Leary. They had him in for a few minutes and he made some very acute observations. When he got tired of the company and Frank had disappeared from beyond the range of the lens, Gratton O'Leary said, "What have you got over there, Frank? Some scotch?" He needed it. But the presence of the member for York South raised a question that bothered me. I called the CBC; I spoke to Knowlton Nash himself. I said, "You have to be consistent. If you have the member for York South on at somebody else's convention, how is it last night on the TV of the NDP convention there is no Liberal or Conservative politician?"

Mr. Pitman: They had Dalton Camp on.

Mr. Sopha: I mean a viable politician. I pointed out that these are the Pharisees. Give the member for York South the opportunity with a pipe and he will come through every time—"Thank God we are not as other men"—as we have heard it over the years.

Tonight, of course, they are meeting in Ottawa. But I just want to make a passing reference. The Lewis dynasty is on the way—they tell me that David Lewis will win it on the first ballot; the member for Scarborough West is down there managing the campaign. And it seems that if there is a vacant office in politics at all, there is a Lewis running—there are any number of them. I think we should find out about the Pope's health.

Mr. M. B. Dymond (Ontario): Tell them about the pill!

Mr. Sopha: Then there was the high comedy of my old pal, Norman DePoe. They should have had Norman up in the booth at the Tory convention, if they could have got him in shape. He was interviewing that fellow from Philadelphia who owned the voting machine. Did you see that? He was interviewing him and Norman, like a good professional television interviewer, said to him, "What went wrong?" You know how the count went wrong; more of them voted than were registered. One of my children said, "Dad, you cannot trust the Tories." He said to the fellow, "What went wrong?" That ought to have brought a responsive answer.

The fellow from Philadelphia started talking about, "When I left the Royal York Hotel, I was going down in the elevator and I met this boy, and he looked up at me and he said, 'You are a crook.'" Norman, at this point, I thought, was going to throw up. He said, "I just asked you what went wrong! Just tell me what went wrong."

They should have had Eagleson in that spot. They should have had Eagleson interviewing Windy O'Neill. But I must not say too much about that because the matter is sub judice—I understand there is a little action going on in the courts, brought by Windy, and that if he is successful the Treasurer's inheritance is going to be diminished. I understand the man is well fixed.

That is enough. That is the impact it had upon me. The Premier was not here when the former Minister of Municipal Affairs was so indiscreet as to say that he is going to stay in office for nine years. He said, "The Prime Minister told me privately." He got a shocked look from the Minister of Trade and Development and he said "It was not in cabinet that he told me that he is going to stick around for nine years." Let me tell you right now, that looking at the total context I am now going to start his political funeral eulogy.

The Premier won, it was by a scant 44 votes. That is the magic number. Where is the measure of the contrast? As I see it, the difference between the Premier and the Attorney General is best summed up in caution against rashness. Here is one quotation:

The need for change was the message in the resignation of John Robarts at a time when he was strongest, said Mr. Lawrence. The government has to project a new image, a new thrust, new faces. He called himself the man who had been sitting as a back-bencher for 12 years and has seen things fall apart. We have to decentralize government. We cannot have civil servants and bureaucrats telling the people what is good for them from some remote place in Toronto.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Who said that?

Mr. Sopha: That is the new image. That is the Attorney General. Then at a later time he had this to say, "Lawrence said he would cut the number of ministers from the present 22 and form an inner executive committee." I look at the Leader of the Opposition and say—

Mr. Nixon: Great idea.

Mr. Sopha: —where have we heard that one before? An inner executive committee with less administrative responsibility.

An hon. member: All the way to the South Pole!

Mr. Sopha: I will start that again.

Lawrence said he would cut the number of ministers from the present 22 and form an inner executive committee of ministers with less administrative responsibility and more time to think.

Mr. Singer: That is good.

Mr. Sopha: One must pause there and say, "Well that is a new idea," and invite that.

Mr. Singer: Certainly, that does not include the Treasurer.

Mr. Sopha: And I continue the quotation:

More time to take a comprehensive view. Although he disagreed with Welch on the need for an early election, he indicated he felt the Robarts government had lost touch with the public. "The big thing I am trying to get across is that we must change," Lawrence said.

Mr. Nixon: A nice phrase!

Mr. Sopha:

"I know it is not going down well with some delegates, but if we bury our heads in the sand, we will be turfed out. Right?"

Now that is what what the leadership race was all about. And it serves a useful purpose to use it as a focus in order to lay before the House the sum of the attributes of what it is that ails Ontario. So what did the Premier say? What did the winner say? Here is one that is typical. Speaking at North Bay he said:

"We have contributed a great deal to the people in this province," Bill Davis told his audience. "We have made the odd mistake, but that is only natural. Now we are not looking back but ahead without any apologies for what we have done."

Mr. Nixon: As the Hon. Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) would say, it is part of our way of life.

Mr. Sopha: Part of our way of life!

Mr. Singer: Patronage remains a major mistake?

Mr. Sopha: I will return to the 44, but the others, the also-rans, deserve a passing reference. I start with the boy orator grown up, the man who probably made the best speech on the Thursday night. You will recognize him. He was the one who spoke early in the evening. In a paraphrase he said something like this:

If you do not believe in the good society, if you are not willing to take on exciting tasks, if you do not accommodate your thinking to change, then do not vote for me.

And they did not. But he deserves a measure of tribute. Along the campaign trail he had this to say—and it points to his difficulties. Listen to it:

"I have always believed that no society can consider itself truly progressive if all people within that society do not share in the benefits of the total society," Mr. Welch said last week, in explaining his selection.

Several convention delegates seized on the statement during Mr. Welch's whirlwind tour ridings Saturday, in search of leadership votes. "This sounds like more of the have's giving to the have-nots again," complained one delegate during a meet-the-candidate gathering in Etobicoke. "No more giveaways, the sleighride is over," declared another delegate. "We have to tell people on welfare to go out and work if they want something." A woman delegate pointing to the increasing number of people receiving unemployment insurance benefits said, "There are jobs available for the unemployed as domestic servants, for example, but people just won't take a job that is beneath their former level."

Well, those are symptomatic of the pathology that ails that party, I protest to you. People who think in that way that woman thought about the giveaways formed the number of that 44 votes. They barely managed to eke out a victory over the man who promised change.

Bert Lawrence—Don O'Hearn called him a new Adlai Stevenson—

Mr. Singer: He is not here either.

Mr. Sopha: I hope he did not buy 150 copies of that column because he should be aware Adlai Stevenson said "Flattery is all right as long as you don't inhale." Bert Lawrence talked about the quality of life as deserving a higher priority than an increase in the GNP. He said this:

We are moving from the quantitative era of government when we thought in terms of how many miles of road, how many hospitals, how many schools, how many this, how many that, into the qualitative era.

What Lawrence was saying was that the emphasis in society must now shift to a better life for everyone. But quality—how many people would this get through to, ponders the editorial writer.

He used devastating frankness about a cabinet colleague—another report, the Globe and Mail:

Lawrence, Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, said that one of the first orders of business if he became party leader will be to review what he called "the buck is a buck" approach of Stanley Randall, Minister of Trade and Development.

Well, poor old Stanley, he got reviewed.

Here is another of Bert Lawrence's gems, another place in time. He suggested the deputy ministers should also be shifted regularly to ensure freshness of approach to problems. Do you see what I am trying to point out to you, Mr. Speaker? What I am trying to point out to you is that in that leadership race they detected the illness that afflicts that party after 28 years in office.

As the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) said in North Bay last night to a magnificent gathering, there is not another democratic government in the western world that cannot shift the blame to any other party for the ills that afflict the province.

Mr. Singer: It was well said then; well said now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then we can take the credit for the wonderful province we have.

Mr. Sopha: And then, last but not least, there was the Duke of Kent himself. The brave old Duke of Kent, he had 10,000 men, he marched them up a very big hill and he marched them down again, and when they were up, they were up, up, up, and when they were down, they were down, down, down, and when they were only half way up, they were neither up nor down.

But he was not down for long, Senator Dave knew the way. He knew the way and Darcy followed in his wake. Ah, my heart cried when I saw him go. The press accounts had it, of course, that the deal was made the night before. I never saw this account denied. The Toronto Daily Star, February 13:

The McKeough dramatic and apparently spontaneous show of allegiance to Davis was in fact the climax of an anti-Lawrence alliance plotted two weeks ago by Davis and McKeough and cemented on the ballot before McKeough was eliminated. Provincial Treasurer Charles MacNaughton, Davis' chief strategist, said that when it was all over: "This was the prior commitment that we had, it worked very well."

Mr. Nixon: You can count on him to say something good, as usual.

Mr. Sopha: If that is so, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, because you will appreciate it, the now Treasurer was not completely honest with the TV cameramen when he said at the end of the second ballot that he had not made up his mind. That is what he said. He looked me right in the eye through the television screen when he said it. And I say again—I alluded to it before—if that's so, then "O false Sextus, that wrought the deed of shame!" is very well said.

Mr. Nixon: I see now the Attorney General is here, so you had better repeat some of this for his benefit.

Mr. Sopha: A delightful story is told by an eyewitness, an eavesdropper who overheard the conversation between the two Rasputins, Ernie Jackson and Eddie Goodman. They were standing looking up at the board where they posted the results and it seems that at the end of the third vote, when the numbers were put up, Lawrence had picked 108 and Davis had only picked up 74. Eddie said to Ernie, "Ernie, that"—you know, the offspring of a canine; you know what I mean—"has got us beat." And Ernie said, "Damn it, Eddie. You think I can't read a blackboard?"

Well, Lawrence picked up the 162 of McKeough's 346 and Davis only picked up 140. So McKeough's hold was tenuous. The funny one, of course, was the member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman). He had supported him all along the way; he could not stomach that and he rushed over to Al Lawrence's camp. He was the only one, the one of the noble four that I will define in a minute.

Mr. Nixon: He is the one who is still sitting up in the back row.

Mr. Singer: He will remain there forever.

Mr. Sopha: So I turned to the magic—44, by my count, supported Davis. Some of them were latecomers. John White—it took him two months to discern that Davis had better qualities. What a vote of loyalty—to find out that Davis was better than brand X—44 of them all, who do they speak for?

Four supported Lawrence—one in doubt; the chairman of the ONR. He is in doubt. The member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston)—as recently as this afternoon they did not know who he supported. He kept telling them he was on Al Lawrence's team: "He is my boss. He is in charge of the ONR." Wells, Hodgson, Reilly and Newman.

Mr. Singer: Yes, they would not even allow him to speak in the Throne debate.

Mr. Sopha: I admire them. They stood alone. The words of King Henry V are appropriate:

If we are marked to die, we are enow
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

They are especially appropriate—I have not got the clipping, but none will deny that he said it—especially appropriate in the light of the later remarkable interview with the Minister of Justice, in which he said he felt like leaving but one thing that would keep him would be to protect those four. Not a startling proposition: He would stay to protect them. Who is he protecting them from?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): He shakes his head. He is misquoted.

Mr. Sopha: If they need any protecting, is it any wonder that Leonard Reilly is the leader in prayer?

Mr. Singer: And the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson) cannot get to speak in the Throne debate.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, Well, there you have it. Then it all came down to Alan Eagleson's encomiums about the Premier's dress. That guy—I do not know. Is there any prospect of you getting rid of him? Are you having a meeting of the party?

Mr. Nixon: I think so.

Mr. Sopha: I hope you do not. He ought to be good for 20 seats if he keeps on—for us.

After the convention, it seems he can never resist the press. If they ask him a question, he has to answer.

Mr. Davis has recently lost 15 pounds and Mr. Eagleson wants him to lose 10 more. It makes him look less tired and psychologically it is better for him. He has also been urging the Premier to pay more attention to his dress. The loose-fitting suits he wore as Education Minister have been replaced by pinstripe suits with creases in the pants, no cuffs sometimes and the occasional wide tie.

Well, maybe until he got the raise in the Premier's office he could not afford to.

Will somebody inform Eagleson that since this House resumed he comes in here with such sartorial splendour that doubtless Thomas Carlyle smiles in his heavenly abode. Those wide-lapel suits like he has on tonight—

Mr. Nixon: Belt in the back.

Mr. Sopha: Those $15 neckties. John Bulloch is about to declare an extra dividend. I am going to pass over this portion, but if it was not the 44 over there, then perhaps it was the 52 so-called delegates at large. There was no doubt who was their choice. Listen to the names of some of them: John David Eaton—

Mr. Nixon: He is a good one.

Mr. Sopha: John Bassett.

Mr. Nixon: Another one.

Mr. Singer: Fine fellow.

Mr. Sopha: Ernie Jackson.

Mr. Singer: Great guy.

Mr. Sopha: Paul McNamara. Who elected them? In the Liberal Party—perhaps you will not consider it exultation to inform the House—we have no such animal as delegates at large. That is not the way we do it. We must have the mandate of the people.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): What about Weinstein?

Mr. Sopha: Well, as I watched, it had its more serious sides, and now I turn to one, Mr. Speaker. As I watched the charade unfold across the province, I had a persistent question in mind as to how it was being paid for. I have long been a supporter of some restraints on the excesses of spending for the goal of the office of leader of a political party.

Moss Munro of the Globe and Mail apparently is gifted with some insights, and his observations are very disturbing. Let us read some of them in to the record—I never saw these denied.

The Globe and Mail of Saturday, February 20. Will you hearken, Mr. Speaker, to what it says?

Altogether it can be said that the leadership race was a $1-million campaign, undoubtedly the most expensive in Ontario political history. My estimate of cash expenditures made by five cabinet ministers in their campaign for the leadership is based on discussions with campaign aides as well as observations of the campaign. The amount of money spent seems to correspond remarkably closely with the order in which the candidates finished.

The winner, Education Minister William Davis, probably spent between $150,000 and $175,000.

Mr. Singer: That is an awful lot of money.

Mr. Sopha: To continue:

The runner up, Mines Minister Lawrence, was in the same cash bracket. Municipal Affairs Minister McKeough spent more than $100,000. Provincial Secretary Welch spent about $85,000, and Financial and Commercial Affairs Minister Bert Lawrence was the poor man of the campaign with a cash budget of about $60,000.

Later on:

The motives behind all this largesse ranged from the altruistic to the venal. At one extreme are the contributors who want to help out a candidate even if he has little chance of winning. Somewhere in the middle are those who feel their contributions will guarantee access to the new Premier. Others seek the new Premier's favouritism. Still other contributors are quite frankly out to get the government contracts.

It goes on.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, no!

Mr. Singer: Perish the thought. It is just part of the way of life. That is what the Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) says.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It is provincial, not general.

Mr. Sopha: The large volume of contributions to the leadership campaign, and the questions those contributions raised, suggest a need for certain reforms. At some point there will have to be a limit on the amount of money that can be spent and, much more difficult to legislate, there will have to be laws forcing politicians to disclose the source of their funding.

Unless these reforms come about, there is going to be increasing suspicion and cynicism, sometimes justified, sometimes unjustified, about the nature of politics in this province. Later on, "James Lovick Limited did the advertising work for Mr. Davis." When and if this firm gets a large investment contract, will it be on the basis of its position as a large, established and reputable agency? Will the sceptics wonder aloud whether it had something to do with favours rendered?

Mr. Nixon: This party will wonder.

Mr. Sopha: "Mr. Davis' campaign, along with most of the others,"—will my friend from Downsview listen to this one?—"received sizable contributions from large real estate developers."

Mr. Singer: Oh, very interesting!

Mr. Sopha: "Again, this could raise suspicions, doubtlessly unjustified, that these developers will receive a special hearing when the new cabinet needs to decide on how rigidly to enforce the Toronto-centred region plan."

Mr. Singer: Yup! That is going to be very fascinating! If we ever get a decision.

Mr. Sopha: This plan, as it stands, would bar proposals—

Mr. Singer: What proposal? The Spadina Road extension?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member should not be critical until it happens.

Mr. Sopha: All right. That is the way Mr. Munro put it. I put it in this light.

Mr. Singer: What is the Premier going to do for Rohmer? Is he going to give him back his city?

An hon. member: Rohmer? Who is he?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): From the lips of a "Grit," it is too much.

Mr. Sopha: If there was nothing improper, or to use Mr. Munro's words "venal" in the million-dollar campaign, Mr. Speaker, if there was nothing—

Mr. Yakabuski: —nothing between you and the member for Sarnia.

Mr. Sopha: —none of that quality to it, then it is quite appropriate so say to the Premier: Table the list of contributors in this House. Disclose their identities and the amount of money they gave. The same applies to the lesser lights, those who were unsuccessful. I think in the light of that column by Ross Munro—

An hon. member: Speak up, speak up.

Mr. Sopha: —that he can do nothing less than that.

An hon. member: In a couple of weeks I will tell you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: A while ago, the member for Peterborough was asking for a dialogue in the House. I guess it has started.

An hon. member: Where does the member think we are now?

Mr. Pitman: Dialogues all evening.

Mr. Sopha: All right. I think that is a fair challenge to put to him because, as one member of the House who has never been involved in that context, I want to say that it is a matter of conscience to a great many people in this province that is very disturbing—that that kind of money is spent—

Mr. Pitman: Certainly.

Mr. Sopha: —on seeking the plum of the leadership of the party and especially when with it goes the highest office that can be bestowed upon a politician in this province. That office ought not to have attached to it any suggestion of wrong-doing whatsoever. Let him table it in the House. When he rises to speak tonight, let him tell us where the $175,000 came from.

Mr. Simonett: He will.

Mr. Yakabuski: The member must stay for that, too.

Mr. Simonett: The member for Sudbury had better not run away.

Mr. Yakabuski: Before the cock crows thrice.

Mr. Pitman: The member for Renfrew South should take it easy. Just slow down.

Mr. Sopha: I want to turn—Mr. Speaker, will you tell the members I am going to leave them alone for a moment?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

An hon. member: The back-benchers are very happy with the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I want to turn, if the members will be a bit silent, to the modern revisionists. It is appropriate. There is an appropriate term for them, when one looks at what is going on at Ottawa—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: —and the demolition of the Waffle group. These are the modern revisionists.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member for Sudbury is on much sounder ground.

Mr. Pitman: Oh! He was much better a few minutes ago.

Mr. Sopha: Tommy Douglas summed it up—

Mr. Pitman: The Treasurer was not here!

Mr. Sopha: —yesterday. You do not know how helpful this assistance is. Tommy Douglas summed it up when he said—get the beauty of this—I heard it myself on the radio, “We are no philosophical society involved in esoteric theories.” That is exactly what is wrong with them. That is how far they have come from the Regina manifesto. He said “esoteric.” I thought at first that he had said “erotic,” because there was a story told by Bruce Rogers—

Mr. Stokes: The member for Sudbury never did hear very well.

Mr. Pitman: If the member would stop talking long enough he might hear.

Mr. Sopha: —yesterday at the convention. Apparently they make a big thing out of economy. Now can the members imagine the contrast, a million-dollar campaign—

Mr. Pitman: What a contrast to this party's campaign.

Mr. Sopha: —the tremendous buffet they say that the Treasurer put on. You know, you wonder what the poor people are doing. I do.

Mr. Pitman: They pay more for balloons than we do for our whole convention.

Mr. Sopha: The opulence of that party—

An hon. member: Balloons and baloney.

Mr. Sopha: Compared with that one where they have an economy measure whereby they sell box lunches—

Mr. Pitman: Right.

Mr. Sopha: —at the convention. Nothing wrong with that. But yesterday somebody put in each one of the box lunches, a card—

Mr. Pitman: A Liberal, I will bet.

Mr. Sopha: —advertising a show down the street featuring topless beauties.

An hon. member: Free enterprise.

Mr. Sopha: Apparently, what had happened was—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Share and share alike. Share the wealth.

Mr. Sopha: I say to my friend from Windsor-Walkerville that some of those hot-shot union people from Windsor had come in and they had organized the topless girls. It certainly is comforting to note, as we would not believe, that they might engage in some diversion. You know, to hear them tell about it, they never would. It is comforting to note that they have feet of clay like the rest of us.

Mr. Yakabuski: They were union girls.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): That is the basis of a socialist foundation.

Mr. Sopha: But it is sad to see, Mr. Speaker, the obliteration of conscience in that party. The death of us all. The lust for power is everything. Schreyer turned his back on socialism. The Laxer people, as far as I am concerned—

Mr. Pitman: Come on now.

Mr. Sopha: The Laxer people are the only ones that make any sense. Some of their ideas are very attractive. They are almost beyond dispute. As Laxer pointed out on television last night about Quebec—

An hon. member: And tonight!

Mr. Sopha:—he said we have to sit down with Quebec from square one and chart the future relationship. He said it is quite wrong to say that, put in extremis of Quebec threatening to separate, we will not use force. He said that is a very negative approach.

Now I am one with him on that—that accords with my thinking—

Mr. Pitman: What did Mr. Trudeau say?

Mr. Sopha:—it finds a sympathetic response with me.

Mr. Pitman: What about Pierre?

Mr. Sopha: Because I am one who is conscious that in English Canada there is a significant strain of belief that any oppression toward Quebec is all right.

If unemployment in Ontario was 11 per cent or 12 per cent, as it is in Quebec, the Globe and Mail, the Toronto Daily Star and the Toronto Telegram would be yelling bloody murder. And the Ontario members of the House of Commons—you would think that Armageddon had arrived!

But in Quebec, you see, that is all right. I am one of those who believe that you must look at the root causes of violence in Quebec.

Mr. Pitman: I wish the member had been around last fall.

Mr. Stokes: What about Trudeau and Marchand then?

Mr. Sopha: Do members remember the debate in the House of Commons on the special grant? I had the advantage of meeting those senators and members of the House of Commons who made up the constitutional committee, that travelling show under Mark MacGuigan—

Mr. Singer: David Walker too?

An hon. member: No. He is on the political—

Mr. Sopha: This is serious business. I had the advantage of meeting them and telling them my feelings about that debate in the House of Commons which involved a special grant to French-Canadian students to provide them with summer employment. Do members recall that one? When the opposition felt they had ferreted out what was a secret—I think it was something like $2 million—they jumped on the government about favouring Quebec. It is part of the syndrome in this country that is popular with some people, the game of “hate Quebec.” You are not with it if you do not say something scurrilous about Quebec. In this city—

Mr. Singer: The Minister of Agriculture and Food says he needs an interpreter four times a day.

Mr. Sopha: In this city almost every day—

Mr. Singer: He does it four times every day, and listen to him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: In this city almost every day CFRB carries on a veritable war against Quebec; almost every day. I heard them this morning about the resolution concerning the monarchy that they said originated in Quebec. Well on this matter the NDP, as on several others—it is becoming apparent that this convention is rife with hypocrisy—

Mr. Stokes: That is nonsense!

Mr. Pitman: We have stated unequivocally that we are prepared to allow them their own self-determination.

Mr. Sopha: Hypocrisy in their attitude toward women and women's rights.

Mr. Pitman: No other party has stated this.

Mr. Sopha: I alluded to the struggle that went on yesterday by the women to get a certain number of seats in the governing council. Let me tell you that they had a convention at Kingston about a year ago—some will recall that—and the wife of James Laxer, the lady with the lovely name, she goes by her single name, raised the question of women's rights to be represented on the council and they did not elect one, not one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: And the hypocrisy of their attitude toward foreign investment Laxer and his people said yesterday they were beaten down in a resolution that would empower the government to initiate inquiries into the financial affairs of industry that threatened to lay off people and close down for economic reasons. They were beaten down. Is that not what the member for Riverdale was saying here? Is that not the very thing he was saying? Is that not what he wanted with Dunlop Tire? You see the lust for power.

The leader of the NDP in Ontario, the member for Scarborough West is attempting to become respectable. Put aside the radicalism, put aside the idealism, put aside the philosophy; power is everything!

They have become a bourgeois party and the Maoists that split that party right down the middle between those with conscience and those who want power are eventually going to liquidate them. They will be politically liquidated. Is it any wonder they never got any more than 17 per cent of the vote?

Mr. Pitman: Absolute nonsense!

Mr. Sopha: I say to my friend from Peterborough, the people of Ontario are smarter than he thinks. They will not turn to his party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Fine, fine!

I said at the beginning—and I make no apologies—that to look at these conventions gives an insight into the political climate and the political texture of the province today and what the issues are about in this province.

I have a couple of other items that I want to just rush through in passing. Concerning this committee on productivity, I want to register a dissenting voice; I want to put Sopha down at the end of the bench. If everybody else in the House approves of that committee, then I want to be the lone dissenter.

The name of it repels me—committee on productivity of government. Government is not a business according to my political philosophy. It does not have to be run like a business. Government deals with human beings, with human problems. It makes responses that are not businesslike. That is the ethos of government.

And I am not at all impressed, along with my dissent, with the dramatis personae that make up that committee. Deputy Minister of Lands and Forests G. H. U. Bayly—well let me confess that, having been around here for 12 years you develop certain interests and certain pastimes to while away the hours and the moments of rumination and reflection, I just say in passing that for a long time now I have been watching the progress of Bayly. He is a man or the move, very much on the move.

The Deputy Minister of Justice, the Deputy Treasurer, the secretary to the cabinet. One questions: These people, fraught with human qualities and human strivings and human ambitions like the rest of us, do these people, one wonders aloud, in making their report, perhaps carve a niche? Do they carve out, do they set the context of the place where they hope to fit?

I have no responsibility to speak for the Leader of the Opposition, but I want to say this, having thought upon it—I want to be very careful that my words are not understood—I do not want the Globe and Mail portraying something tomorrow that is not accurate—I want to say that I am a firm believer, buttressed as I am by the Minister of Justice—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Misunderstood!

Mr. Sopha: I do not want to be misunderstood—but I am of the firm belief that when there is a change of ministry—as we hope and expect there will be a change of ministry when the man from Brant is called by the Lieutenant Governor—I believe that deputy ministers' resignations should be on the table; and I confine that to deputy ministers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are going right back to Hepburn.

Mr. Sopha: Oh no, I knew the obtuse—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Talk about patronage. The member has the nerve to talk about patronage when he—

Mr. Nixon: Too bad the Treasurer did not win that top job, he would have been so good.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Will the Premier muzzle him?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will offer to restrain my colleagues if the member for Sudbury can restrain his.

Mr. Sopha: I will try.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Particularly the member for Downsview.

Mr. Sopha: Sometimes I think that to have full participation in a debate you need a baseball bat. I knew somebody as obtuse as the Treasurer would seize upon that one.

Mr. Stokes: The biggest heckler is the member for Downsview.

Mr. Sopha: I am not saying anybody else other than deputy ministers because I base that on this assertion: Deputy ministers are the focal point of policy-making power in the department. In very large measure, as the Attorney General said, they make the policy. Many a minister we can see after a dozen years—and who would know that more than John Robarts—does very—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (London North): The member for London North.

Mr. Sopha: I did not want to provoke him, but who would know better than he that ministers vary in quality. Some would be involved in the policy making process; others would not. I have seen them over there that if you asked them a question like the time of day they would not tell you until the deputy phoned the Dominion observatory. That is the type I mean.

I am saying that I would have it that deputy ministers, as the Minister of Health said, should be shifted around. In a change of ministry the resignations of deputy ministers should be on the line.

Now the other part of this committee on productivity—I am a dissenter—the director of Gulf Oil, the president and general manager of Lake Ontario Steel Company, the president of Noranda Mines, the president of Oshawa Wholesale. Now some would think—and I cannot say it, I cannot lend them the dignity of assent—some would think that is a tremendous businesslike committee, to give government an elan vital of business. You know, to make it really efficient; the kind of rhetoric you would hear at a stockbrokers' convention, at a meeting of the executive of the chamber of commerce. But I certainly have my suspicions when government moves in that direction.

Well the Premier made a statement that I am not going to tarry with. I was glad—I was worried, you know; I was worried about Clare Westcott; he had formed part of that statement. When I got back I asked where old Clare was and somebody told me to my horror, that the Premier had left him up in Education. He was marooned up there. Somebody told me; he said: "Clare is going to stay up in Education and Bob Macaulay's brother is the big noise. He is the big noise."

Well, you can imagine my relief when I heard Wescott, the genius behind the scenes, had arrived. I do not know what to call him, but if he was a female, I would call him Madame de Pompadour.

He is the fellow who coined the phrase—he said, "My man up or out." He also said during the convention, "Davis has IOUs he does not even know about." Some of them were not paid.

Well, I turn now to a difficult, a very difficult aspect on which I searched my conscience and with which I had not hoped that I would have to deal; I regret very much that I must. I must so that I will have enough salve in my conscience to sleep tonight, and that is to refer to a speech made by my colleague from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). So the House will know what I am talking about, I will read the whole thing into the record to provide the context. This speech was delivered on April 19—Monday of this week. I was there and I heard it. The portion I want to read in, I will read right through until I finish:

Mr. Sargent: We have a story here in February 3 Hansard on the House of Commons debate. Hon. Mr. Sharp was asked a question. He states, Mr. Speaker, that they made a loan of $207 million to India with a maturity of 50 years at an interest rate of zero per cent.

The shocking thing about it is that we have in this country—40 per cent of the money going into Ottawa comes from Ontario—we have eggheads down there who are running around the world and who never worked in business. They have always been parasites working for the government, never knowing how to run a business, never having had to meet a payroll and they have the right to go around the world, making loans like this, when we have three-quarters of a million people out of work.

And later, on page 586—I was reading from 585:

Mr. Pitman: Oh, for heaven's sake.

An hon. member: What does the member for Sudbury say to that one?

Mr. Sargent: I think it is high time we had this government of ours go down and lay the cards on the table and say: "We are not in favour of such foreign-aid giveaways. If they are reciprocal, if we are getting industry back, then there is merit in it but a lot of these deals are not reciprocal. They are long-term deals.

Mr. Pitman: Will the member for Sudbury get to his fellow member?

I want to tell you where I stand on that. I entirely dissociate myself from those remarks.

Those remarks about the aid to India, the loan to India, put in that frame of reference in which he put them are against all I want to do in public life. I am of the belief that we do not give enough.

Not only are we in danger of losing the goodwill of the marginal peoples of the world; but if the pragmatists want it that way, we are actually endangering our own continuity.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Quiet! The hon. member is making a great speech.

Mr. Sopha: I want Mr. Sharp to know that there is one Liberal down here—and I know the Leader of the Opposition and many of my colleagues are others—who believe that we do not give enough in foreign aid.

I want to put it in this context so that something good will come out of this. Every so often there is a new arrival in the press gallery. He is usually from the Globe and Mail, and he writes an article. After he is here for a couple of days he writes an article saying that we Liberals are not up to much.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: It is all right. That is all right. There is a free press, but to some of us it becomes tedious.

We have had many of our ideas accepted. We have very much formed a part of the government of this province. We have voted unanimously on many policies that have bettered the life of the people of Ontario. For myself, when I first raised the question that we should stop the alienation of Crown lands in this province seven years ago, I could not get a supporter over there. Now it is fashionable.

As Marx said, "There is nothing more powerful than an idea whose time has come." So it is, so it is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Come again, I cannot hear!

Mr. Sopha: The fact is, against that context—please listen to what I say, I am soon going to end.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The fact is that we have an excellent leader of our party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Long may he stay there.

Mr. Sopha: He is a man, Mr. Speaker, of keen mind, of indefatigable energy. He suffers many heartbreaks about some of the things the rest of us do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The fact is that when the member for Grey-Bruce or anyone else makes a speech like that—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Is there a doctor in the House?

Mr. Nixon: I will survive.

Mr. Sopha: When the member for Grey-Bruce makes a speech like that—

An hon. member: Gather round me!

Mr. Sopha: —it detracts from the respect that he ought to have, because it reflects directly upon him.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Throw him out of the caucus; throw him right out of the caucus!

Mr. Sopha: Our leader, sir, is a man of deep compassion and he is admirably suited—I say to you genuinely, sincerely and with every timbre of consciousness of the truth of it, in my words—that he is a man who is admirably suited to deal with the anxious problems that confront the people of Ontario.

Why do I use the words "anxious," "anxiety"—two particularly appropriate words to describe the psychic state of too many of our people in this province? What do I mean by "anxiety"? It is obvious enough. The growing addiction to drugs of every variety, oceans of alcohol, mountains of nicotine, millions of pills—down they go, drug after drug. An incapacity to control change or stabilize society drives more and more people—oh yes, the government does not know how serious it is. Let it be noted that some of them laughed.

An incapacity to control change or stabilize society drives more and more people into a febrile search for an identity and release through drugs.

What does the government do? Its response is the appointment of yet another committee.

What do I mean by "anxiety"? Not enough decent houses. What do we get? An announcement that yet another commercial complex will go up along Toronto's shore and the threat of the creation of a sprawling urban megalopolis which will stretch from Fort Erie to Oshawa to Barrie.

What do we get? Anxiety. We get the refusal of aid to the separate schools. Refusal of aid to the separate schools means to deny any possible efficacy to the religious dimension in the training of the young. It is an age when it is fashionable to decry the value of the religious experience. You are not with it if you do not.

Yet Sister Patricia McKinnon, the principal at Marymount in Sudbury, tells me that of the 600 girls in the school they have had no drugs among them. But they have them at Sudbury High, they have them at Lasalle, they have them at Nickel District Collegiate, they have them at Sheridan Technical School. They have them at the school where the little girl who came to our house to babysit told us, "The other day the son of a clergyman asked me if he could walk home with me and on the way he asked me if I wanted to go on an LSD trip." So the little girl said, "I said, 'Don't ever speak to me again.'"

Is there some value in the religious experience in the separate schools that deserves cultivation? Is that the question? Are we to be prisoners of the straitjacketed thinking that the Premier exhibited in Ottawa when he refused those students and gave them a bland and emphatic "no"—that straitjacketed thinking that he says is our policy over the decades.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How can the member be bland and emphatic at the same time?

Mr. Nixon: That remains to be seen.

Mr. Sopha: Amid all the yacking of the Treasurer, I say to him tonight with assurance, in speaking for all of us here, that our policy of aid to separate schools is morally right. It is morally right!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Our amendment for many other reasons deserves the support of the House.

I must, before I sit down, deal with the NDP amendment. There is one section in it that does not attract me very well, before I turn to another one. We are going to support this amendment, subject to the qualification that I am now going to make.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, cut it out so I can finish and give everybody a break.

Mr. McKeough: There is nobody there to support.

Mr. Pitman: We will have them here; do not worry.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is it; bring up the reserves.

Mr. Sopha: I say to the Premier, from now on the Treasurer does not get in after 10 o'clock without a saliva test.

They have it in number 10 of their amendment—I am not going to read the whole thing:

10. The failure of the government to spur, in particular the processing of northern raw materials and the development of secondary and tertiary industry in the north by refusing to:

(a) Establish a Crown corporation for mine exploration and development, and to force the pace of expansion through public enterprise and, if appropriate, engaging in joint ventures with private enterprises already active in the mining sector.

Listening to what David Lewis and the others are saying down at Ottawa, I thought they were against nationalization. Maybe this is a splinter group here. But that one does not particularly enthuse me, because I am of the belief that private enterprise does a much better job in the exploitation of the mining natural resources. I am able to dream up much more effective ways of getting the public share, the public piece, off the top of our natural resources, as I have said here many times.

Now they would have us, by supporting them, support number 11.

Mr. Stokes: Why do the member's conferees in Ottawa not do it, then? Stop being a hypocrite!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member is losing his own party. They are all leaving.

Mr. Singer: They will be back.

Mr. Sopha: I am just trying to finish; I have an obligation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Number 11 says:

The failure of the government to establish a universal public automobile insurance plan at a cost based on compensation regardless of fault.

There is no way that we will support that one; there is no way! Our vote in favour of the amendment is with clear qualification that this party as no part—

Mr. Pitman: The insurance industry got to the hon. member, eh?

An hon. member: A sad world.

Mr. Sopha: —that this party as no part of its policy advocates the nationalization of auto insurance.

I remember the time when I first came into the House—

Mr. Stokes: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pitman: What about Saskatchewan? Premier Thatcher thinks it is a great idea.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: —when I first came here I was quite surprised when Leslie Frost—

An hon. member: I think it is a great idea.

Mr. Sopha: —Mr. Speaker, said at that time we had 36,000 civil servants; and now, today, 12 years later, we have over 60,000—

Mr. Nixon: Not counting Hydro!

Mr. Sopha: So this party in the nationalizing—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: —of auto insurance would want to add legions to those members. That we cannot support.

Mr. Stokes: The hon. member does not want to save 20 per cent in administration costs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The other thing to be said about auto insurance—and I speak as a lawyer who has had a great deal to do in the settling of insurance claims—is I can say genuinely that in recent years, in the last two or three years, the attitude of the insurance companies in adjudicating claims of persons injured on highways has been tremendously more flexible and progressive. There has been tremendous improvement—a greater willingness to settle, larger settlements, easier to deal. They have given up the traditional defences—

Mr. Stokes: And great for the lawyers.

Mr. Sopha: They have—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Hi, Judas!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: All right, on that basis—

Mr. Stokes: In case the member for Grey-Bruce does not know it, he has been completely repudiated.

Mr. Pitman: There is blood all over the floor under his chair.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: With a meat axe!

An hon. member: It was shameful!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member for Grey-Bruce was an embarrassment to his party. The member for Sudbury said so tonight.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, the trouble with that group over there is that they were never able to understand, either the dimensions or the pathology of change that has taken place in this province since the beginning of the Second World War to the present day.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): He was not very kind to the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): He may join us but leave his policies behind.

Mr. Sopha: It is quite—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where would he rather be?

Mr. Sopha: —beyond the appreciation of the nature and dimensions of that age; it is quite beyond the capacities of the Wally Downers, the Norris Whitneys, the Erskine Johnstons. I no longer believe that there is much validity in the old adage spoken by Voltaire—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: When the member for Sudbury is as tried and true as those men, then he can laugh.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Where has the minister been for supper?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member for Parkdale has not had a smile on his face since he came into this House.

Mr. Trotter: I look at the minister. Why should I smile?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Trotter: The minister is a crazy guy. What is wrong with him? He is acting nuts.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: There will be those in Huron county who will say that the minister is out to lunch.

Mr. Yakabuski: The member should leave the chamber immediately.

Mr. Sopha: I no longer believe there is much validity in the old adage spoken by Voltaire: "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." There are profound new phenomena that man has not encountered in his previous history.

For one thing, change and innovation are now built into the culture with the news media. If you watch press and television closely—

Mr. Yakabuski: The member will be a long time.

Mr. Sopha: —you begin to understand that with them change is a vested interest.

Mr. Yakabuski: He destroyed the whole opposition a minute ago. It has all gone flat. He is through.

Mr. Sopha: Television has had a great deal to do with the weakening of the mores, which were suitable for and—

Mr. Yakabuski: It has gone flat. He is through.

Mr. Sopha: —binding together for a rural society. Rural Ontario has disappeared largely as the people have moved into the cities, and there has been a destruction of the old moral codes.

Mr. Yakabuski: He is destroying it. It does not mean anything any more. We were listening, but not any more.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The people over there will go down to defeat, because they are a rural party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: They have not been able to assimilate to the changing pattern of life in the cities and the city people will destroy them.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: We are and always have been a party of change, not change for its own sake but change as a device—

Mr. Yakabuski: They are ashamed of him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He has been watching CBC too much.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Leader of the Opposition had him write these speeches.

Mr. Sopha: —to better the lot of those we serve. That is the essence of the Liberal philosophy. That was said by a great Liberal statesman. In the light of the present disabilities that afflict the people of Ontario—

Mr. Yakabuski: The member is flat; he is through.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is beginning to sound like the NDP.

Mr. Sopha: —I find the words of Laurier inviting when he said, "Evil are the men who see injustice and having the power to correct it, do nothing."

There is a great deal to be done in this province to root out injustice. Let us get on with the heroic task, but first let us have an election to determine who shall be the stewards of the people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Give him hell.

Mr. Yakabuski: Keep it clean now. Do not be like the member for Sudbury.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the Throne debate, I do so with somewhat mixed emotions, and I do not want that to be misunderstood.

I have rarely seen an unhappier group than I have seen sitting across the House here on this occasion. I listened to the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), and I have to say this in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker. Parts of his speech tonight were the most delightful that I have listened to in this House.

I would only make this observation, Mr. Speaker—It is, to me, very typical of what the Liberals do not have to offer to the people of this province—the only thing the member for Sudbury could offer to the Legislature here tonight was one of the most significant pieces of entertainment related to the convention of our party. This was his total contribution to what he felt this province should be doing.

Although I will share this with him—these perhaps are not in the order that I planned—I agree with the observation that he made as it relates to the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). To me it was a very significant revelation as to the thinking of some members of the Liberal Party, of the parochial attitude they take and their lack of regard and interest in those peoples beyond our own borders. To me, the member for Grey-Bruce, I think, deserved the kind of castigation he received from his colleague on the front bench in this Legislature here tonight.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Come down and look at the problems in my area.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I say that, Mr. Speaker, in a very kindly way, because perhaps there is yet time to learn. Perhaps he still has time to recognize that this country does have an obligation that extends beyond our own borders.

Mr. Speaker, I really recognize it as traditional, but I was inspired by the member for Sudbury on that one issue—the only one tonight—to offer my congratulations to you for the manner in which you have conducted the affairs of this House.

In reading back through Hansard over the past eight years since I have been a minister of the Crown, I discovered that I really have not participated in the Throne debate. This is, I think, the first time since I had the honour to move the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne some time in 1960. However, in checking through Hansard, I find the verbiage that I had contributed in my other capacity as Minister of Education was perhaps lengthy enough that they did not miss my contributions on the Throne debate itself.

I want, Mr. Speaker, to say this to the member for Sudbury. I appreciate the very kind observations he made to me as the leader of my party and as the Prime Minister of this province. I say to him and I say to his colleague, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), and to the slightly decimated group from the socialists here tonight, that in spite of all the political differences that we may have in this House from time to time, and in spite of the byplay that is part of the democratic process and one that we all find stimulating, I can only say to the members of this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, that I recognize the onerous responsibilities that are part of the Prime Minister's job in this province. I can say to them, in a very non-partisan fashion, that it is my intention to discharge these responsibilities in a way that will bring credit, not just to the government but to this Legislature and to the people of this province.

We have talked about the convention tonight, and I am not going to refer to it at great length. It has been brought back to me tonight on this occasion, as it was by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), and by the member for Brant some few days ago. I remember the occasion very well—memories really that perhaps one looks back on with somewhat mixed feelings.

I can only say this to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to my colleagues and to the members of this Legislature—and this is partisan—that I was proud to have been associated with four other very excellent candidates, any one of whom, I would say this with respect, would make a very excellent leader for a party that might be situated opposite.

One of the very great and significant aspects of that convention, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party in the Province of Ontario was able to find five men of capacity, and dedication of spirit, and enthusiasm, not only as it relates to the party, but this province. In a way that, I think, indicates very clearly the kind of success that this party will have whenever the Prime Minister determines that he will test the feelings of the electorate in this province.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister is still prepared to let the people decide, is he? He is still prepared to let the people decide that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh I certainly am, and I am very confident of what their decision will be.

Mr. Nixon: Let us go and find out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I look across the House, Mr. Speaker, at my lonely friend from Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) and I think back not too many months to the time when he himself participated in a convention that to me was just so preset, so dictated by those who had this convention organized some many months in advance—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): That is utter nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that there was no question of its outcome. I speak for all my colleagues when we extend to him a very real measure of sympathy; because very frankly, Mr. Speaker, the member for Peterborough never had a chance.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Please do not waste your sympathy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He never had a chance. I only regret, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the socialist group is not with us tonight—

Mr. Pitman: He is away on very important business.

Mr. Stokes: We do not need the Prime Minister's sympathy, we need action.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that he has found that family—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Shall we say his heart belongs to daddy? Shall we say that? His heart belongs to daddy!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the member for Scarborough West finds his family obligations more important than his obligations to the public of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order. The member for Peterborough has the floor.

Mr. Pitman: On a point of order, I think it has been the practice in this House for this House to be recessed very often when the Liberal Party was holding a leadership convention and has not been in session when the Conservative Party was doing the same. I think that is the case.

I think that when the last Liberal leadership race took place—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Point of order? With respect, that is no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: Point of information—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough was stating a point of order and it is quite proper that the Speaker should hear him out. It is not proper for any member of the House to state whether or not it is a point of order. That is for the Speaker to determine.

Mr. Nixon: It is a point of order, it refers to a custom of the House.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion it is not a point of order with respect to the regulations of this House. The hon. Prime Minister has the floor.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for anticipating your ruling. Where was I?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): The Prime Minister was being sorry for the member for Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh yes, I was extending my concern to the worrier—the member for Peterborough.

But I am very serious about this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pitman: The Prime Minister was making some rather inappropriate remarks about where members of this party are.

Mr. Stokes: Unworthy of a Premier of this province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I am very serious about this, Mr. Speaker. I want the member—

Mr. Pitman: This is a national party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right, but this is a province and he has a responsibility here in this House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: If there was a national convention of his party the Prime Minister would be there.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): That is why he was down at Mount Royal for half of one session, too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! It would be most delightful if the members of the government would let their leader speak.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, please do not ever let me be cut off from the voluntary and very able assistance I get from my colleagues during these debates.

Mr. Stokes: And the Prime Minister is going to need it, believe me.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But Mr. Speaker, I want the record to show this, and I want the member for Peterborough to convey to his leader, that I do not want to hear in the future references made by him, as he did in this House the other day, as to the numbers of people sitting on this front bench to listen to the Leader of the Opposition, in this debate or other debates. I think the record should show that at this particular moment there are five members of the New Democratic Party participating in one of the very important debates of this Legislature.

An hon. member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Pitman: That was pretty cheap.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Pretty honest too. The member cannot duck it.

Mr. Pitman: That is a national convention and the issue of the relationship of Ontario and Quebec is very important. He has a very real responsibility, a very important responsibility to be there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we organized the work of this House so we could have the vote on the Throne debate tonight to help accommodate the members of the New Democratic Party.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): That is right. Where are they? Yes. They can go to Ottawa tomorrow.

Mr. Pitman: This is a province which belongs to a nation and the issue of Ontario's relationship to the rest of this country is equally as important as what is going on here.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh get off it! Make the Legislature relevant. That is nonsense. They do not even show up.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I read very carefully what the leader of the New Democratic Party said in his opening of the Throne debate. His references to my colleagues and their attendance here related to their interest and must be replied to.

Mr. Pitman: If we were the government we would call this Legislature off so the Prime Minister could go to Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough does not have the floor and he will cease interrupting in a loud voice the speech of the Premier. Interruptions now and again are allowable but not continuously.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): The Prime Minister did not mention that the whole Liberal front bench is here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was going to come to that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: And they are a lot of help, too!

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was going to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition on having all of his colleagues on the front bench here to listen to my contribution tonight. I appreciate it.

Mr. Nixon: Where was the Premier earlier this evening when the representative of the NDP was winding up the debate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I heard every word of it.

Mr. Nixon: He should have been in his place.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I heard every word of it. I can quote chapter and verse on his worries about the colleges of applied arts and technology, and their relevance in the educational system. Not only can I quote it, I have heard it a half a dozen times before.

Mr. Pitman: On a point of order, the Prime Minister was not in his place.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, quite right Mr. Speaker, but for the edification of the member for Peterborough I have very good communication. I listened to it; it is all there in my office.

Mr. Pitman: They can all listen to it somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I heard it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Is that what the member for Scarborough West is doing, listening in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now Mr. Speaker, to try to move from the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: I doubt that we will hear anything new tonight from that side of the House either.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member for Thunder Bay would not recognize anything new if he heard it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to deal very briefly with some of the important issues other than partisanship and conventions and leadership, because we could spend hours discussing these matters, and I have a whole file full of things that I wanted to say, through you, to the member for Downsview and others who made their contributions. The observations of the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), tonight, Mr. Speaker—I heard those as well—as they related to his description of this party, I do not think do him one bit of credit.

Mr. Nixon: He mentioned patronage, did he?

Hon. Mr. Davis: He even used the term corruption. What I find very intriguing—

Mr. T. Reid: I defined it quite specifically, too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, he did indeed. I listened to his excerpts and his readings from the dictionary. He is very good at quoting academic references.

I find very intriguing the references made in the question period this afternoon to the revelations that we have had from Ottawa, from a certain candidate on that occasion; and very intriguing the observation from the member for Sudbury here tonight that if the Liberal Party were ever to assume office in the province, which it will not, not in the foreseeable future, that all the deputy ministers would be relieved of their responsibilities.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a point of order or privilege?

Mr. Sopha: I did not say that. I only went so far as to say that with the change of ministry the resignations should be on the line. I did not say anything about relieving them of their responsibilities at all.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Same thing!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: What is the difference? It sounds like Mitch Hepburn.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree. The member for Sudbury said their resignations should all be available the moment the ministry changes. I accept this as a correction to what I said. I think the import and the intent were exactly the same.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) is not even a deputy minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do have to get through a very lengthy file of matters that I hope will be of some interest to all members of this House.

Some time later this morning I intend to leave this city to travel to Ottawa to have a meeting with the Prime Minister of Canada. On this occasion—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand he is there and I will be there as well.

Mr. Nixon: Now the Premier is sounding like the Globe and Mail. Is he going to give us a lecture on the Prime Minister of Canada not being in his place?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the government changes, the Globe and Mail is going to have to resign.

Mr. Pitman: The Premier is going to Ottawa? Everybody is in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well I thought I might see the member's leader there.

Mr. Pitman: He might do that; he might then convey his views in person.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Like the member for Sudbury, I have not been invited to participate in the convention as an observer or anything else.

Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of meeting the Prime Minister of Canada some weeks ago in the nation's capital. It was not a business session—a very pleasant occasion. Tomorrow, however, it is my intention to discuss with Mr. Trudeau—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Can the Premier tell me what one needs to catch him?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well I could really tell the member what happened, but I will not.

An hon. member: Come on, tell us.

Hon. Mr. Davis, I will say this, that I would refer to the CBC as did the member for Sudbury here tonight, although I was there at the convention and I understand rather personally some of the references that were made.

In my discussions with the Prime Minister tomorrow there are a number of matters that I wish to discuss with him. The meeting, of course, is confidential but I think it is time that the public understood my position as it relates to certain constitutional matters.

I shall make it very clear to Mr. Trudeau—and I want members of this House to be aware of the position as well—that this government is prepared to be constructive and co-operative in our relations with the federal government and we shall always temper our actions on behalf of the people of Ontario with that which will be in the best long-term interests of Canada.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is this the Halifax speech again?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wondered, because if this is the Halifax speech, I am going to leave.

Some hon. members: Goodbye!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Is that a threat?

Mr. Bullbrook: Do you promise the word "geese" is not in this speech?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member for Sarnia "geese" is not in this speech. I would also make it very clear to him if he finds it necessary to leave, I shall not be offended—although I have to be very honest with the hon. member for Sarnia: There may be a reference to broilers, but not geese.

However, I want to make it exceedingly clear, Mr. Speaker, that our responsibilities in this House and my responsibility as Prime Minister is to look after the interests of the people of this province. Therefore this government is prepared at all times to speak out and act when we find that action by the federal government is damaging to the welfare of the people of our province.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): What does the hon. member for Sarnia say to that?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will even get around to Dow if you give me time.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario is opposed to, and prepared to fight against with every means at his command, the policy of the federal government to centralize and concentrate power in its own hands.

Mr. Bullbrook: This sounds like the governor of Mississippi.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh no, it is not.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is George Wallace over there anywhere?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): If the member does not like it, leave!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: He is on the member's bench, right down there. The member for Sudbury pointed him out.

Mr. Bullbrook: Go back to sleep.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Put your shirt back in; it is bursting out!

An hon. member: Watch your temper.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this centralization—and I am speaking now as this relation to federal-provincial situations—defies the principles of Confederation and will make it very difficult for the government of Ontario to meet the responsibilities which are constitutionally ours. I wish to state categorically that the people of Ontario reject any policy whereby the federal government singles out Ontario for a reduced role in Confederation or in economic development of this jurisdiction.

Mr. W. Newman: How about that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we are here to look after the interests of the province of Ontario. This has to be part of our responsibility; it has to be.

Mr. Pitman: Let us be more specific.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the federal policies to combat inflation have had a great impact on this jurisdiction and have driven the Ontario economy far below its potential and created our highest levels of unemployment in over a decade. Look at the figures; look at the comparison between the impact in Ontario and our sister provinces in the past seven or eight months. I ask any hon. member opposite to dispute that fact.

The federal government, Mr. Speaker, has undertaken selective fiscal measures that have had once again a great impact on the Province of Ontario, such as the depreciation penalty on commercial buildings in Toronto and other key centres.

The so-called temporary surtaxes on personal and corporate incomes fall most heavily on Ontario, and rather than being taken off at the end of their term they have of course been extended. Surely—and I make this as a plea to the members of this House and to the federal jurisdiction—it must be obvious to the government of Canada that it is in the interest of Canadians in all parts of our country that Ontario retain a strong and vital economy. I will not refer to the goose that laid the golden egg, but some reference might be made to the broiler situation that exists in this jurisdiction.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Who wrote the Premier's speech? The hon. member for London North (Mr. Robarts)?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I had to temper my own remarks when I heard the hon. member for Scarborough East earlier this evening.

I want to talk for just a moment on a matter that relates to the constitutional conference in June.

Mr. Singer: What happened to the broilers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What about broilers? Does the member want me to read the Federation of Agriculture's news release on the broilers or their editorial comment in the federation's bulletin?

Mr. Singer: Yes, talk about that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does he want to know what the agricultural community thinks of his party and the way it relates to their needs at the moment? It is all here.

Mr. Singer: Does the Premier want to know whether or not he seeks the opinion of the law officers of the Crown?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want to touch on a very important matter because I believe the hon. member for Sudbury at least is interested in the matter of constitutional reform. Since the constitutional conference was established in 1968, the general subjects of fundamental rights, the judiciary, the institutions of federalism, regional disparities, mechanisms for intergovernmental relations and several items under the distribution of powers have all been examined and discussed.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Double-dealing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The areas of regional disparities and intergovernmental machinery have been of particular interest—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is well known.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to the government of Ontario and reflect Ontario's major written contribution.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: While Ontario has participated actively in all phases of the review, these papers reflect Ontario's desire to effect immediate changes in the operation of the federal system by means of improvements in co-ordination and co-operation among governments and, when it proves necessary, to seek constitutional change.

At the constitutional conference of September, 1970, it was decided to undertake as a matter of high priority the patriation of The British North America Act and seek a formula to amend the constitution.

In February of this year much of the work of the last three years was brought together and tentative agreement was reached on a feasible approach to the question of patriation and an amending formula, fundamental political rights, official languages, regional disparities and so on.

The February consensus was drawn in general terms—and I emphasize this—and we have now entered into the complex and difficult process of considering what the details of these provisions might be and how they might be worked in draft constitutional provisions.

The federal Minister of Justice, the hon. John Turner, is visiting the provinces to clarify some of these details with the provincial governments in a series of bilateral meetings. He has already been here to visit this capital of Ontario and to discuss with me and my colleagues our views as they relate to a number of these matters.

We expect that he will be in touch with us again in the very near future, but at the same time we have proposed a multilateral meeting of ministers to encourage the careful consideration of the issues which will be before the next meeting of the constitutional conference in Victoria, British Columbia, in June.

At the June meeting it is expected that the February consensus will be advanced by agreeing on the details of its general provisions. This is the hopeful anticipation.

However, I think it is important to emphasize, and important to appreciate, that the constitutional review has entered a very crucial phase. If it transpires—and here I may differ from some of my fellow Premiers or Prime Ministers across Canada—that should more time be needed to consider outstanding problems, then we should be prepared to take that time.

Since the people of Canada and their governments will have to live with these decisions, we must take great care to ensure that what we do now is technically correct and encompasses as wide a consensus as possible. Moreover, what is agreed in June will have to be widely debated, and I intend to provide this Legislature with the fullest opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker, just for about five minutes I want to deal with a matter that I hope is somewhat hypothetical. I hope it is somewhat hypothetical because it has caused me very real concern.

Earlier this week there were published reports—and I am the first to say that they may not be accurate—that the joint Senate-Commons committee on the constitution would recommend the abolition of the monarchy and the implementation of a presidential system in Canada.

Mr. Sopha: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bullbrook: It is beneath the Premier to give credence. It is beneath his position.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Hopefully I am not.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Get up and dissociate yourself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Sudbury says "Hear, hear!" I want to put on the record what I believe, because the member for Sudbury has expressed his point of view before. I have never done this before, Mr. Speaker. I want to express a personal point of view at this precise moment too. I share the opinion of the member for Sarnia who does not believe what he has read in the paper; hopefully it is not accurate either.

Mr. Pitman: Why are we discussing it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to speak on it because it is very relevant to any federal-provincial discussions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Why does the member not go to Ottawa?

Mr. Pitman: I wish I was there.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Is there any place he would rather be?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear—and I am speaking as an individual as well as the leader of this party and as Prime Minister of this province—that I am opposed to any suggestion that we move from the system that presently exists to a form of republican administration.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I make this abundantly clear.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, that is right. This is a personal point of view.

An hon. member: The government members applauded it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury says he will be proved right. I sincerely hope he is wrong and I say that in a very personal way.

Mr. Sopha: It has inhibited our development.

Mr. Pitman: I think we have all gone mad.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Does a bencher have to take an oath of allegiance?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I now want to touch on matters of economics and unemployment which will perhaps have greater appeal to the member for Peterborough than matters of constitution and other situations.

Mr. Stokes: When is the Prime Minister going to say something about the north?

Mr. Pitman: Something that is accurate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not say they were accurate. I said if this were a possibility, I was opposed to it. The member for Sudbury has said he would support it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in London I think it is about 6—something. I do not think she is getting up yet, but I am sure she is not disturbed at all by what any of us say here tonight.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: How can the members opposite be a government when they are not even an opposition?

Mr. Sopha: Is there something wrong with the minister tonight?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to touch, in a general way Mr. Speaker, on the question of economics and unemployment. I shall do so briefly because of the other debate that will be going on, but several observations have been made recently by leaders in this country that I think must bear some comment.

I personally am aware of the enormous tragedy of family life being experienced by men and women throughout this province as a result of situations that exist at the federal level in this country today. I am not passing the buck. I will not accept that kind of criticism from anyone. More than that, I say to the members of this Legislature this government will do all that it can do, within the confines of its jurisdiction, to see that the people of this province have rewarding job opportunities.

I cannot accept, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of general philosophy that because of the social change and the technological change that has taken place in our society in the past 10 years, as stated by the Prime Minister of Canada, that this in itself means that a substantial number of people will be permanently unemployed. This, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept as a matter of principle.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we can be sufficiently creative to find job opportunities, even with the changes that have taken place and in a way that is relevant to the people of our community.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): The Prime Minister had better tell the people in his departments what he is doing about it. They do not know what he is doing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the people in the departments of this government do know what they are doing, which is not really a clear indication of the attitude and the philosophies adopted by the members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to touch just for a moment—in conclusion, because I really do not want to prolong this debate.

An hon. member: Carry on!

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sort of enjoying it, I must confess. Maybe I will.

Mr. Ben: He is a good comedian. What we need is a Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Humber, if he is talking about comedians, should have been here to listen to the member for Sudbury. Because we will never get—I say this most sincerely—a more delightful and humorous performance than was presented to the members of this House by the member for Sudbury tonight. I thought it was tremendous.

Mr. W. Newman: Let the record show that there are only three NDPs in this House.

Mr. Pitman: Why does the hon. member not dry up?

An hon. member: That is still three too many.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want to touch upon matters of economic nationalism, because I know the member for Peterborough once again has a very real interest, as do his colleagues, in this particular issue.

I want to make it abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, that this government is concerned about the ultimate control and future of the economic and social life of this province. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have, as members of this House, a very real responsibility to the citizens of the Province of Ontario to find them job opportunities.

I listened to the leader of the party opposite the other day, Mr. Speaker. I have listened to pronouncements of members of that particular political group and I say to myself, I could go through them one by one and say to them, to the member for Oshawa (Mr. Pilkey) for example: "There is an industry prepared to locate in your riding. You need jobs. That industry happens to have some financing from outside the Province of Ontario or Canada." Is he going to say he does not want that industry to locate within his riding?

Do you know what the answer would be, Mr. Speaker? The member for Thunder Bay would not give me a proper answer; he would say: "Mr. Prime Minister, let us get that industry into my community."

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure he would. Certainly he would.

Mr. Stokes: When is the Prime Minister going to do it? I want to know when.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He does not care who owns it either, does he?

Mr. Stokes: I am not particularly interested as long as we get on with developing our area.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I should really leave this issue of economic nationalism right now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has been settled? No, no, it has not been.

I say to the members of this House, Mr. Speaker, I share this concern and I think we can develop ways and means within the provincial jurisdiction.

We are limited. It is a matter of national significance whereby we can give greater encouragement to Canadian industry without becoming anti-American, anti-UK, anti this or anti anything else.

You know the great problem, Mr. Speaker, with the members opposite is they are negative. They have no confidence and no enthusiasm; they are sick. And the member for Peterborough is a worrier. But I do say this, Mr. Speaker, I think that more can be done to encourage—

An hon. member: He has a lot of worries.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He has a lot of worries; he has a lot to worry about.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The next election, for instance!

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I do say this, Mr. Speaker, let us recognize that our corporate citizens—and there are many good corporate citizens from outside our own borders—have made a very significant contribution to the development of Ontario and Canada. Let us not minimize it.

Mr. Sopha: Where did he go?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has been helpful to Sudbury. But, Mr. Speaker, I think this can be and must be emphasized, that increasingly those companies who are doing business in Ontario and Canada must recognize that we need more research opportunities, more creative opportunities for the young people coming out of our universities and colleges. This is important; this is something which I think through attitudes of mind, or persuasion, we can bring about without relating or perhaps—

Mr. Ben: The Liberal government of Ontario will have it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member for Humber, if he is really waiting for that event to take place, he had better not hold his breath, because he will not be around to see it happen.

I also want to make this observation, Mr. Speaker, that when we talk about economic nationalism, I want to make it abundantly clear that this government has demonstrated by its involvement with McClelland and Stewart that we regard the Canadian publishing industry and those matters relating to culture as being something different and separate and apart from some of the areas of economic investment that are necessary for this province and this country. We have an obligation to see that the educational system, the publishing industry and those matters that are culturally ours are preserved in a way that is unique for this jurisdiction. And this will be done.

Mr. Ben: This money will go down the drain.

Mr. T. Reid: Well do something effective!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, listen, I do not think the hon. member for Scarborough East should have too much to say on this particular point at this moment. I reviewed once again his latest publication—who published it?

Mr. T. Reid: Peter Martin Associates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What did they teach the member in school?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, moving from economic investments, let us move very briefly to a matter I really thought I had left behind me some two months ago.

Mr. Stokes: Let us move a little north for a bit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, we are always moving north.

Let us move very briefly to the matters that have been referred to by members opposite as they relate to the ceilings that have become part of the grant structure in this province. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Leader of the Opposition, I listened to the leader of the socialists, to the member for Peterborough, to the member for Scarborough East. I say to you very frankly, Mr. Speaker, I have very rarely heard more ill-prepared discussion in this House about the ceilings that have become part of the grant situation as related to the province of Ontario.

You see, Mr. Speaker, I know a little bit about this. For the members of this House and the members opposite to come in here and say that a meat axe approach has been used is just factually incorrect. The ceilings that exist for 1971 represent a six to nine per cent increase over the ceilings that were in existence in 1970, which figures were known to the members opposite a year ago. If we average it out, it means that there has been an enrichment on the per student amount of some seven per cent of the academic year in 1971.

If this is a meat axe approach, then I defy them to persuade me of it. It cannot be done. I would say it is great—

Mr. Nixon: Why is it that 40 per cent of the Althouse teachers cannot get jobs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the issue is far more—

Mr. Ben: In other words, he is conning the public into thinking he imposed a ceiling when in fact he did not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the member for Humber, the ceilings were there last year; the ceilings were there the year before. The ceilings are there this year with an increase of about seven per cent. Here we are trying to accommodate the thoughts expressed by the members opposite of autonomy, local decision-making and so on.

We have said to boards simply that over the next two years they will meet the ceilings that have been established. They will establish their priorities; they will get the fat out of the system if it exists. The intriguing part, Mr. Speaker, is that the majority of the school board jurisdictions in the Province of Ontario have been able to meet the ceilings without any drastic reduction in programmes. And the members know it.

We know there are certain situations of difficulty. We know there are problems in Carleton; we know there are some in a riding very close to the new Minister of Education, who will be one of the very great Ministers of Education in this province. I tell you now; he will.

Mr. Stokes: Is the Premier aware that the school boards in northern Ontario have had to cut out essential services to meet his guidelines?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the member—once again, I heard him through the communications media that exists. In case he did not know, there is already a weighting in the formula for northern Ontario as it relates to construction and operating grants. It is already there. I would say in this field, if in no other, this government has in the past number of years developed an approach where there is really quality of educational opportunity in northern Ontario.

Mr. Stokes: It is a different sort of approach.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I enjoy the enthusiastic requests by the Leader of the Opposition to the teaching profession in this province, not to strike: "You will take out your outrage in some other way."

Mr. Nixon: It was not a request. I said they would be irresponsible.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Quite right. And I listened to the leader of the socialist party saying "Do not strike, take out your outrage on the government in the ballot box."

Mr. Pitman: How come we are the socialist party now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are, they are.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The Premier is a flatterer. They never say anything socialist.

Mr. Pitman: There is a difference in the Prime Minister's nomenclature.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is there really?

Mr. Speaker, I only say this to you the teaching profession in this province is not irresponsible, and it will not be conned by the kind of political observations that have been made in this House by the members opposite. It will not.

Mr. Stokes: The teachers and the trustees of northern Ontario will be happy to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a tough time, and I recognize that it is tough. The Minister of Education knows that it is tough, but at the same time this government has a responsibility to bring stability to educational spending. We are doing it in a way that is relevant and meaningful with full scope for local autonomy and local decision-making—

Mr. T. Reid: After eight years of mismanagement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and the member for Scarborough East knows it very well. Mr. Speaker, when we talk—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I will not comment.

Mr. Singer: It bothers the Premier.

Mr. T. Reid: He could not act like a Prime Minister if he tried.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member for Scarborough East is a punk.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): He is a cheap little guttersnipe.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, unlike the members opposite, and like my predecessor, we do not have acting Prime Ministers; we have Prime Ministers who are active, this is a very real distinction.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I have not got around to all this material yet; I could be here all night.

I would say to the member for Scarborough East, if there are any actors in this House they are the member for Downsview and the member for Scarborough West. I have never seen two such gentlemen who cast their eyes to the gallery more often than those two actors. I do not blame the member for Downsview. But—listen—when the member for Downsview speaks to me about attendance of my colleagues here, we had a very important debate on Bill 10 the other night, and I am told—

Mr. Singer: Yes, and I was at the hockey game with John Roberts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I am told the member's name was up in lights.

Mr. Singer: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: “Vernon Singer please report to the local Liberal office, we need you.”

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: There is no doubt about it, the Prime Minister is Ontario's Phyllis Diller.

Mr. Singer: Put your shirt back in, Darcyl

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is also important because there has been a great deal of discussion in general terms about some of the very relevant statistics as they relate to educational investment. This government, Mr. Speaker, makes no apologies for the investment that it has made in education over the past number of years—

Mr. Ben: The government is never going to get any interest!

Mr. Nixon: Not much enthusiasm in the back row for that one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On any comparative or competitive basis, Mr. Speaker, we have invested less per capita in this province than have competitive and neighbouring jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, we invest less per capita than some of our sister provinces.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We spend less per student than the five neighbouring jurisdictions.

Mr. Ben: The Premier said invest less, not spend less. Maybe he should invest more and waste less.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Pardon?

Mr. Ben: The Premier said invest less, not spend less.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right, we invest less than the neighbouring states which have been compared to our system.

Mr. Pitman: They have special problems.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure they have special problems. So do we.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have very special problems, but on any comparative or any competitive basis the investment that has been made can be compared very favourably with competitive jurisdictions anywhere on this continent, without any question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is now early in the morning—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have somewhere before me, I do not know where they are, those very relative amendments that were made to the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Pardon?

Mr. Breithaupt: Is the quartet going to sing?

Mr. Bullbrook: Does the quartet hum when the Premier sits down?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, there is one thing about us over here—we will sing together which is more than the opposition parties can do. You know something else, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. member: Did the Premier say they would sink together?

Interjections by hon. members.

J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Did they sing together?

Mr. T. Reid: Their singing is beautiful.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will see, and what is more, Mr. Speaker, we will win together; which is more than they will do.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: And in darn good harmony, too.

Mr. Ben: Show me!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Somewhere in this very important pile of material I have those very "excellent" amendments that were made to the motion on the Throne Speech. Mr. Speaker, I will not single them all out, I will not review them—

Mr. Singer: That has been obvious for an hour.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The House leader has found them for me; thank you very much. I am particularly intrigued—I am not going to get into this debate tonight, but it just shows the House the very careful—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right—just the very well prepared and documented amendment that the Liberal Party has proposed. But, of course, here we come—"The failure of the government to come to grips with the grave problems of unemployment and inflation—"

Interjections by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be unkind. I really do not want to be unkind because I regard the Leader of the Opposition as a political friend. But I have to say to him and those who have participated with him in the debate on unemployment, I have never heard a weaker contribution than theirs in the debates of this House.

Mr. Nixon: Pass the buck!

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I will give the Leader of the Opposition some advice—

Mr. Nixon: Why is it that the Premier has not even taken part in it if he thought it was an emergency?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am going to wind it up as I am tonight. I will finish it.

An hon. member: He will not say anything on it again unless he is running a business, which he is liable to do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will, and the members will hear me again and they might just as well get used to it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And then we go to—and I come down to a most interesting one, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is No. 5, the failure of the government to extend financial aid to separate education. Mr. Speaker, it confounds me as to the intent and the purport of that particular amendment—

Mr. Nixon: The Premier does not know what it means?

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): We know what the member means.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is this. There was a policy paper presented by the educational expert in the Liberal Party, at their policy convention not too many weeks ago, that completely confounded me and confused me as it relates to the Liberal position on education in this province.

Mr. Nixon: We have not changed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was concerned that this particular sub-amendment No. 5—

Mr. Singer: What is the Premier going to say on May 15 at his scheduled meeting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With whom?

Mr. Singer: He knows.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do I really?

Mr. Singer: Yes. When the Prime Minister talks to the audience, when he is going to make a great education announcement. What is he going to say? Let him look at his diary.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that for the first time this evening I find the member for Downsview has me without an answer. I do not pretend we will make any great pronouncement as it relates to education on May 15.

An hon. member: Where have you been?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not the foggiest idea.

Mr. Nixon: Is he going to vote for the amendment or not?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: What does the member for Brant think?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as one goes through these amendments, and the amendments for the socialist party, one can only sum up the feelings that I and those associated with me have, that they represent a complete frustration, a completely negative and non-constructive approach to the problems that exist in our province today—and I do not minimize them. But I face the people of this province, I face the members of this Legislature—

Mr. Haggerty: The Premier does not have any answers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —with a degree of optimism, because we must have this, a degree of confidence in our capacity to administer and discharge our responsibilities in the Province of Ontario. And I can only say to the members opposite, if you had any sense whatsoever, if you had any perception, if you had any capacity, you would reject categorically those amendments that you made and join with me and my colleagues in support of the original motion.

Mr. Stokes: We would be happy to do that if the Premier would show us the programme.

Mr. Nixon: The old Robarts speeches are with us again.

Mr. Sopha: Has the Premier got his speech writer—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Downsview is quoting all the articles, all the material from the convention, all those remarks that have been made since. I must say this, I am the last one, Mr. Speaker, to in any way relate to polls, but I draw it particularly to the member for Downsview's attention, the Gallup poll in the Toronto Daily Star, Wednesday, April 14, 1971—

Mr. Sopha: What did he say in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and modesty prevents me from relating the answers to the first question, but the second question: "Apart from your own political feelings, which provincial party do you think will win most votes in the next provincial election?" Liberals will win 22 per cent, Mr. Speaker, Conservatives 44 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Forty-four per cent. What does the member for Downsview say to that?

Mr. Nixon: Let the people decide.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you want to give us that St. Andrew-St. Patrick poll again?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not rely on polls, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: Call an election then.

An hon. member: We are going to do better than that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not want to stop at 44. So, Mr. Speaker, I urge the members opposite to show their confidence in this administration as well and join us now in supporting the motion, which is of course significant in relating to the existing needs of the people of this province in a manner that this administration will handle in a meaningful way. I am sure the members opposite will be so persuaded.

Mr. Ben: Ho hum.

Mr. Stokes: The Attorney General is not very enthusiastic.

An hon. member: Divided we fall.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Too bad. Too bad.

Mr. Sopha: It must give the member for London North anguish to come to this:

Mr. Pitman: To come to this.

Mr. Speaker: Order—the Throne debate now being happily concluded, I shall call for the vote as follows:

Mr. Reilly moves, seconded by Mr. Henderson, that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable W. Ross MacDonald PC, CD, QC, LLD, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

May it please Your Honour, we, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer, that the following words be added to the motion:

This House regrets:

1. The failure of the government to come to grips with the grave problems of unemployment and inflation.

2. The failure of the government to propose and implement realistic measures of economy towards spiralling education costs, consistent with the high quality of education and training required by our young people to fit them to compete in the nuclear age.

3. The failure of the government to adopt the appropriate policies and to implement the necessary action to insure to those of our people engaged in agriculture a fair return for the contributions they make to the economy of Ontario.

Some hon. members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have not yet asked for a vote.

4. The failure of the government to provide adequate hospital, nursing home, and convalescent facilities to those of our people suffering from illness.

5. The failure of the government to extend financial aid to separate education through grades 11 to 13.

6. The failure of the government to provide leadership to those engaged in local government, to recognize the liabilities they face in dealing with the high cost of administration and to inaugurate policies which would bring to reality a new partnership with the municipalities to replace the present autocratic approach and encourage local initiative and autonomy.

Failure of the government to move toward decentralization of government services, in order to bring those services into a closer contact with the people of Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: You will support that. You said so.

Mr. Speaker: To continue:

8. The failure of the government to adopt consistent and realistic policies to control pollution, arrest the deterioration of the environment, and to restore the benefits of clean air and pure water as the rightful heritage of the people of Ontario.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Did they not want to strike out the words "loyal subjects" too?

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Pitman, that the amendment to the motion for an address to the reply to the speech by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor now before the House be amended by adding after the words, "the rightful heritage of the people of Ontario," the following words:

9. The failure of the government to reassert Ontario's control over its own economy by refusing to:

(a) Establish a revamped provincial development corporation actively to develop resources in secondary industry by planned channelling of a greater proportion of the capital available for investment in this province;

(b) Amend the corporation and security laws to provide for full disclosure of the operations of foreign-controlled subsidiaries;

(c) Establish a takeover review board which would examine proposals for takeovers by foreign interests and work out methods of retaining Canadian controls and protecting Canadian interests;

(d) Stop incentive grants to foreign-based corporations, giving them instead to Canadian enterprises in return for an equity of this, so that the people share in any profit.

10. The failure of the government to spur in particular the processing of northern raw materials and the development of secondary and tertiary industry in the north by refusing to:

(a) Establish a Crown corporation for mine exploration and development and to force the pace of expansion through public enterprise, and if appropriate, engaging in joint ventures with private enterprises already active in the mining sector.

(b) Establish a northern development fund purposely to direct an equitable amount of investment for the region.

11. The failure of the government to establish a universal public auto insurance plan at cost based on compensation regardless of fault.

12. The failure of the government to lower the eligible voting age to 18.

We will first vote on the amendment to the amendment, which was first moved by Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member for Sudbury East is not going to Ottawa at all. He does not like any of the candidates.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The member is right.

Mr. Sopha: That member would not vote for anyone.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sopha: I am sorry, sir. Somebody was asking where you were tonight. I just replied.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Sudbury would give order, we will proceed with the vote.

The vote is on the amendment to the amendment which was moved by Mr. Lewis.

The amendment to the amendment by Mr. Lewis, having been put, was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Nixon: We will accept the same vote.

Mr. Speaker: The vote now will be on the main motion.

Mr. Sopha: Is this vote reversed?

Mr. Speaker: Same vote as recorded reversed.

Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. I declare the motion carried.

RESOLVED:

that a humble address be presented to the Honourable W. Ross MacDonald, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario:

May it please Your Honour, we, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour hath addressed to us.

Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege. It seems too bad too me, and I ask you for your ruling on it tonight, that the press of this province has not covered this meeting tonight with so many people here on very important matters.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much if that is a matter which respects the privilege of the members of this assembly.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It will do for openers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves, seconded by Mr. Davis, that this House on Monday next will resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 26, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon, our guests in both galleries are students from Rockcliff Senior Public School in Toronto.

Statements by the ministry.

Oral questions.

PROVINCE'S POSITION ON PUBLIC ORDER ACT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier. Can he tell the House whether the government either through the Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), or through the Premier's meetings with the Prime Minister of Canada, has a position on the continuation of The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act? What is the position of the province in this matter?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government does not have a position on The Public Order Act. It is being discussed. When the government makes some determination of this, I shall inform the members of the House.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Since the Act runs its course in the next two or three days, will the position of the province be made known for the guidance of the government of Canada and for the rest of us before that determination?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It will be made known.

HARBOUR CITY PROJECT

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question again of the Premier: Can he say whether or not his government has reassessed the position that the previous administration had taken in support of the so-called Harbour City project, the apartment project that was to be built with provincial assistance, in the harbour of Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the position of Harbour City is not so much being reassessed; my understanding is that there is to be some initiative by the city of Toronto. I read certain press reports that because of changes, the province was losing interest in Harbour City, and I would assure the hon. members of the House, this is not the case.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: There has been no change in the position of the government simply because we have a new Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman)?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): A supplementary: Is the province intending to exercise any initiative to push it along a little faster?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I sensed from what I read in one of the papers that perhaps the city was waiting for us to show some initiative. If my studies prove this is the case, the province will not be reluctant in so doing.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister advise us whether he still goes along with the opinion of his former minister in that department, that it was quite possible that people could be living in Harbour City in 1971?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really have not consulted the very excellent former minister of that department as to what his opinions were at a specific date.

Mr. Nixon: He is still waiting for the Premier's call.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): There is very little consultation over there.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have discussed many things since; we have chatted on a number of occasions. I would say that from a practical standpoint, as I understand the Harbour City project, it is highly unlikely that there will actually be people living there during the calendar year 1971.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, there is a small change then?

OSSTF FUNDS FOR RESEARCH

Mr. Nixon: A further question of the Premier: Can he tell the House whether he intends to accept the generous offer of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation to provide $25,000 to assist in the provision of research to back up the committee of human resources in their investigation into school costs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I have not had this offer communicated to me directly, if such an offer is made I shall then make a determination.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Is the Prime Minister still of the opinion that only the assistance of The Department of Education is necessary for the full review that is being undertaken by the committee on human resources?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I did not venture that particular opinion, I cannot still be of that opinion.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To whom should the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation make out the cheque for $25,000, so the research can be done on an independent basis?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I guess one could be very facetious and reply to that somewhat facetious question saying I would be delighted to have it made payable to myself.

I would think the proper course of procedure would be for the secondary school teachers' federation to communicate the offer and the terms of that offer directly to the government so the government could then consider it.

MERCURY POLLUTION OF LAKES AND RIVERS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Has there been any change in the policy that no warnings would be made public to fishermen in the northern waters of the province, letting these people know about the danger of eating fish impregnated with mercury?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no warnings have been issued to those areas in northern or northwestern Ontario you referred to.

Mr. Nixon: In northwestern Ontario no warnings were issued?

A supplementary question: Does the Minister of Lands and Forests feel that the problem of mercury pollution has in fact been exaggerated by statements made previously by the government and that there is little danger in eating the fish from that area?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would say this. We know a lot more today than we did a year ago about mercury.

Mr. Singer: Yes, the minister even issued pamphlets about it.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Before any signs are posted, we feel that the departments concerned—The Department of Health and The Department of Tourism and Information, and The Department of Energy and Resources Management, and my own—will consult one another.

Mr. Singer: That will be a change.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this little booklet that we issued gives a lot of information on mercury. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition has not read it I would suggest that he read it.

Mr. Singer: The Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) did not read it. We read it.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: And as time goes on, as I mentioned earlier, every two months or so, I issue a statement in this House on the various lakes in the province. We have more than 200 lakes that are being continually monitored and analyzed and these reports come out periodically, so we are in a much better position to convey information on this important subject of mercury.

Mr. Nixon: One other supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister indicated that before the government posts signs there is going to be consultation. Is he not aware that the postings that have been undertaken in previous years have been removed and therefore the impression is widespread that the menace, if such it is, is not nearly as great as was originally supposed? Perhaps there should be some more definitive statement made about that by the minister or one of his colleagues.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary to the minister: Does he feel that the Prime Minister and some of his cabinet colleagues endangered their lives by eating Lake Erie perch over the weekend?

Mr. Nixon: That was not the danger.

Mr. Speaker: This is not an appropriate supplementary. The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a supplementary.

Mr. F. A. Burr: (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, would the minister consider placing signs of a more specific nature; for example warning people that half a pound of fish per week is considered the limit of safety in certain areas where there is mercury contamination?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, may I refer the hon. member to page 3, where it says:

Is the half parts per million used worldwide?

No, several countries including the USA have accepted this standard but it is not universal. In Sweden only fish containing less than one-fifth parts per million are considered suitable for unlimited human consumption, with the recommendation that fish in the range of one-fifth to one part per million not be eaten more frequently than once per week. The average consumption in Sweden, however, is roughly two to three times greater than Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Further supplementary?

Mr. Burr: My question regarded the posting of signs with that information on them. Would the minister consider posting signs with that information?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, these little booklets are free; they are available at the bookstore, and at any Department of Lands and Forests office; we feel that the information being made available is sufficient for the time being.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River has a supplementary?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: What protection, if any, does the fisherman, particularly the American fisherman, have when he comes into waters that are contaminated with mercury, if he does not stop in at The Department of Lands and Forests and pick up one of these booklets? Are these booklets issued at the same time as the fishing licence is issued?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: These booklets are made available in all The Department of Lands and Forests offices, The Department of Mines and Northern Affairs and as many government offices as possible. If we find that certain areas need to be closed we certainly will take those steps.

Mr. Speaker: One further supplementary; the member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary of the minister: Does he agree with a recent statement made by the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) that the problem of mercury pollution has been overstated and too much emphasis placed on it; that there really is not the danger there was originally thought to be in mercury pollution in northwestern Ontario waters?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: My own personal opinion, Mr. Speaker, is yes, I do believe it has been overstated and exaggerated; because most of our lakes in the Precambrian Shield we find have a natural background of mercury.

Mr. Stokes: Is the natural source of pollution not as dangerous as the industrial source?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Would the member mind—

Mr. Stokes: When is mercury not dangerous? If it is in excess of five parts per million through natural sources, is that not as dangerous as an equal amount from an industrial or other source?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, my understanding of mercury is that mercury is mercury, regardless of whether it comes from industrial sources or natural background. If you eat fish that has more than five parts per million, and if you eat a steady diet of it, there is a possibility that it could be injurious to your health.

LAYOFF OF TEACHERS

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier if he has undertaken any research, as he indicated that he would some days ago, into the laying off of teaching staff at some of the community colleges associated with the Manpower retraining programmes. Further, is he aware that this is a continuing problem, certainly in some areas—Brantford, perhaps, more than any other—where the classes have become very large and some of their best staff have been laid off?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have. I hope to have some information for the House either tomorrow or on Thursday.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

DISCUSSIONS ON RELATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Premier: Can the Premier table in the Legislature, or indicate to the Legislature, what discussion precisely has taken place at the most senior levels with the Province of Quebec over the obvious deteriorating relationships between this province and that province because of the government's agricultural legislation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that my recollection of the discussions here in the House was that most of the dialogue with the Province of Quebec was of a verbal nature, it would be very difficult to table anything. I am quite sure that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) would be prepared, from time to time, to keep the House updated as to his official discussions with the Quebec Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, has the Attorney General of Ontario spoken to Mr. Choquette about the number of accelerated threats now relating to the limiting of imports of Ontario goods?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not believe the Attorney General has been in touch with Mr. Choquette; when the Attorney General comes in the hon. member might ask him, but I do not believe he has.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary; Surely, the relationships between the provinces around this issue—

Mr. Speaker: Question! Question!

Mr. Lewis: Is it not true that the relationships between the two provinces on this particular question have seldom been at such a fragile level, and what is the Premier prepared to do to reinstitute some sense of amity in this discussion?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think relations are that difficult. I expect

I will be seeing the Premier of Quebec very shortly myself and I am really quite confident that these matters can be resolved.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Has the government been officially informed by either the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec or the government of Quebec that if our Act is not rescinded, they will be forced to take retaliatory actions with many other agricultural products?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this question more properly might be directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I can say there has been no communication to my office from the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, and certainly not from their Premier, who has been out of the country for the past several days. I do not believe that there has been any official notification to the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask by way of a final supplementary, whether the Minister of Agriculture has received an official communication from Quebec of its desire, or its intention, of extending the retaliatory action to other agricultural products if the Ontario Act is not rescinded?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I really have not heard any indication of that at all. As I informed the House last week, we have been in constant contact with the Deputy Minister of Agriculture through my deputy minister. In the Province of Quebec, there has been no problem whatever.

An hon. member: It is dark in here all of a sudden.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have heard nothing from the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec that would indicate that there is any retaliatory measure to take place. I read, with as much surprise as any one, the story in Saturday's Globe and Mail.

I was contacted by the Globe and Mail, and I simply related the history of what has happened and what I assume, likely will happen: that the Province of Quebec may pursue its egg marketing plan with more vigour than it has in the past, which has left something to be desired insofar as Quebec's side of this case is concerned.

I have no more control over egg producers in Ontario, or indeed in Manitoba, shipping into Quebec, either through the normal regulatory channels established by FEDCO or other channels, than does the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec have over those who are shipping broilers into Ontario contrary to the broiler board's marketing permit regulations here.

Mr. Nixon: To the Minister of Agriculture—a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: No, we cannot do that. I allowed the supplementary to go to the Minister of Agriculture, which I should not have done. There can be no supplementaries to that question.

As the member for Scarborough West has the floor, I will give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to ask a question if the member for Scarborough West is done.

Mr. Nixon: All right.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, are there any supplementaries permitted to the Prime Minister in connection with the original question?

Mr. Speaker: No. There have been sufficient supplementaries. We can reopen it with another question later.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. As I understand your ruling then, on a point of order, you permit the member for York South to ask a supplementary to another member, but you will not permit an additional supplementary to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: That is about what it amounts to. The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Bullbrook: A strange set of rules, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker is trying to be a bencher too.

FIELDING LUMBER DISPUTE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, do not be daunted. Your rulings are impeccable as always, sir.

May I ask a question of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker? Has the Minister of Labour considered a personal intervention into the dispute between the Fielding Lumber Company in Sudbury and the rock and tunnel workers, given the length of time that has elapsed and the feelings on both sides?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Labour): No, I have not, Mr. Speaker. I have investigated the background of this particular matter to the best of my ability. I have had several correspondence interventions by the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), which I appreciate, but at the present time no, I have not.

Incidentally, I might mention to the leader of the NDP that we had a ministers' conference the latter part of last week in the same city where other events were taking place and even the Minister of Labour for the federal government intimated that the only time a Labour Minister should intervene would be if both parties wished it.

Mr. MacDonald: Was the Minister of Labour chastised?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In the Fielding Lumber situation does the minister not feel that he is bargaining in bad faith when the wage offer for the first year of a contract falls below the existing government minimum wage? And does he not think that that is sufficient basis on which his department can step in?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, there have been no allegations made to my department by the people involved that there has been bargaining in bad faith. If so, they could make application to the Ontario Labour Relations Board for leave to prosecute. There has been no mention of that yet.

Mr. Lewis: By way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the gross bad faith which the company had evidenced, unprecedented in some number of months, will the minister not endeavour to look into it through whatever agency he employs and bring the full report to this House as to the existing situation?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I will be very happy to look into it once again, Mr. Speaker, and report back to the House, yes.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Sarnia a supplementary?

Mr. Bullbrook: No, an original question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary? The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Has the minister looked into the fact that the federal government is making a loan of some $64,000 to the Fielding Lumber owner's brother-in-law, who is in the same type of operation and which will ultimately lead this loan—

Mr. Speaker: Of course, this is not supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Martel: Certainly it is supplementary! How can the Speaker determine whether it is going to be supplementary when he has not listened to the entire question? For God's sake!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Right. He has become a mind-reader.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now asking a question about another operation—

Mr. Martel: I am not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker:—other than that which was raised by the original questioner. If he can relate that to the original question he is in order, otherwise he is not in order.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I can finish the question and you will see how it is related. Because of the fact that the loan will go to the second company, which is owned by the first company, does the minister not feel there is something there which is leading to bargaining in bad faith and will ultimately lead to the 50 employees losing their jobs with Fielding Lumber?

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion it is not a question which is supplementary, but if the minister wishes to answer it he may.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's genuine concern in this matter. He has been, as I say, in touch with me on many occasions, but insofar as a loan made by the federal government is concerned I fail to see where I enter into this, other than the fact that it might be one of the factors which might be considered when we look into the whole background.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

REVISION OF OMA FEES

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: What guarantee does the Minister of Health have from the Ontario Medical Association that its fee schedule will not increase again before the alleged 1973 termination date?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): I have no guarantee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, then, Mr. Speaker, if in fact their fee schedule can rise again as some have intimated, what basis—what sort of channels or formula—what basis has the government arrived at to negotiate (if the minister will accept the word) with the doctors, to enter into discussion with the Ontario Medical Association to determine subsequent fee schedules since we are now committed to 90 per cent of the cost?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my hope is that the OMA will be drawn into assisting the department in developing our scale of benefits on a continuing basis. By that I mean that next week, the week after and throughout the whole period of the next year or two years, I hope that the OMA will be directly implicated in the development of the 1973 scale of benefits.

Mr. MacDonald: The former Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) said that three years ago.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, what percentage of Ontario's doctors now bill through OHSIP?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: These figures are not available, partly because of the mixture of private billing and plan billing that heretofore existed. I have heard suggestions that the best guess is that about 70 per cent of the total billing is to the plan directly, but that may be slightly different than saying, "What percentage of doctors bill the plan direct?"

Mr. Lewis: One last supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will it not be an administrative near-impossibility for individual patients to retrieve from the plan 90 per cent of that which the doctor has billed the patient directly? Is the minister not concerned about that?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not see, Mr. Speaker, that from an administrative point of view anything is changed in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Windsor West a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member announced that that was his last supplementary. Now the member for Windsor West is on his feet. Has he a supplementary?

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the doctors' apparent reluctance to accept the new position, under which they must choose, because of the fact that they would then have to bill the agencies rather than the single carrier OHSIP on behalf of a number of their patients?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am not aware of any general reaction against the change or amendments insofar as the profession is concerned, Mr. Speaker, but I do not see that with the completed phasing-out of the agencies there is any problem here. As far as I know, the last agent will be phased out within a matter of a week or two.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): One supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: The minister said he did not see there was any change from what previously existed. Does the minister not agree that the change is that if the doctor wishes to bill and receive 100 per cent he must bill the patient directly and let the patient then claim from OHSIP whatever portion he is able to get? That changes the picture entirely.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: It does not seem to me that it does, Mr. Speaker. He can bill, as he could have billed directly, 90 per cent, 100 per cent or 150 per cent. If he is billing directly he will now have his whole practice under that system, and the relationship as to the quantum of the bill will be one to be founded on that between the doctor and the patient.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of any doctors billing in the following manner, that is billing the government for the amount of the visit 90 per cent of the fee schedule, and then, once every four months, billing the patient for the accumulative total, amounting to the other 10 per cent?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think it irrelevant whether or not this occurred in the past; it cannot occur in the future. Once an Ontario doctor sends any bill directly to the plan, his whole practice becomes plan billing. It will be assumed when the plan receives a bill directly from a doctor that that is the type of practice he has elected to follow.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary: What safeguards will the government have to prevent doctors billing patients once every six months or so for 10 per cent as well as collecting 90 per cent from the plan?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: This will certainly be part of the regulatory sanction required—the law will be that, having accepted 90 per cent from the plan, that is it. From that doctor's point of view not only with regard to that patient but with regard to his whole practice—the 90 per cent becomes, effectively, 100 per cent.

Mr. T. Reid: But the minister will not investigate?

AIR POLLUTION IN TORONTO

Mr. Lewis: One final question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Speaker: What action does the minister intend to undertake in reply to Pollution Probe's allegations that the Wellington Street, Commissioner Street, Grand Avenue and Symes Road incinerators exceed provincial regulations for particulate emission and are therefore subject to lawsuit?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, from time to time Pollution Probe makes claims that some treatment facility, be it water or waste, exceeds some criterion or some standard. I have not heard anything about this latest claim. I do not know if it is a continuing claim; whether the incinerator is continuously breaching our criteria, our regulations, or whether this happened at a certain time when people from Pollution Probe happened to attend and make some sort of a test. I would like to have the information as to what type of test was made, how they monitor those incinerators and just how they come to this conclusion.

However, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows it is hoped that these incinerators will be replaced by new, more up-to-date incinerators in the Metro area. Plans are now underway to replace these incinerators with a better type of disposal facility and in this way we will avoid the necessity of using these existing facilities in the event that they do breach our regulations.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the plan for the new incinerators include tying in the waste heat for local heating purposes so the stack temperatures can be dropped, as is the case of most of the European incinerators, which thus reduce the fly ash and particulates?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that one of the reasons for the delay, particularly in the new Toronto incinerator, is because of the study of the latest incinerator methods, which are being used, I believe, in Germany at the present time. There is some question regarding the cost—it will be substantially more, I understand—although the recovery would in some way benefit this initial investment. We, as well as certain members of the Metro council, are hoping that these latest methods will be used by Metro.

Mr. Deacon: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would Ontario Hydro be a buyer of waste heat from those incinerators and thus provide a basic level of buying support for the waste heat production?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This can always be a possibility, Mr. Speaker, yes.

Mr. Speaker: Are there further supplementaries? The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Because of the very high figures indicated in this Pollution Probe release, and taking the department's own figures of monitoring through 1969 as to dust fall in the metropolitan area into consideration, what is the position of the government with respect to the proposed new incinerator, located invidiously in my riding and which is presently before the Ontario Municipal Board?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I will assure the hon. member that it is not being invidiously established in his riding; we really do not want to do anything to harm the hon. member. Apparently the site—

Mr. Lawlor: They are trying to pollute me.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The site is one that has been recommended by and supported by Metro council. It is hoped, as I indicated before, that with this new incineration there will be in fact a facility to eliminate pollution, not cause pollution in Metro. One of the problems, as indicated I am sure—and I have not seen the Pollution Probe report—has been the delay in getting these new incinerators established; that is why the older ones, which really do not, possibly, do the job properly, are still being used.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West; has he completed? Does the Leader of the Opposition wish now to place that question?

ONTARIO REPRESENTATION AT SUPREME COURT HEARING

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food if the Ontario department which he heads will be represented either directly or in an observer's capacity at the hearings before the Supreme Court of Canada, scheduled for May 31, on legislation similar to that enacted by Bill 10, which is being considered by the Province of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the date that the hearing would be held before the Supreme Court of Canada, but we have given notice that our department will be represented at the Supreme Court hearing.

Mr. Singer: Oh well, well! Why did the minister deny it before?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, seems to get quite annoyed. I did not deny it before—

Mr. Singer: The minister certainly did.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not; and if the hon. member suggests that I did, he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is on a point of order that I have the floor!

Mr. Singer: He said no.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not say no.

Mr. Singer: He certainly did.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not, and if the hon. member had been here listening to the debates instead of down at the hockey game—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —he would have been here to hear me answer, in reply to the member for York South, that when the request was made to this government and information given to this government that an application was being made to the Supreme Court, we would then make a decision. When that word reached our department we made the decision and we will be represented. I have done exactly what I said I would do that night.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): We forced that admission from the minister in the debate if he will recall.

Mr. Sopha: By way of supplementary, when the minister says to the House that his department will be represented at the hearing, surely he means the law officers of the Crown under the direction of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question or a statement?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: Will there be any position taken by the representatives of the province in this hearing, or are they simply going to report to the minister what happened?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We will determine that in the fullness of time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Singer: The minister does not remember from one day to the next what he says.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have—

FARMERS USING BRAZILIAN BALER TWINE

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Yakabuski: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Is the minister aware that Ontario farmers this summer will be using Brazilian baler twine? And, number two, is it because that 100 per cent pure sisalana Brazilian twine is superior to that manufactured in Ontario? Or is it because again in this commodity, in manufacture and labour, we have priced our product off the market?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have not heard the comments made by the hon. member before this. I do not know anything about the comparative prices, but I would assume that whoever is bringing the baler twine into the province—and I am not sure what company is doing it—is doing it on the basis of economics. As far as I know this is the only reason.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): This obviously was not set up.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: On page 353 of Hansard, the following remarks are quoted:

Mr. Singer: All the more reason why the minister should intervene.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Exactly opposite.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is self explanatory and leaves the minister in the same position as he was, and as he expressed himself today.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Is this an apology from the hon. member?

ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bullbrook: I have a question of the Attorney General. In view of the concern—

Mr. J. Renwick: What concern?

Mr. Bullbrook:—both in Ottawa and Washington as to the use of electronic surveillance equipment, and in view of the indisputable constitutional ability the government has to direct the weaponry used by police in this province, could the minister tell us whether he has done anything since we brought this matter up 10 days ago in the Legislature?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have done something.

Mr. Bullbrook: Could the minister tell us what he has done?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am trying to find out, Mr. Speaker, just exactly the type of equipment the municipal police forces of this province have in this field. I am trying to find out the instances where it has been used, who gives the permission for it to be used—

Mr. Stokes: Have the Minister of Labour take a peek!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In other words, I am really trying to find out just what the whole history of electronic surveillance is concerning the forces of law in this province. However, I should point out that even with this information—which is being gathered at the moment and will take some time to be gathered—I doubt very much if we will be in a position to indicate an Ontario position prior to the emergence from Ottawa of their amendments, which I understand are coming down fairly soon.

Therefore, if my hon. friend feels that there is going to be any great new, startling policy emanating from my office in the near future before some new policy emanates from Ottawa, I am afraid to indicate to the House he is going to be disappointed.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do not worry about me being disappointed. By way of supplementary, if I might, may I ask the hon. minister when he uses the word "trying" does he interpret that to mean "in the process of"—or, to clarify, does the minister not agree that he has every right to know?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I would agree that I have every right to know, but there may be some people who may believe that I do not have that right to know; that is the proposition that I have put forward.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a final supplementary, and for specific clarification: As the Attorney General of this province, does he agree that he has the right to know from the police forces?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Very much so!

Mr. Singer: On a further point of order, I also want to draw to the attention of the House this extract of Hansard, on page 353—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Singer: No Mr. Speaker, the minister wrongly advised the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Hon. J. White (Minister of Revenue): The member lost the argument.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

I am perfectly aware of the situation that was taking place prior to my taking the chair, and if the hon. member for Downsview will save his point of order for Mr. Speaker, who will return very shortly, I think Mr. Speaker will rule on it. I do not think it is fair to give me that point of order at this particular moment.

Mr. J. Renwick: A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice: Pending the introduction and enactment of the legislation in Ottawa, would the hon. minister consider instructing the police forces in the Province of Ontario that they are not to engage in electronic eavesdropping without his consent?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

HUNTING OF WOLVES

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests a two-part question. First, did he have the opportunity to read the story in one of the weekend supplements to the Toronto press about the hunting of wolves from aircraft in the district of Kenora? Second, whether he read it or not, I should like to ask him whether there is any prospect that he will order a surcease to this senseless, inhuman destruction of wild animals, such as goes on as described in that article, by people who call themselves sportsmen?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, the answer is oui, yes. And the second part is, when this matter came to my attention about two months ago I issued a directive by radiogram to all regional directors in northwestern Ontario that henceforth no caninus lupus be killed under permit by means of an aircraft after March 15.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

EMISCO POLLUTION CONTROL DEVICE

Mr. Burr: A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management regarding the Emisco pollution control device that the Ontario Department of Transport installed in several hundred provincial government cars some time ago: Has this device proved effective in reducing carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, one of the parts of this experiment has been for various vehicles used by the department to accumulate a certain amount of mileage with this control device installed in each vehicle. We tested it—the mobile lab facilities of my department initially tested these various cars. The results were quite encouraging. We hope that after a certain mileage stage—I believe around 25,000, in that vicinity—if we still have a good report, an encouraging report, and if the device is holding up, we may make some further recommendation as to its general use.

Mr. Burr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Are any other forms of pollution increased by the device and are there any other disadvantages?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As far as our own testing is concerned, which is mainly for carbon monoxide emissions, as I have said to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, the results were encouraging. I am not sure whether or not we have been looking for other sources of contamination as a result of the use of this device. I will have to check that.

Mr. Singer: On a further point of order: A few minutes ago I read—

Mr. Speaker: If it is the same point of order, then—

Mr. Singer: Well no, there is a subsequent quote which is more clear, Mr. Speaker. At page 353.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, has a right to rise on a point of order, but he might perhaps wait until we have finished this question.

Mr. Singer: I thought the question was finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have not inquired if there are supplementaries. Any supplementaries?

The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, has the device increased the mileage obtained; and does the hon. minister mean that at the end of 25,000 miles the device would need to be replaced?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member means, has the device increased the mileage per gallon of gasoline. Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker; it is very doubtful that it would do that. As far as the accumulated mileage is concerned, or the 25,000 miles, the idea is to see if this device holds up under normal operating conditions. If it does we may test it even further—another 20,000 or 25,000 miles—so that in this way we have a complete picture of the effectiveness of this device before we make any recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question?

Mr. Burr: Then the minister is saying that in the next 25,000 miles he would test for other pollutants at the same time?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview wishes to rise.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I read an extract from page 353, but there is another extract at the top of page 353 that says this:

Mr. Singer: The minister did not answer the third part. Is the province going to intervene in the hearings presently pending before the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Speaker, we have no intention to intervene.

Who was misleading and why?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kitchener has the floor for a question.

COMMENTS BY TAXING OFFICER IN ONTARIO REPORTS

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Is the Attorney General aware of the comments by the taxing officer, Mr. McBride, at page 141 of the current Ontario Reports, whereby he refers to the charges made by special examiners as "legalized larceny which has been practised on litigants for many years"? He further states that "the special examiners who are officers of the Supreme Court of Ontario have been mocking the tariff provisions regularly for years."

Secondly, is the minister further aware that the comments of Mr. McBride suggest that the changes in the tariff should be made so that, as he states, "it could not then be readily demonstrated at least that one group of officers of this court is regularly and routinely breaking the law"?

Will the minister investigate that and advise if he proposes changes to the tariff with respect to this rather serious charge?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: May I take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The question period has expired. Points of order and privilege are always available to a member.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on page 268 of Hansard I am reported as saying that the approximate cost of combining the sewers in the city of Toronto, which are presently separated, would be $300,000.

The correct figure is $300 million and I ask leave of the House to correct that.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that that correction will appear in the Hansard of today.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Nixon: Let us have a chorus of "O Promise Me" before 3 o'clock.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: A contradiction of what he said last week again.

Mr. Speaker: The next order of business, of course, is orders of the day. Hon. members will realize that in view of certain arrangements we have interregnum, so I shall call—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might request the permission of the House—I have a very brief statement I should like to make—if we might revert to statements by the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreeable to the House that we revert to statements by the ministry?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to invite all our hon. members to join me for the official unveiling of the Ontario Consumer Caravan on Thursday, April 29—that is this Thursday—at 10:30 a.m., outside the main building of the Legislature.

The caravan is an important feature of the consumer information and education programme of my department. It represents a significant initiative in assisting Ontario consumers to better understand their rights and responsibilities in the marketplace. It is the first of its kind in Canada.

Mr. Nixon: It will be backed up by radio and television ads.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The caravan will visit many parts of the province in the next several months, Mr. Speaker. I am hopeful that as many members as possible who will be free Thursday morning will attend this preview showing. That is at 10:30 a.m. this Thursday and I think the members will find extremely interesting and valuable the information which we are going to make available to the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker: Any further statements, now that we are in that order of business?

There has been a suggestion made from Mr. Speaker's left that we have seven minutes and we might perhaps use five of them for an extension of the question period if that would be agreeable.

The hon. member for Waterloo North.

USE OF STUDDED TIRES

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Highways and Transport. Due to the high cost of removing studs from tires, and especially if the tire is a relatively new one, and in view of the large number of tires which would be wasted because of the ban, would the minister consider the position of allowing existing tires that have been sold and are in use to be used until such time as they are worn out without removal of the studs?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): I would have to say, Mr. Speaker, that a ban is a ban or it is nothing at all. I do not think the cost of removing studs is all that high.

Mr. Good: Has the minister looked into it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the cost of removing studs from a tire is $8, which is quite substantial?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It costs nothing if it is done by the automobile owner himself, and it is not difficult to do.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford.

COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests. In the meeting with the fishermen, the minister promised that the fishermen would get adequate compensation for the damages they suffered as a result of mercury pollution; this is a meeting at which I was present, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that adequate compensation has not been provided by ODC, what are the next steps that the minister will take to reconcile his promise to the fishermen and the actions of the government?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in those areas where the fisheries are closed we have renewed The Fisheries Loans Act at 100 per cent of the cost to the Ontario government; and in those areas where some of the species can be fished there is provision under The Department of Trade and Development, ODC to be more specific, for loans for capital assistance, as well as for financial assistance to enable them to operate.

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In this particular instance it was the Eriean fishermen who were promised adequate compensation for the damages. They have not received adequate compensation and they are not happy with what they have received from ODC. Is the minister intending to hold other meetings with the fishermen?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: My information is that the great majority of the Eriean fishermen have received assistance under ODC. There may be one or two where the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Makarchuk: A further supplementary: Would the minister try to ascertain from the Eriean fishermen whether they have received adequate compensation, or rather have not received assistance?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White); I guess he has left.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of University Affairs is not there. The Leader of the Opposition has a question.

REPORT ON OWNERSHIP OF RESORT AND RECREATION LANDS

Mr. Nixon: Is the Minister of Lands and Forests going to table his report on the ownership of resort and recreation lands, which he indicated was in a state of advanced preparation and which I think he has been carrying in his hip pocket for the last two weeks?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the NDP and also of our own members, I have asked that copies be made available to everyone, and I hope to be able to table the report this week.

Mr. T. P. Reid: By way of supplementary, because there is still some confusion, particularly outside of Toronto, is the ban on the sale of cottage lots final or pending the publication of this review?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that in the Throne Speech it was clearly indicated that Crown land for summer cottage purposes would be leased only from then on.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

REVENUE PAYMENTS TO MINING MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has the government finally settled on a formula for mining revenue payments to the mining municipalities of the province?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that will be dealt with in due course, and probably in the very near future.

Mr. MacDonald: Probably this afternoon.

Mr. Ferrier: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could tell us when we will be told the time at which these payments will be authorized to the municipalities?

An hon. member: In the next half hour.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well I think I have already indicated that matter.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

LOWERING OF VOTING AGE

Mr. T. P. Reid: A question of the Premier: Does the Premier agree with the statement of the Attorney General on the weekend that the voting age and age of majority should be lowered immediately to 18?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the exact phraseology used by the Attorney General. There was some general discussion—

Mr. Nixon: That the voting age should be 18?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that the matter of the voting age should be considered along with the total question of the age of majority.

Mr. T. P. Reid: May I ask, by way of supplementary, will there be any indication from the Premier before the next election that there will be such a lowering of the voting age?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that there has been no determination as to the date of the next election, of course it makes it very difficult to answer that question for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt if we have sufficient time now for a further question. I thought we might have more supplementaries but not that one. We have just a minute to go.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): How can one answer a question which has not been asked?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have a message here from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By his own hand, W. R. Macdonald, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1972, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, April 26, 1971.

Clerk of the House: Government notice of motion No. 2.

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): It is the start of the amateur hour now.

BUDGET ADDRESS

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, on March 19, 1943, a predecessor from my riding, from the town of Wallaceburg—the then riding of Kent West which is now the riding of Chatham-Kent—introduced his first, and as it turned out his only, budget. At that time he forecast revenue—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): History is about to repeat itself!

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Why does the hon. member say that?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): This is an auspicious beginning.

Mr. Sargent: This is the amateur hour!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —of $102 million and ordinary expenditures of $97 million, or a surplus on ordinary account of $5.5 million. I am not so sure that the picture will be quite the same today.

That predecessor, sir, was the Hon. A. St. Clair Gordon, who was known to most of us in Kent county as Bill Gordon. To a 10-year-old boy, which I was then at that point, he was my Uncle Bill Gordon. He was Treasurer for some six months. He was the member for my riding for about 10 years and we are very proud of his record of service to our area and his contribution to the province.

He was followed, of course, by the hon. Mr. Frost, who is in the House today. We are always glad to have him with us. Mr. Frost was followed by the hon. Dana Porter. In 1958, a person who is still a member of the House, the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), became Treasurer for some eight years; and then from 1966 to March 1 last, the member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) was provincial Treasurer.

Those shoes, sir, are large shoes to fill. They are a distinguished group of people who have given great service to our province and indeed our country. I refer, of course, in particular to my immediate predecessor. He made a contribution to good government, maintained the credit of this province and provided good financial management of this province in the usual sense.

Over and above that, I think all of us take some pleasure—those of us who have sat in the House—in sharing with the former Treasurer his contributions to the cause of national tax reform; to the beginnings of the regional development programme and economic planning yesterday; his contribution in opening to this province the foreign markets of the world for investment in Ontario securities; and his stress on the productivity of government. I refer particularly to the establishment of that committee and I join with all members in paying tribute to the hon. Charles Steel MacNaughton for his distinguished service.

I pay tribute of course, sir, to my staff, particularly to my deputy minister, Mr. MacDonald, to the present secretary of the Treasury Board, Mr. Brannan. They and a number of other people have for the last few weeks, few months, been working very diligently on this budget. I received several calls on Easter Sunday morning, for example. I can only say that I understand tonight they will do more than their share in contributing to those revenues which flow to the province from the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and they deserve so to do.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first budget of the new government of Ontario. Accordingly, it represents a careful review and assessment of all our policies and programmes and their effects on the citizens of this province. The budget which I am presenting today is a reflection of those policies and programmes in the form of an imaginative and forceful fiscal plan for Ontario. It aims to achieve four major objectives:

To restore full-employment economic growth in Ontario by encouraging expansion of the activities of the private section;

To maintain firm control over public spending in order to contain tax levels and the generation of inflationary pressures;

To advance provincial-municipal reforms in line with the long-term programme we announced in 1969; and

To ensure the attainment of the other priorities of government policy such as greater Canadian participation in our economic life, preservation and conservation of the environment and a fulfilling quality of life for all our citizens.

The taxation and expenditure policies in this budget give maximum expression to these objectives. With the approval of the members and the active co-operation of the total community, I am confident that the fiscal programme which the government has drawn up will move this province ahead toward greater prosperity and a more rewarding life.

Following the practice of past years, I have included the three budget papers as part of my overall budget presentation for 1971. These papers provide supporting documentation and perspective on the economic, fiscal and reform policies which the government will continue to advance.

Before proceeding with the policies and details of this budget, I should like to report on the fiscal and economic aspects of federal-provincial affairs and on Ontario's place within the Canadian federation. Over the past several years, two things have become clearly evident. First, the federal government is firmly bent on a course of greater centralization and concentration of power in its own hands. Second, Ontario has been singled out for a reduced role in the building of our nation. Not only is the federal government disregarding the needs of this region but it is also pursuing policies which are seriously reducing our economic strength.

The evidence of the thrust toward centralized power grows every day. It is most apparent in the vital matter of finance. Not only has the federal government refused to consider further tax sharing—which is an obvious requirement in Canada because the major public problems and expenditure priorities lie at the provincial-municipal level—but it has also effectively pre-empted increased provincial tax effort by its own heavy use of the income tax field.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, you will recall the imposition of the social development tax. Moreover, the federal tax reform proposals overtly provide for an even greater concentration of fiscal resources at the federal level. The initial federal white paper proposals would generate large revenue gains for the federal government and reduce provincial sharing in capital gains revenues and other base-broadening reforms in the personal income tax field from 28 per cent to 22 per cent.

There has also been a concerted effort by the federal government to squeeze provincial pocketbooks by cutting back on its future financial commitments in shared-cost programmes. In the field of health insurance, for example, the federal government is advancing new sharing formulas which would work to reduce the maintenance of its financial commitment to these established programmes. At the same time, the federal government is attempting to extend its authority and involvement into areas of provincial jurisdiction such as consumer protection and securities regulation, notwithstanding the practical difficulties this will create and the significant progress which has already been made in inter-provincial uniformity and co-ordination.

In the thrust to expand federal primacy, it is also evident that Ontario is marked out for particular attention. Our regional needs obviously have been neglected by the federal government, particularly in such key fields as manpower and regional economic development. More important, however, federal economic and fiscal policies have been aimed deliberately at the curtailment of economic growth in this province.

The severe deflationary policies of the federal government since 1969 have driven the Ontario economy far below its potential and created unemployment levels that are the highest in a decade. The "temporary" surtaxes on personal and corporate incomes, of which over 50 per cent is collected in Ontario, have been extended rather than removed, while the federal government has initiated selective fiscal measures such as the depreciation penalty on commercial buildings in Toronto and other key urban centres.

From this, I can only conclude that the intention seems to be one of reducing regional disparities in Canada by diminishing the economic strength and standard of living in Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come now!

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): What a substitute for policy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In the face of these centralizing tendencies and the weakening of the Ontario economy, this government has only one course. We must act positively to protect the interests of our people.

Mr. Sargent: They have had 28 years to do that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Furthermore, we must reconsider, in a fundamental way, Ontario's basic role in Canadian federalism. The government of Ontario is convinced that national policies detrimental to Ontario are also detrimental to the national interest.

Mr. Sargent: Why not call an election then?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are also convinced that the proper course for Canada in the decades ahead is toward greater decentralization and recognition of regional differences, not toward centralization of power and responsibility in a single omniscient and distant government.

Mr. Lewis: Are we leaving Confederation? Self-determination for Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: National tax reform is the single most important issue facing Canadian federalism today. The decisions made on this vital matter of taxation in large measure will determine both the future progress of the Canadian economy and the future direction of federal-provincial relations.

In recognition of this, the Ontario government has made a large and constructive contribution to the process of national tax reform. Indeed, over the past year, we have advanced a complete alternative programme of tax reform which is clearly superior in respect of the two key objectives of equity and economic growth.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Superior to Ottawa!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Our reform proposals are generally supported by a consensus of the provinces and overwhelmingly by independent observers and tax specialists.

Altogether, Ontario has advanced three policy papers and five supporting studies on national tax reform in the interest of developing the best possible national tax system—a tax system that will provide genuine benefits for Canadian taxpayers, contribute to economic growth and national objectives and be acceptable to the provinces as well as the federal government.

Last June the government of Ontario presented its general proposals for reform of income taxation in Canada, concentrating particularly on those reforms we regard as essential for a fair distribution of individual income tax burden.

We followed this up with a detailed staff study setting out the revenue and incidence effects of Ontario's personal income tax reforms, and showing the advantages of Ontario's selective approach to low-income tax relief.

Subsequently, we developed and proposed a new and effective method of providing tax incentives to small businesses, along with a technical paper outlining how such an incentive system would work in practice.

Early this month we presented a third major policy paper and supporting technical studies showing that integration of personal and corporate income would be impractical and inflexible and should be abandoned as part of national tax reform.

In addition, we have maintained an ongoing programme of quantitative research which has allowed us to analyze the incidence effect and revenue implications both of the federal reform proposals and our own alternative reform recommendations. Our basic research has focused attention on the important matters of the revenue implications of tax reform and has provided major technical assistance to the federal government's capacity to quantify the impact of its proposals.

I believe that these efforts have been productive. They have raised materially the calibre of the technical underpinning of tax reform design. They have helped to ensure that all Canadians have had the benefit of a broad set of well-developed alternatives to the main federal tax reform proposals. Moreover, the federal government has already responded to many of our particular suggestions by agreeing that there shall be no tax increases as part of tax reform, by acknowledging the small-business problem and by magnifying its harsh initial proposals for the mining industry.

The Commons committee recommendations also moved strongly in the direction of this government's reform proposals, particularly in respect of capital gains taxation, retention of tax incentives for economic growth and the need to maintain an income tax system which can be used by both taxing jurisdictions.

But more is still required. In particular the new federal legislation should incorporate tax credits and selective low-income tax relief measures instead of universal tax exemptions, the integration proposals should be abandoned entirely, the federal surtaxes should be removed and the remaining reforms should be implemented on a priority basis and in manageable stages.

I am optimistic that the federal government will now recognize these requirements and produce final tax reform legislation that is broadly acceptable to the provinces and in the interests of Canadian taxpayers generally. We intend to continue our efforts toward the realization of this goal.

However, let me say that if the essential objectives that we seek are not met, or are thwarted by the new federal tax legislation, the Ontario government is prepared to proceed independently to achieve the maximum in reform for our own taxpayers. The situation demands nothing less.

Over the past five years Ontario and other provinces have repeatedly pointed out the fundamental fiscal imbalance in our Canadian federal system. The federal government enjoys a preponderance of elastic tax resources while the provincial governments and their municipal partners face the largest and fastest-growing expenditure commitments. This fiscal mismatch has been clearly documented by the tax structure committee, first in 1966 and again in 1970. It has been confirmed by the Economic Council of Canada, by several independent studies, and by Ontario's own recent study of revenue growth to 1980.

The facts, Mr. Speaker, are clear. Under the present division of taxing powers and expenditure responsibilities, the federal government commands vastly larger revenue resources than it needs to finance its expenditure programmes. The provincial-municipal sector, by contrast, is chronically under-financed.

The only sensible solution to this problem of basic fiscal imbalance is to transfer tax resources to the provincial-municipal level where they are needed to finance existing and emerging public priorities. In short, Canadian federalism needs a new deal in tax sharing, a deal which provides all levels of government with tax resources commensurate with their expenditure responsibilities.

The Ontario government will continue to press strongly for this overdue reform. This is what is required to contain total tax levels in Canada, to ease intergovernmental tensions and to reverse the trend toward central domination of the Canadian federation.

Reform of federal-provincial finance requires equally fundamental changes in the related area of shared-cost programmes. In fact, the existence of major shared-cost programmes demonstrates the essential contradiction in our system—the federal government has the money while the provinces have the responsibilities.

In preparation for the renegotiation of the existing shared-cost agreement, the federal government has increasingly been developing various new formula approaches in such fields as health insurance and post-secondary education. While there is some merit in these formulas themselves, the one obvious feature of them is that they reduce the future federal financial commitment in these established shared-cost programmes. If these formulas were implemented, therefore, the provinces would find themselves in an even worse financial predicament, while the federal government would acquire added capacity to invent new programmes and to further encroach on other governments' responsibilities.

This government cannot accept this application of federal leverage on its future budget flexibility. Accordingly, I wish to state now our clear intention to assume complete responsibility for the established shared-cost programmes in exchange for fiscal equivalence, and to resist rigorously the establishment of new shared-cost programmes. In the long run this solution will serve all governments better. It will eliminate complex bureaucratic procedures and leave each level of government the full responsibility to plan and finance its own programmes within its own framework of priorities.

Since 1968 the government of Ontario has participated actively and constructively in federal-provincial meetings to review the constitutional basis of the Canadian federation. What has emerged from these meetings is an awareness that there must be clearer jurisdictional demarcations and a major redistribution of powers to resolve the fiscal and functional problems of our federation.

At the heart of the problem, however, lies the financial impasse between the federal government and the provinces. Until there is substantial progress in tax sharing and unless the provinces achieve better financial arrangements with the federal government, I can see major obstacles in the way of any substantial advance in the other aspects of the constitutional review. Without this real reform of intergovernmental finance, other legal and jurisdictional improvements will be largely illusory, contributing little to the real capacity of governments in Canada to solve the day-to-day problems of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, let me proceed to the first of the priorities in this budget—the policies which we are proposing to reduce unemployment and to restore vigorous economic expansion in Ontario.

In early 1970—over a year ago—and again in last year's budget, the Ontario government warned the federal government that the single-purpose thrust of its policies to reduce inflation would create unacceptably high levels of unemployment throughout Canada. Unhappily, the accuracy of that prediction is now all too clear. Unemployment mounted steadily in 1970 and now stands at 4.9 per cent of the labour force in Ontario, and six per cent nationally.

These bald statistics do not, of course, reveal the true human meaning of the situation. Low-income workers have been particularly hard hit, as have young people and students who find themselves unable to enter the labour force in ways which fully utilize their abilities and training. During this period of forced slowdown, large numbers of older employees have lost their jobs and many of them will find it difficult, if not impossible, to secure equivalent positions when the economy ultimately recovers.

The real cost of unemployment to these people has been enormous, not just in terms of lost incomes but also in terms of human dignity and family security. In addition, there has been a heavy cost to the community at large in lost output and weakened confidence. The Ontario government did not agree a year ago and does not agree now that this deliberate federal policy of high unemployment is a sound and just way to fight inflation.

Recently, sir, the federal government has relaxed its deflationary monetary and fiscal policy and the economy has shown modest signs of recovery. However, the revival of employment is likely to be both slow and delayed, so that unless further expansionary measures are taken, unemployment is likely to remain at high levels throughout 1971.

I strongly urge the government of Canada to introduce further positive measures to reinforce expansion and create jobs. Let me say, however, that I do not regard increased federal spending as an appropriate means to this end. Canada's experience over the past few years surely has proved that governments cannot spend the country back to prosperity. Rather, I would recommend the following steps:

Eliminate the federal three per cent temporary surtaxes to increase personal and corporate incomes by $250 million across Canada; introduce income tax credits to reduce the tax burden on low-income Canadians; and take positive measures to reduce long-run interest and mortgage rates and to lower the exchange value of the Canadian dollar.

Such measures by the federal government would increase consumer purchasing power, stimulate exports—

Mr. Sargent: They have their own plans. They do not need the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and restore business confidence and willingness to invest. As such, they would constitute a national policy for economic revival which would benefit all the regions of Canada, and would provide an overall policy framework within which provincial actions could be developed.

The new government of Ontario has promised the people of this province that it will combat the current intolerable level of unemployment with every means at its command.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): That is really new.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Our objective is to reduce unemployment to three per cent as quickly as possible.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): How?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To achieve this target, 150,000 new jobs are needed in Ontario this year.

Mr. Lewis: Have you not already got 132,000?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This budget has been designed to commit the maximum resources at our disposal to achieve this goal. However, I must stress again that we cannot do it alone. It is critical that our actions be reinforced by the full use of the major fiscal and monetary policy instruments at the disposal of the government of Canada.

As we indicated to the House last fall, the government of Ontario's budgetary operations became increasingly expansionary during the 1970-1971 fiscal year, in response to deteriorating economic conditions. The original budgetary target for 1970-1971 was a modest surplus of $11.3 million. However, in the course of the year we decided it was appropriate to increase expenditures by advancing the implementation of certain high priority programmes and introducing measures to combat unemployment directly. As a result the budgetary operations for 1970-1971 moved to a final deficit position of $115 million, which represents an expansionary swing of $126 million.

To meet our economic objectives it is necessary that our expansionary policy be continued and increased. Consequently the budget plan which I am presenting today calls for a deficit of $415 million, an increase in the deficit of $300 million over last year. While a deficit of this magnitude can be expected to exert a significant stimulus to the economy in an aggregate sense, the composition of the deficit is also of prime importance.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): How much for housing this time?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Generally, governments can achieve deficits either through expenditure increases or tax cuts. As I have said, it is the view of this government that a sound plan for economic recovery in Canada involves more than merely incurring large deficits by indiscriminate increases in spending. Large-scale expenditure increases may appear to be appropriate in recessionary periods, but they can also work to impede economic revival.

The expansion of the government sector can be distortionary as the economy moves back to full employment, insofar as it pre-empted economic resources that can be used more productively in the private sector and ultimately result in tax increases. Each of these factors can generate inflationary pressures and precipitate a second wave of restrictive fiscal and monetary policy.

For these reasons the government has decided to pursue the alternative route of stimulating the economy primarily by tax reductions, while containing expenditure growth within the limits of our long-term financial capacity. By these means we plan to increase private economic activity in investment and to expand employment without reactivating inflationary pressures.

Our budgetary policy for 1971-1972 is based on the use of the full-employment budgeting approach to fiscal policy formulation. This new technique is fully explained in the accompanying budget paper A. Full-employment budgeting is particularly relevant to the current economic situation and the problem of fiscal policy co-ordination in the Canadian federal system.

Budgetary deficits are commonly understood to be expansionary. However, the full-employment budget adds a new dimension to this conventional approach to fiscal policy formulation. It emphasizes the way in which revenues increase as economic activity revives and exert a "tax drag," thereby slowing down economic expansion, possibly before full employment has been achieved.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): John Maynard Keynes resurrected!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: At the present time the Ontario economy is operating at about five per cent below its full employment potential, which means that we are losing some $2 billion in potential gross provincial product, and about $250 million in potential provincial revenues. As we demonstrated in our 1970 budget paper B, the federal government's budgetary operations in Ontario involve a permanent surplus; which first exerts a continuing contractionary impact on our economy regardless of the level of economic activity, and second increases rapidly as activity increases.

Our plan for offsetting the slack in the economy and counteracting the federal government's tax drag in Ontario is explained in an accompanying table (see appendix). This shows two main actions:

1. In line with our objective of controlling the growth of the public sector, our expenditures have been held to a level of $4.26 billion. This closely matches the level of expenditures which would be appropriate for us if the economy were operating at full employment.

2. We have cut taxes in a way which restores the growth potential of our economy.

Thus without any tax cuts our revenues at full employment could be expected to increase to some $4.17 billion with a resulting deficit of $80 million. However, by cutting taxes we will reduce the growth potential of revenues at full employment by about $70 million to a total of $4.1 billion, with a resulting deficit of $150 million.

Most important, however, the tax cuts in this budget are designed to offset part of the fiscal drag of federal revenue growth, as the economy reacts to our planned budgetary deficit of $415 million for 1971-1972. To the extent that our fiscal policy is successful in reviving economic growth and employment in Ontario, our ultimate budgetary deficit could be reduced.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the section dealing with expenditures. The overall policy thrust of this budget is comprised of a set of carefully co-ordinated expenditure and tax actions. On the expenditure side, I am advancing a plan amounting to $4,262 million for 1971-1972, which is an increase in spending of 10.7 per cent over the 1970-1971 fiscal year.

This level of expenditure will allow the continuation of our existing programmes, the introduction of several important new programmes and progress toward increasing our financial support to school boards and municipalities. The expenditure programme which I am presenting today is a programme of priorities and a plan for the controlled use of public resources.

Although there is a substantial slack in the provincial economy, the government has resisted pressures to embark on uncontrolled increases in spending in order to generate an expansionary economic impact. Rather, we have held down our spending to make room for the private sector, to permit expansionary tax reductions and to stay within the discipline of the normal growth of our revenues.

We have exercised a maximum of restraint on cost pressures within the provincial sector itself, and we have requested our local government partners to exercise similar restraint. We have consciously striven to reduce the administrative and overhead components of our expenditure programme and to increase the delivery of real services.

Finally, we have continued to allocate our limited resources toward the most essential needs of our growing society and toward our long-term provincial-municipal reform programme.

We have tackled the job of controlling public spending in four main ways.

First, we have introduced expenditure guidelines for school boards in order to relieve the pressure on property taxes and to provide scope for other priority areas of local spending. Second, we have imposed strict constraints on the province's own-account spending and on cost increases within the public service.

Third, we have begun a basic reorganization of our departmental structure in order to streamline decision-making, realign programme responsibilities and achieve the maximum economy within government itself.

Mr. T. Reid: What about the cabinet?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Fourth, we are evaluating all our programmes and grants with a view to eliminating those which have outlived their original purpose, simplifying wherever possible and generally getting more value for our money.

Mr. Sargent: Like 24 cabinet ministers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: As the hon. members are aware, Mr. Speaker, the growing demand for essential services has placed enormous pressure on the financial resources of the province and its local government partners in recent years. Nowhere has this been more evident than in the field of education. In the past we have concentrated vast resources on the expansion and improvement of Ontario's school system in order to accommodate burgeoning enrolment and to provide the best possible education programme for our young people.

Now the growth pressure on our elementary and secondary education system is abating and this gives us a real opportunity to stabilize costs and reduce education levies without any sacrifice in the quality of education in this province.

The school board cost guidelines which we have established this year aim to achieve these desirable objectives. The expenditure ceilings already announced are sufficiently generous to permit every school board to maintain and even improve the content and quality of its service while preventing excessive increases in overall expenditures. In conjunction with this necessary and desirable control on school board spending, the province has budgeted for a further large increase in its legislative grants in 1971-1972. Over and above the legislative grants to finance last year's 51 per cent support we have provided an additional $72 million to raise the province's share of education financing to 55 per cent in 1971-1972.

Mr. Sargent: Should be 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am convinced that these two measures—expenditure control and increased provincial support—will ensure an improved cost performance in the education sector without any deterioration in quality and a reduction in school property taxes across the province generally.

The second major policy of restraint which we have pursued is in the area of the spending for administration, overhead and public service costs. In the estimates review process we placed major emphasis on limiting the growth in the size of the civil service. As a result the province's civil service complement will increase by only 1.6 per cent in 1971-1972.

Many departments will operate with no complement increase at all. Where staff additions have been approved, we have given the highest priority to those programmes which provide a direct service to the public rather than to those which increase the overhead costs of the government.

The Department of Correctional Services, for example, has been allowed a complement increase of 192 staff to operate the new Sudbury Training School and two Outward Bound camps. The largest increase—332 additional complement—was approved for The Department of Health, almost all of whom were required to staff our hospitals for the mentally retarded and our new school for retarded children at Picton. Increases in The Department of Justice and the Ontario Provincial Police have been provided to speed up the processing of cases through our courts and to maintain effective policing across the province generally.

Increased staff is also required to continue our municipal assessment programme, to provide additional services to municipalities in community planning and to handle the increased welfare case-load arising from high unemployment. The Ontario Housing Corporation has been allocated 93 extra complements to handle the 10,000 additional housing units it will administer in the coming year.

These departments account for the bulk of the 1,129 overall increase in staff approved for the new fiscal year. The remainder is distributed among a number of departments in recognition of increasing work loads and the introduction of new services. The accompanying table shows the public service complement for each department as of April 1, 1971, and the minimal increases planned for this year except in those areas of proved need.

In addition to limiting increases in civil service complement, I am also aiming to contain the increase in wage and salary scales to an average of five per cent for 1971-1972. This cost-control target will minimize the impact of provincial wage settlements as a potential source of inflationary pressure in the economy. To reinforce this measure the government is conducting an intensive and thorough investigation of ways and means to improve productivity over the whole spectrum of Ontario's public sector.

I am confident that our efforts in these directions will pay off in terms of a more efficient public service, more value for public money spent and more resources for use by the private sector and by taxpayers themselves.

The third means by which the new government aims to control spending and improve performance is by reforming the structure of government itself. As announced in the Speech from the Throne, we plan major departments along modern functional lines to ensure that government remains a positive and responsive instrument of our citizenry.

For example, the main branches and agencies in Ontario departments that deal with environmental management, conservation and protection will be brought together in a new Ontario Department of the Environment. Equally important consolidation of functions is planned in the areas of transportation, in communications, post-secondary education and health care insurance. In addition the government is implementing the recommendations of its committee on government productivity.

These internal reforms and departmental reorganizations are vital for the realization of long-term economies in government and controlled management of the Ontario public sector.

Fourth, we are continuing and intensifying our review and evaluation of all programmes and grants in terms of their costs, their benefits and their relative priority. Through our programme budgeting system we are emphasizing policy objectives and least-cost methods of achieving these objectives so that the province's limited finances are used with maximum effectiveness. This is an immense long-run task, but one which is imperative if the government is to achieve maximum economy and expenditure management.

One elementary fact must be recognized. If government spending is to be contained, then some existing programmes must be cut back or eliminated in order to make room for more urgent priorities. Certainly we cannot add new programmes on top of all our existing programmes. Rationalization and simplification of our grants to local government is a major goal of this overall review and evaluation programme.

As discussed in budget paper B, our aim is to eliminate many existing grants, reduce the number of provincial and municipal civil servants occupied in processing grants and unconditionalize provincial financial transfers to permit greater budget autonomy for our local governments.

Having indicated, sir, some of the ways in which we are moving to control the growth in basic cost elements in the government, let me turn now to the composition of our expenditure programme for this year. Net general expenditures of $4,262 million have been planned in 1971-1972. Of this total programme, some $2,666 million will be taken up by transfer payments for operating purposes to other spending units—to school boards, municipalities, institutions and people.

A further $287 million will be transferred in the form of grants for capital purposes. The province's own capital programme will amount to $300 million and the remaining $1,009 million will be taken up in direct operating costs. In terms of overall structure, therefore, 69 per cent of 1971-1972 spending consists of operating and capital transfer payments, seven per cent is direct capital spending and 24 per cent goes to operate our own provincial programmes.

This distribution of the 1971-1972 outlays continues the dynamic shift in our expenditure structure that was documented in the 1970 budget. Transfer payments are taking up a larger and larger share of total expenditures, while our own account spending and investment are diminishing in relative importance.

Net general expenditures are planned to increase by $411 million or 10.7 per cent in 1971-1972. Transfer payments for operating purposes will account for $304 million of this increase, up 12.9 per cent over last year. This large additional commitment is required both to continue our programmes of financial support to local governments, institutions and people, and to advance our provincial-municipal reform programme. Direct provincial spending will increase by $95 million or 10.4 per cent over 1970-1971.

The bulk of this increase will go to provide better services to the public, such as new facilities for emotionally disturbed children, expanded facilities for juvenile offenders, improved police protection and to meet increased interest costs on our public debt. As I have already said, we instructed our departments to cut administrative and overhead costs rigorously in order to provide scope for this expansion in essential provincial services.

On the investment side, we have placed our major emphasis on loans and advances rather than on direct capital spending and grants. Direct capital spending and capital grants have been increased by only $11 million while loans and advances are up $109 million or 17.9 per cent. These loans and advances to municipalities and school boards, post-secondary education institutions, hospitals and our housing agencies have the same economic impact as direct investment by government departments.

I have given emphasis to those areas of capital spending and lending which have a social priority and economic growth impact. Accordingly, the largest increases have been allotted to housing, environmental management, hospital construction and our new programme for land acquisition.

An accompanying table (see appendix), sets out these major dimensions of our expenditure and investment programme for 1971-1972 and shows where we have allocated our increased resources. I would call your attention, in particular, to the increased resources we are devoting to the broad field of education. In total, our allocation to school boards, universities, community colleges and Ryerson will increase by over $220 million in 1971-1972.

The bulk of this overall increase is accounted for by legislative grants and by our financing of the colleges of applied arts and technology. Payments to universities will increase by only $9 million, but this arises because of a change in the fiscal year-end of our universities from June 30 to April 30. We have established a value of $1,730 for the basic income unit in 1971-1972 and we have agreed to increase this measure of support to universities to $1,765 in 1972-1973. We have also agreed to increase the weighting of part-time students in the determination of basic income units; the present weighting of one-sixth will be changed to one-fifth over the two years, 1972-1973 and 1973-1974.

The composition of our overall spending and investment programme is summarized in budget paper C which accompanies this statement. I would also remind members that the complete details of our expenditure programme for next year are shown in the government's 1971-1972 estimates which have been tabled along with the budget. In passing, it should be noted that the format of the estimates has been changed substantially in line with the recommendations of the public accounts committee. In the remaining discussion of the expenditure side of this budget, therefore, I should like to focus on the policy highlights of reform and increased employment and to outline the major new dimensions of our programme for the future.

Progress toward reform in provincial-municipal taxation and finance is one of the highest priorities in this budget. We are unequivocally committed to the long-run goal of increasing our financial support to local governments in order to reduce the burden of financing that falls upon the property tax. In this budget, I have allocated a further $78 million toward permanent reform.

The bulk of this will serve to increase our financial support to school boards to 55 per cent in 1971-1972. In addition, we propose to broaden the local tax base by permitting municipalities to tax the presently exempt properties of our colleges of applied arts and technology, as well as our provincial parklands. We are also providing major assistance to the recently established York regional government, the Muskoka district government and our other regional governments.

While these new reform measures will require $78 million in 1971-1972—

Mr. MacDonald: The Treasurer is not really happy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —their costs will grow each year in future as the local expenditure base expands. This is amply demonstrated by looking at the additional cost in 1971-1972 of last year's reform move from 46.5 per cent to almost 51 per cent of school board support. Because school board spending will increase by some $172 million from 1970 to 1971, the four-point increase in provincial support implemented in last year's budget costs an additional $7 million in this budget.

The costs of our other reforms have also mounted in value in each succeeding year after being implemented and this tendency can be expected to continue in the future. The combination of previous reform moves made over the past three years, the accumulating value of these reforms and the $78 million in additional reforms in this budget result in a total reform effort by the province of $461 million in the 1971-1972 fiscal year, as shown in budget paper B.

Budget paper B accompanying this statement provides a complete progress report on our long-term programme of reform in provincial-municipal finance and property taxation. It shows how the province's reform policies have taken hold since 1968 to alleviate the financial squeeze on local governments and reduce property tax burdens. Property tax increases between 1967 and 1970, for example, decelerated to half their annual rate of growth in 1960-1967. In 1971

we look forward to no increase in education taxes and only a moderate increase in municipal taxes. This great improvement has been due almost entirely—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is a reduction—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —to our greatly increased provincial grants. Without this on-going shift in financing from local governments to the province, an additional $461 million in property tax revenues would have been required to maintain local services in 1971-1972.

I would call your attention to one particular reform that this government intends to implement in 1971-1972. This concerns the method by which we make payments to mining municipalities.

The new formula which we intend to implement will involve a net increase of $400,000 in payments to the municipalities and school boards in mining areas in 1971-1972. The payment for municipal purposes will increase by a further $1.25 million in 1973-1973, and when the formula is completely operative in 1973-1974 the payment will again increase by $1.25 million. Taking into account increased costs, it is anticipated that the additional revenue transferred will exceed $3 million by that time.

The new formula will also improve the distribution of these payments by more closely reflecting the fiscal capacities of designated mining municipalities. This programme will be, in effect, a first step toward a "needs-resources" type of grant system. Consequently, the new formula will relate future payments to both the level of equalized per capita assessment and the level of expenditure for municipal purposes in each municipality. In those municipalities in which less than 10 per cent of the population is directly employed by the mining industry, the payment will also be related to the ratio of resident mining employees to population.

We are also working to implement two further reforms to strengthen the financial base of our municipalities.

First, we propose to introduce in January 1972 an improved system of unconditional grants. The new unconditional grant will be designed to eliminate the criticism that the Ontario Committee on Taxation made of this programme, particularly the sharp cutoff points based on the size of population, and to recognize the cost of providing policing in those municipalities which provide their own services. The additional benefits that will accrue to the municipalities under these reforms will be in the order of $16 million annually, and the province will ensure that no municipality receives less than it would receive under the existing system.

Second, we propose to accelerate the timing of our payments to municipalities, particularly in the areas of regional government, unconditional grants and highway grants. While this move will not involve any additional cost to the province, it will help municipalities achieve a better balance between inflows and outflows during the course of the year. Full details of these new schemes will be announced by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales).

As I stressed earlier, this government is committed to the goal of restoring full employment in Ontario. We are convinced, however, that the way to achieve this objective, and to achieve it as quickly as possible, is by tax cuts which encourage investment and expansion of private sector activity and not by wholesale expansion of government spending.

The expenditure method of tackling unemployment has major drawbacks. There is a substantial lag between the time money is budgeted for expanded programmes and the time it is actually spent and begins to work its way through the economy, thereby creating jobs.

Moreover, temporary increases in government spending tend to become permanent, they get locked into the programme structure and continue long after the original need has vanished. There is a role for expenditures, however, in relieving severe winter unemployment and student unemployment. This budget allocates substantial funds for these specific aspects of the overall unemployment problem.

The government has already taken steps to ease the immediate unemployment situation. Last fall we established a cabinet committee to develop policies for alleviating winter unemployment. A package of programmes which included parks cleanup, removal of diseased elm trees and acceleration of highway construction was quickly assembled and by late January some 1,200 were employed.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): It went over big in northern Ontario!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This Ontario seasonal employment programme was subsequently expanded to provide employment for almost 4,500 men at a cost of $8.75 million—

Mr. Sargent: Not even one per cent.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—and has now been extended to the end of April. In addition, a special municipal works incentive programme was established at a cost of $7.5 million to encourage municipalities to hire additional workers during the period April to June. We expect that this direct and simple grant programme will create an additional 7,500 jobs. In total then, Ontario's direct contribution to relieve immediate unemployment has reached over $16 million and should create an estimated 12,000 seasonal jobs.

Mr. Sargent: Not 132,000?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In contrast to these positive efforts of the province itself, let me report on the federal loan programme for relieving winter unemployment. The federal programme was announced in the December 3 budget, with $17 million allocated as Ontario's share of the national loan fund—I say, sir, hardly a generous amount in relation to the size of our unemployment problem.

In fact, at one point after the programme and provincial allocations were first announced, Ontario's share was actually reduced to $9.3 million. Moreover, it became quickly apparent to us that the federal loan programme was restrictive in respect of eligible projects, ungenerous in respect of the interest rate and repayment terms, and overly complex in its administrative and accounting requirements.

We bargained hard to remove the complicated bureaucratic procedures, to restore the original allotment and to extend the repayment term to 25 years. It was not until late January that our allotment of $17 million was confirmed and not until early March that we received a final decision that the repayment term would be 20 years.

In any case, the Ontario government is acting only as a financial intermediary to channel the $17 million in federal loans for approved capital works programmes to our municipalities. We have, on our own account, extended the repayment period to 25 years and fixed a maximum interest rate of seven per cent.

Mr. Sargent: Three and a half per cent in Nova Scotia!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We will pass on to the municipalities any savings if the actual rate under the federal formula turns out to be lower. Because the federal programme is concerned with capital projects and our municipalities have already finalized their capital budgets for 1971, I must state candidly that I do not expect it will have any major employment impact in Ontario until next winter.

In consideration of the problem of student employment, funds have been provided in this budget to expand greatly Ontario's direct efforts to provide job opportunities during the coming summer. Our departments, agencies and commissions themselves will employ 14,000 students, an increase of 3,000 or 27 per cent over the number hired last year. By contrast, the federal government has announced that it will increase its direct student employment by only 500 to a total of 23,000 this summer.

The payroll cost of Ontario's student employment programme will exceed $17 million. We will also spend about $1 million to provide summer activities and opportunities for young people in various athletic, artistic and social programmes. Beyond these steps by the province itself, we intend to actively encourage the business community and the private sector to offer the maximum job opportunities possible for our student population.

While we have concentrated on cost control, continued reform and employment generation within our on-going expenditure programme, this budget also provides funds for major expansions in priority areas and for new initiatives. In the field of housing, for example, we have doubled our commitment for direct lending. This provincial financing, along with funds from CMHC and the chartered banks, will generate a high level of housing starts in 1971 and beyond.

We have allocated funds within the highway estimates to provide financial assistance to urban transit systems, which is a real and pressing need in our increasingly urban and mobile society.

Similarly, in the area of environmental control we have allocated large additional funds. The capital spending to OWRC alone will increase by 27 per cent to a level of $50 million for the coming year. Along with outlays in operating costs, direct investment, loans and transfer payments, our total environmental management programme will amount to $92 million in 1971-1972.

In this budget I have set aside $20 million for a new land bank programme to be operated by the province. This will be the initial funding of the new Ontario Land Acquisition Corporation. Its purpose will be to acquire land for future public use, particularly land in and around our urban centres and recreation areas. With such a land bank programme, the province will be in a better position to implement its policies in the areas of regional development, urban development, recreation, transportation and communication and housing.

The corporation will also serve as the vehicle to co-ordinate land use planning and research as well as the land acquisition programmes now undertaken in a number of departments. Over the years the corporation will require greatly increased finances from the province as it builds up a large land holding. We intend to set aside the maximum resources possible for this purpose and thereby preserve for future generations of Ontario citizens an adequate stock of public land in every part of the province.

Though not specifically reflected in budgetary expenditures, regional development is a major consideration in all our spending decisions. The regional development programme is one of the most important responsibilities of the Treasurer of Ontario and Minister of Economics. Consequently, I intend to ensure that all proposals coming before cabinet and the Treasury Board with regional implications will be reviewed and assessed in the light of our regional development policies. I will also endeavour to ensure that in the development of long-run expenditure plans and priorities within individual departments and agencies, the regional component will be clearly identified and stressed.

I will also carry forward the work of my predecessor aimed at ensuring that federal expenditures within Ontario will complement the province's planning objectives. The new international airport is a case in point. This large project will have far-reaching effects within Ontario; hence we have insisted that the location and construction of such an airport must be co-ordinated with provincial development objectives and expenditure programmes.

The Toronto-centred region is perhaps our largest single regional development priority at the present time. On the basis of favourable reaction to our development concept and our own followup work since last May, the government has decided to endorse the principles of this basic plan as the guideline for provincial decision-making in the Toronto-centred region. We intend to apply the main elements of the Toronto-centred region concept in assessing and deciding on proposals submitted by municipalities. This reaffirmation of provincial intent should help to resolve a number of outstanding conflicts which have emerged since the Toronto-centred region concept was announced. To accelerate provincial planning in the Toronto-centred region, and in other regions generally, we have allocated more resources to The Department of Treasury and Economics and other departments.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that commencing on April 1, 1972, Ontario will expand further its health care insurance programme to cover nursing homes and home care services.

Mr. J. Renwick: Not until 1972?

Mr. MacDonald: Why wait until 1972?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, an expansion of this dimension requires a lead time of at least nine months to bring new facilities on stream. We are preparing a comprehensive plan for orderly integration of these presently uninsured services into our health insurance programme and to develop further, as rapidly as possible, the related programme of community home-care arrangements.

This major extension of our insured services means that Ontario will have one of the most comprehensive health insurance systems anywhere in the world.

The benefits flowing from this move are abundant: A heavy burden of financing will be lifted from individual families and spread over the population as a whole; the demand for active treatment hospital beds will be relieved and many patients will be able to receive care in their own homes and in their own communities.

It should be recognized that the costs of this major improvement in our health insurance system will be high. I estimate the net cost of this extended care to be over $50 million in 1972, rising to $100 million by 1975. This assumes that a fee of $3.50 per day will be charged. There will be some offsetting savings from a reduced need—

Mr. Lewis: That is quite an insured service!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There will be some offsetting savings for a reduced need for active treatment beds, but these economies will only appear over a number of years. The federal government has been unwilling, at least up to the present, to assume any share of these increased insurance costs, despite the fact that in the long run this co-ordinated and comprehensive programme would be more effective and economic than our present arrangements. We hope that the federal government will eventually agree to participate in the financing of these additional services.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Treasurer mean elderly people at $105 a month can afford nursing home costs? A deterrent fee for elderly people? Is that what it is?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): The member should worry about the mad professor and just leave the economy to us.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They would be receiving $111-plus in GIS.

Mr. Lewis: They receive $135 and they pay $105. That is a very generous programme.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): We will explain it to the member.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We hope that the federal government will eventually agree to participate in the financing of these additional services, but in the meantime the Ontario government is not willing to wait any longer for a federal decision and is prepared to carry the entire financing on its own. My colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) will be announcing the full details of this major provincial initiative.

Mr. Speaker, I come now to the vital matter of tax policy—the key initiative in this budget to stimulate a revival of economic growth and job opportunities in Ontario. As I stated earlier, the government of Ontario is convinced that the best way to achieve economic recovery is by reducing taxes.

In particular, we believe that immediate and significant tax cuts are required in two main areas: First, personal income taxes should be cut in order to bolster consumer purchasing power, and second, corporate taxation should be reduced in order to restore business confidence and stimulate investment and economic growth.

Let me say that I would have liked to reduce personal income taxes, but for several reasons this option is not realistically open to us.

First, under the terms of the federal-provincial collection agreement, Ontario cannot change its personal income tax rates before January 1, 1972.

Second, moreover the only type of change we could make is a costly across-the-board decrease in rates. We cannot make the less costly selective reductions for low-income groups of the type we think are needed and would be in line with our long-run reform proposals.

Third, the pressures of Ontario's long-run revenue requirements mean that we can only afford to finance a temporary tax cut, whereas a permanent reduction in personal income tax is required. It would be incongruous for Ontario to cut its income tax rates while the federal government continues its so-called temporary surtaxes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: For these reasons, therefore, I have decided to concentrate our limited capacity to finance tax cuts on a major move designed to produce a massive stimulus to business investment.

Mr. Lewis: Who are the minister's friends in this budget?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Tax cuts in this area can be more appropriately implemented for a limited period; and they have the important effect of expanding the economy's productive capacity in ways which relieve inflationary bottlenecks. While we are unable to increase individual incomes through direct income tax reductions, several of our actions in the area of municipal finance will have important indirect results to this effect. The control of school board spending, increased municipal and education grants and increased property tax rebates will work to reduce and contain the impact of property taxes on disposable incomes.

Mr. Sargent: And efficient overtaxation!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In moving on the investment side, I must emphasize that our measures alone cannot be expected to return the economy to full employment. For this reason we expect the federal government to add its weight to our policies by implementing complementary tax cuts in its forthcoming budget.

In particular, as I have already said, we invite the federal government to complete the pattern of tax cuts by reducing personal and corporate income taxes on a national basis through the elimination of the "temporary" three per cent federal surtaxes.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Economic illiteracy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I intend to incorporate a major new incentive in the province's corporation income tax to stimulate business investment and to create new jobs in Ontario. The incentive which I am proposing is a five per cent tax credit for investment in machinery and equipment that is purchased after midnight this day, April 26, 1971, and put in place and used in Ontario by March 31, 1973. In other words, for every $100 of investment in machinery and equipment during this period, companies will be eligible to reduce their tax payments to the province by $5. On $1 million investment the tax saving would be $50,000.

Mr. Peacock: Why does not the Treasurer just exempt it from the sales tax?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On a $20 million investment programme a company could reduce its taxes by $1 million. I expect—

Mr. MacDonald: Three cheers from those who contribute to the Treasurer's election fund.

Mr. Pilkey: What about the little guy? Where does he fit in?

Mr. Sargent: That is on new equipment? Twenty million dollars on equipment?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I expect this measure to be a powerful incentive for business expansion in Ontario; hence I am anticipating a gross revenue loss of $125 million in corporation income tax in 1971-1972, and perhaps an equivalent loss in 1972-1973.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer will need more help than this.

Mr. Sargent: How many jobs will the budget create?

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer's corporate friends will be happy, if not the people in the province. That is Tory budgeting.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This tax credit approach to stimulating investment, economic growth and job opportunities in Ontario has major advantages over alternative measures.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They should tell us about their Waffle friends.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I would suggest that the hon. members of the House, like the rest of the people of this province, would like to hear the Treasurer's budget speech. Over the years the tradition has been that there would not be too much interruption. I would ask that the Treasurer proceed.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer can charge $3.50 a day to give corporations a cut. Just a gentle word.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that as long as the member for Grey-Bruce wants to go on embarrassing his leader and his party he is welcome to do it. He is not interrupting me.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I guess this will be the Treasurer's last budget.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The people of Ontario should see it.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): The NDP leader has got a yellow smile on his kisser.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this tax credit approach to stimulating investment, economic growth and job opportunities in Ontario has major advantages over alternative measures. It will have an immediate impact because it produces immediate tax savings to companies that invest in economic expansion. It does not reduce the value of basic capital cost allowances. It is simple to understand and administer. It can be implemented and removed without distorting long-run arrangements. It will assist in the modernization of capital stock in this province to increase the long-run productivity of Ontario industry, and will help to achieve other social and economic objectives, particularly increased investment in pollution abatement equipment.

This five per cent tax credit—

Mr. Bullbrook: Will it help the people?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This government will help the people by getting the people back to work.

An hon. member: I thought the member for Sarnia would not understand.

Mr. Bullbrook: A typical Tory approach.

An hon. member: It must be good. The opposition is upset.

Mr. Pilkey: Which is part of those 132,000 jobs?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this five per cent tax credit will be available to every company paying tax or liable to pay corporation income tax to the Ontario government. It will not be restricted to particular industries or particular sizes of companies, nor will there be upper or lower limits on the amount of investment that will qualify. Machinery and equipment investment will be defined generously to include most types of equipment, new or used—

Mr. Sargent: The Treasurer does not know how he is going to do it, but he is going to do it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —but will exclude leasing arrangements, trucks, cars and buildings. I have excluded trucks and cars on the grounds that no specific incentive is warranted for this type of investment. Buildings have also been excluded because an incentive geared to machinery and equipment investment will stimulate new construction to house these assets in any event. This investment tax credit will also not affect the normal capital cost allowance write-offs by corporations; rather, it is in the nature of a temporary bonus over and above the regular depreciation system.

Finally, to ensure that all Ontario corporations can take full advantage of this incentive, loss companies will be allowed one additional year, to April 1, 1974, to generate profits against which the investment tax credit may be deducted.

Fuller details of this tax change, and the following tax changes, are provided in the appendix following the budget statement.

A major anomaly of present Canadian tax law is that foreign companies enjoy a tax advantage over Canadian companies in bidding to take over other companies. This advantage arises because foreign purchasers, particularly United States corporations, can deduct the interest costs of funds borrowed to purchase shares in other companies, including Canadian companies, whereas a rival Canadian buyer cannot deduct comparable interest costs. This unfortunate and illogical situation has been allowed to continue on the grounds that income from purchase of shares is exempt from tax, hence there should be no deduction for exempt income. Whatever the validity of this tax principle, this feature of our tax law has undoubtedly been an important factor in the ability of foreign companies to acquire Canadian firms.

The Ontario government is convinced that the present restrictive rule should be removed immediately.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Consequently, I am proposing to amend Ontario's corporation income tax legislation to permit deduction of the interest costs on money borrowed to purchase shares in other companies. This amendment will undoubtedly entail revenue losses. I am convinced, however, that such losses are fully warranted in order to achieve the objective of greater participation by Canadians in the economic development of this province and of Canada as a whole.

In my recent policy paper on the reform of the taxation of corporations and shareholders, I urged the federal government to include this step in its tax reform legislation. I take this opportunity to stress again the common sense and the urgency of such a move. Relaxation of the federal tax law to allow deduction of interest costs, along with the move Ontario is now making in its corporation income tax, would put Canadian companies on a more competitive footing with foreign companies in bidding for shares in Canadian and non-Canadian companies. It would mean, in effect, that potential Canadian buyers would be able to finance acquisitions on the same terms, at least in respect of taxes, as rival foreign buyers; hence they would presumably enjoy greater success in maintaining Canadian control and participation in Canadian business.

Mr. Sopha: Has the Treasurer got anything for the poor people?

Mr. Bullbrook: Nothing at all!

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Nothing for the lawyers!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Let me reaffirm the intention of this government to vacate—

Mr. Bullbrook: Lots for the corporations!

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): How about that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —the succession duties field of taxation. This policy was formulated in 1969, following the introduction by the federal government of a completely revamped Estate Tax Act. We proposed to relinquish the death duties field to the federal government in exchange for 75 per cent of the revenues that accrue in Ontario from full application of the federal estate tax. This would put Ontario in the same position as the seven provinces that have no death duties of their own.

Mr. Bullbrook: That really helps the poor people, does it not?

Mr. Sopha: The fairest tax ever invented by man.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have decided not to eliminate our succession duties in a single step. There are three sound reasons for such a gradual approach.

First there is the matter of revenue losses. Complete elimination of succession duties would entail a loss of revenues to the province of about $25 million a year.

Mr. Sopha: That would be immoral.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Second, the continuation of Ontario's succession duties, along with the half-application of the federal estate tax, will result in lower total taxation in many instances than under the full application of the federal estate tax alone.

Mr. Sopha: Shame on you!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Third, it is important to establish a connection between estate taxation and capital gains taxation. The Ontario government believes that death duties should be reduced as capital gains taxation comes into effect. The federal government, by contrast, has not recognized the interdependence of these two taxes on wealth and the consequent need to make compensating reductions in estate tax when a capital gains tax is introduced. It is prudent, therefore, for the province to retain some presence in the succession duties field until we see what form of capital gains tax is finally legislated and to ensure that the province participates fairly in the revenues.

Our interim policy, therefore, is to reduce succession duties progressively until the combined succession duties and estate tax revenues generate no more revenue than full application of the federal estate tax alone.

Mr. Bullbrook: Blatant regard for the rich!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To advance another significant step in this budget, I am recommending the following changes in our succession duties legislation in respect of deaths occurring after midnight this day, April 26, 1971:

The exemptions for widows and widowers will be increased from $125,000 to $250,000.

The 15 per cent surtax will be eliminated for preferred beneficiaries which include children and grandchildren;

Preferred beneficiaries will not be subject to duty on estates valued up to $100,000, as compared to the present level of $50,000; and,

The exemption for non-commutable annuities will be raised from $1,200 to $10,000 in aggregate.

This package of amendments will effectively eliminate succession duties on the vast majority of estates. I estimate that as a result of these changes, fewer than 5,000 estates per year will be taxable.

The tax burden in the case of transfers to children and grandchildren, and particularly spouses, will be significantly reduced. These changes will drastically reduce the tax burden on farm estates and in most cases makes the difference between selling out or continuing to operate a family farm. Family businesses will also benefit because the tax cost of passing on a business to a child or grandchild will be greatly reduced.

The pressure to sell out small firms and family businesses either to pay death duties or to avoid such taxes will be alleviated. Since these kinds of businesses are often sold to non-Canadians, this reduction in succession duties should reinforce our efforts to encourage more Canadian control and participation in the Ontario economy.

Let me stress that we regard this as a major and positive step in this direction.

I anticipate that these reductions in succession duties will result in a revenue loss of $12 million a year as the revised system matures. The revenue decline in 1971-1972 will be somewhat less—perhaps $6 million—because most of the estates processed during 1971-1972 would relate to deaths occurring prior to the changes I have just announced.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) was a socialist compared to the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, beer prices in northern Ontario are currently about five per cent—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Now the Treasurer is getting to it.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Now the necessities of life.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —or 26 cents a case higher than in southern Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This differential pricing policy was established to reflect higher costs of handling and transportation in the north. While the economics of supplying beer have not changed, I believe that beer drinkers in the north should not have to pay more than those in the rest of the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Accordingly, I propose to equalize beer prices in northern and southern Ontario effective May 1, 1971.

The mechanism for achieving this equalization of beer prices will be an additional two cents on the gallonage tax to be used to reduce northern beer prices by 11 cents a large case. At the same time, beer prices in southern Ontario will be increased 15 cents a large case. These two changes, sir, will mean that a case of 24 bottles of beer will cost $4.65 everywhere in Ontario, which, Mr. Speaker, is still the lowest price in Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, at present Ontario residents must purchase an angling licence at a cost of $3 per year in order to fish in this province. This licence fee was introduced in 1968 as part of a general move to bring user fees more in line with the costs of services provided by The Department of Lands and Forests. While this objective remains generally valid, I would point out that it generates only $1.6 million in revenue—

Mr. T. P. Reid: I pointed that out to the government!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —is costly to collect and is generally a nuisance to fishermen.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It took the government two years to find that out!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I propose, therefore, to abolish the resident fishing licence, effective retroactively to January 1 of this year.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Any residents who have already purchased a 1971 licence will be entitled to a refund by sending their licence to The Department of Lands and Forests at Queen's Park.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude this section on tax changes by discussing Ontario's long-run policy for the taxation of mines. Since the announcement last August of revised federal proposals for the taxation of the mining industry, we have been studying the various proposals to determine the Ontario government's future policy on mining taxation. This was necessary since the revised federal proposals shifted to the provinces the responsibility for establishing the ultimate tax burden to be borne by the mining industry.

I believe it would be premature to make a categorical declaration of provincial policy before final tax reform legislation is brought down by the federal government. Nevertheless, I think it important to set out at this time the objectives and general thrust of our long-term policy in order that Ontario mining companies can take the provincial tax dimension into account in their forward planning and long-term investment decisions.

My department has undertaken an intensive policy review in this complex area. We have devoted particular effort to analyzing as fully as possible the potential impact of the revised federal proposals on our mining industry and on Ontario's finances. In undertaking this review, we received the full co-operation of the mining industry in providing essential data and information. This type of co-operation between government and industry is essential for the development of sound tax policies.

Let me summarize briefly the results of our analysis and the implications for our own mining tax policy.

The total package of federal mining tax reforms—the original white paper proposals and the revisions announced last August—would not involve any reduction in the total tax burden on the mining industry in Ontario. The reduction of the federal corporate rate from 40 per cent to 25 per cent would be almost or completely offset by reforms widening the tax base: the non-deductibility of provincial mining tax, the change from automatic to earned depletion and the elimination of the three-year exemption.

The reduction in the federal corporate rate to 25 per cent would not open up major tax room for Ontario to pass benefits on to the mining industry or to take up in increased provincial corporation or mining tax rates. If we simply maintained our existing rates, Ontario would enjoy a modest revenue gain from the base-broadening reforms noted previously while the federal government would suffer an equivalent revenue loss, but the total federal-provincial tax burden on mines would remain about the same as at present.

The revised federal proposals would involve a marked change in the distribution of the total tax yield among Ontario mining companies. In general, high profit companies and companies able to earn maximum depletion would pay less tax than at present while smaller companies, new companies and companies unable to earn maximum depletion would pay more tax.

These findings have an important bearing on the formulation of our own long-run policy. Not only will the province have little or no scope to increase its own corporate or mining tax rates without raising the total tax burden on the industry, but will also face the new problem of evening out or compensating for the shifts in tax burden among companies that will arise under the proposed federal system.

Mr. Sargent: Why not give the same break to the farmers?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: With these and other considerations in mind, Ontario intends to pursue a mining tax policy which aims to achieve the following objects:

In the short run: Maintain the total tax burden on the mining industry approximately at its present level, at least until the impact of the new tax system can be determined.

In the long run: Increase mineral processing in Canada—to this end we are prepared to introduce further provincial tax incentives and to use our regulatory powers; preserve provincial revenues and revenue growth capacity from the mining industry as a whole; and ensure a relatively even impact of the new tax system among different mining companies.

We intend to compensate for tax shifts which otherwise would provide unwarranted tax reductions to some companies and endanger existing small mines and dependent mining communities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, given our taxation and spending policies, I expect Ontario's gross provincial product to reach $38.1 billion, an increase of 8.9 per cent over 1970. On the basis of this forecast, total net general revenue is expected to reach $3,847 million. This revenue estimate allows for a gross loss of revenue from the corporate income tax of $125 million, and a further $6 million loss from reduced succession duties.

Part of the loss from the corporate income tax will be recovered through the inevitable economic stimulus caused by this major tax decision. Yet our total 1971-1972 revenue will be only $110 million higher than in the previous year.

Mr. T. Reid: But the Treasurer will be borrowing from the US?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: As I have already indicated, our budgetary spending plans for 1971-1972 amount to a total of $4,262 million. Our spending and tax policies for the current year constitute a responsible plan with immediate revitalization of the economy as its foremost rationale.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The expenditure policies, together with the significant tax reduction, will generate what I believe to be an appropriate budgetary deficit of $415 million. This is indeed, sir, the largest deficit for Ontario on record but its composition, notably the tax reductions—

Mr. Sargent: It is not bad for the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —should be an important factor in bringing the economy toward its potential. As such, it should reduce future financial problems of this government through increased generation of tax revenue. It is, however, a matter of some chagrin that the lion's share of such ultimate gains will go to the federal government because of its predominance in the direct income tax fields.

During the 1971-1972 fiscal year we will require $49 million to retire maturing debt issues. Together with our $415 million budgetary deficit, this would raise our financing requirements to $464 million. Surplus non-budgetary sources of finance are expected to amount to about $71 million, leaving our overall cash requirements at over $393 million.

Our government has been able to avoid any borrowing in the Canadian capital market since February, 1968. This policy has proved particularly valuable as federal money policies created tight market conditions and high interest rates and inflationary demands on capital markets had to be avoided. We feel that the economic outlet for the current year is such that this government should once again enter the capital market.

Mr. T. Reid: Where?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: However, through the judicious use of our liquid reserves, and guided by economic and financial developments, we expect to choose the time and the place for our borrowings without adverse effect on capital market conditions, the value of the Canadian dollar or our high credit rating.

Mr. T. Reid: Impossible!

Mr. Sargent: The Treasurer may get a trip to Germany out of it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I have put before you the first budget of the government of the new Prime Minister (Mr. Davis). It has been framed in a climate of great economic uncertainty in this province and strong federal-provincial tensions in this country.

Mr. Breithaupt: And the last!

Mr. Sopha: It is exacerbating!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The 1971 budget faces these challenges with resolve and determination and charts the course for a renewed prosperity in Ontario and a strengthened federalism in Canada.

It proposes positive new measures—

Mr. Sopha: The government is at war with the federal government.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —to revitalize the economy and restore full employment in Ontario.

It cuts taxes to stimulate economic expansion and employment. It restrains government spending to free greater resources for individual taxpayers and private sector activity and heads off renewed inflation.

It advances long-term reforms aimed at strengthening local governments and relieving property tax burdens.

It launches new initiatives to provide a better quality of life for our citizens and to conserve public resources for future generations of our people.

It encourages Canadian ownership and participation in Canadian economic development.

Mr. Pilkey: I thought the government did not believe in that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It rejects unequivocally the trend toward greater federal domination of Canada's tax system and public programmes.

It asserts firmly the central importance of Ontario in building a new confederation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am confident, sir, that under the bold fiscal programme outlined in this budget and under the courageous, wise and imaginative leadership of the Prime Minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —with that kind of leadership, sir, Ontario will realize an even more dynamic and productive future, and, Mr. Speaker, a progressively Conservative future.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I understand we will have an opportunity to discuss this interesting document later this week. At this time I would like to move adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Nixon moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: With the concurrence of the House we will revert to introduction of bills.

Agreed to.

CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Succession Duty Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

PLANNING ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a number of features intended to facilitate the operation of committees of adjustments and the land division committees in the field of subdivision control. It also provides for the automatic termination of approval of draft plans of subdivisions if final plans have not been submitted and approved within three years. It further provides for overcoming a means for circumventing section 26 of The Planning Act.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) mistakes again.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): All our friends!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I should inform the members that tomorrow it is proposed to proceed with the estimates of The Department of Agriculture and Food.

There will be no sitting this evening and the House, therefore, would adjourn until tomorrow.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): The Treasurer is the greatest Tory of them all.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House Leader if he intends to refer that estimate outside the House to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I beg the member's pardon. I could not hear the question.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask if he intends to refer the agricultural estimates outside the House to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, here in the House. Mr. Speaker, I might suggest that we might also deal, perhaps, with second reading of the bill the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) has just introduced.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, is the House leader in a position to indicate which estimates are going to be referred outside of the House?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not at the moment, but very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peacock: In the summer session, after the election.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4:45 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the east gallery this afternoon are students from Main Street School in Toronto and Brighton Public School in Brighton. In the west gallery are students from Hillside Public School in Clarkson.

Later this afternoon we will have students from Holy Rosary Separate School in Toronto. This evening we will have with us the 15th Humber West "C" Cub Pack from Weston and the 125th "A" Toronto Scout Group from Toronto.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. J. White (Minister of University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have two documents prepared for the members of the Legislature and members of the press gallery, the first of which sets forth the 1971-1972 capital support programme for Ontario universities; the other of which deals with operating support for provincially-assisted universities in Ontario for 1971-1972 and 1972-1973.

These are lengthy and complicated documents with statistical exhibits attached. With Mr. Speaker's permission I will not read them, but rather table these reports and distribute copies to the members of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Good Lord! No ministers present! I guess the Premier (Mr. Davis) is in Scarborough North to save again the seat of the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Wells).

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I was looking for the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). I have a couple of questions for the Attorney General.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): I am sure the member for Downsview has

REDUCTION OF VOTING AGE

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General can advise the House as to whether or not the government has accepted his advice that the voting age be reduced to 21?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The government is working on it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The government has been working on it for four years.

An hon. member: The member for Downsview will have to do better than that.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further questions from the deputy leader?

Mr. Singer: Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker, until more ministers come into the House.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West any targets?

Mr. Lewis: Many targets but no people, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

AGENCY STORES DISPENSING ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the the Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship.

Is the government considering setting up agency stores to dispense alcoholic beverages?

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister know what they are doing? They are going to call the election with the minister in the front bench. He will be surprised.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, the policy with respect to the establishment of agency stores in Ontario has been a policy of this government for quite some time.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Will these new agency stores be operated by private individuals and not by civil servants?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, as I have explained to the hon. member, it has been the policy of this government for a number of years that agency stores, operated primarily I think in conjunction with camp operations—resort operations in northern Ontario—have been in existence for quite some time.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary question: Will there then be agency stores set up in Essex county?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale.

BAIL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services.

Would the minister report to the House what steps his department has taken to implement the question of the procedure of granting bail to inmates of the institutions under his control in line with the statement which was made a few days ago by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General?

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, we have always issued instruction to the various jails that they are to co-operate fully in making the information available to anyone who wants to pay bail. In other words, instructions have gone out that in the case of anyone wanting to put up bail, if the justice of the peace or bail magistrate is not there they are to give that person the names of the police officers who can give them the information where they can get the justice of the peace.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary question: Does the staff of, for example the Don Jail, under instructions from the governor or through the governor from the minister, take the initiative to approach the persons who are held in custody because of their failure to raise bail, specifically to explain to them what their rights are with respect to the bail system?

Hon. Mr. Apps: I am not able to answer that question exactly as to whether they take the initiative, other than the fact that I have with me these information booklets that have been given to the various jails with instructions to make sure that everyone coming into the jail gets these information booklets. I think the information is in the booklet, which would tell them exactly how they could go about asking to get bail.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary: Then the specific question of approaching a person who is held in the Don Jail on the subject of the provision of bail, is that it is not brought directly to his attention by verbal communication from the staff of the minister's institution?

Hon. Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite able to answer that question whether the people in the jail specifically tell them how they can get bail. I think the same purpose is accomplished by giving them the booklet, which outlines the procedure they should use in order to get the necessary information to get bail.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

TOURIST, ANGLING ADVERTISING

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information: Is his department going to increase and redirect its advertising in relation to angling or sport fishing in the Province of Ontario and what programmes is he going to initiate to attract the sportsmen from the United States area who normally come into Ontario?

Hon. R. Guindon (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, we may redirect our programme, our advertising, by appealing to families for family fun. That is one of the changes we are contemplating right now.

Mr. Paterson: As a supplementary, did the minister or his department do any advertising this winter in relation to ice fishing? It was especially noticeable as being absent in the Detroit area this year.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I know of one programme in the Barrie area where it is put over the air by one of our representatives. As far as papers or television are concerned I would not know.

Mr. Paterson: Specifically with regard to advertising in the United States to attract tourists to come to Ontario, is the minister increasing this or not?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I think we are increasing some. As the member knows our budget for last year was $1.6 million—

Mr. Lewis: Is that a proclamation on the Premier's desk?

Hon. Mr. Guindon —for advertising in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) have a question? He was on his feet a short time ago.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary!

Mr. Deacon: A supplementary to the minister: In view of the fact of the new change in status of fishing in northwestern Ontario, particularly with regard to the ban on eating the fish up there, is there going to be any real promotion to let people know they no longer have to fish just for fun there?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, we are looking at it right now.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF JOCKEY CLUB

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. I would like to ask him what intervention he contemplates in the public interest in respect of the proposed reorganization of the Jockey Club, the public corporation, in reference to its plans to turn itself into a so-called non-profit organization. Is he aware of the criticism of that reorganization that has been extant?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have heard of this proposal but it has not come officially to our attention. I presume an application will come through in due course and we shall then examine it very carefully and determine the matter of policy with regard to it.

Mr. Sopha: By way of supplementary, surely the minister is aware, reading the daily newspapers, of the nature of the criticism there has been? In the light of that, what does he propose to do?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am aware of what I have read, Mr. Speaker, as I said I am aware this has been published as to intention. The matter will definitely come through our department for examination and consideration and we will then decide what to do with it.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries?

The member for Scarborough West may now have the floor to complete his questions and thereafter the deputy leader of the Liberal Party.

CREATION OF NEW JOBS THROUGH BUDGET PROPOSALS

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A question, first, of the provincial Treasurer. Could the provincial Treasurer indicate to the House the multiplier effect by way of jobs created with the five per cent rebate on the purchase of machinery and equipment in Ontario?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): No, I could not; nor did I indicate how many jobs would be created.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, this was referred to in the budget as the major economic proposal for creating jobs. The figure of 150,000 was used in the Treasurer's own text. The accompanying budget paper said, "100,000 to 150,000 jobs." On what basis are those jobs calculated, in relationship to, I assume, an index the Treasurer must have of job creation given the five per cent machinery allowance?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We need 150,000 new jobs in this province to get down to the three per cent rate of unemployment.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What proportion of those jobs will come as a result of the minister's five per cent rebate on the purchase of machinery and equipment?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Well that is the programme of the government.

An hon. member: In the fullness of time.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The government does not know the answer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am not going to answer that question directly because I do not want to get into a numbers game on the new jobs which are going to be created.

Mr. Lewis: That we know, Mr. Speaker. I consider this profoundly serious because it is like the housing programme—it will evaporate under analysis.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: It will just disappear in 48 hours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Sure it is. First the Throne Speech is a disaster, now the budget is a disaster.

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member has a question he will place it.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, by way of a new question, then, Mr. Speaker; by way of, I am sorry, a supplementary to this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Downsview has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: I want to make a further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: If the minister indicated a loss in revenue of $125 million by virtue of this programme, am I right in thinking, therefore, that the total expenditure he anticipates on machinery and equipment will be in the order of $2.5 billion?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right!

Mr. Lewis: Right! And by way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, how does that relate to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics private and public investment in Canada outlook, during 1971 for the Province of Ontario? When you subtract the cost of purchases for transportation and government, which the minister himself subtracted, this leaves an estimate of $2.6 billion on machinery and equipment. Why is the minister paying five per cent to those whose projected purchases are identical with what the budget intends to stimulate?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Because, Mr. Speaker, although that report was released with a great deal of fanfare a week or two weeks ago by the federal Department of Industry, if the member will read that report he will find that it indicated that the increase in economic activity would come from governmental spending, from institutional spending and from housing. But it indicated that the increase in spending on manufacturing facilities was very, very slight.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, could the minister tell us, insofar as this five per cent refund on corporation tax is concerned, whether or not there are going to be any controls if machinery is purchased in the United States and in fact supplies no new Ontario jobs?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It will supply the jobs, of course, wherever it goes to work.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): How many jobs?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The limitation is that it is machinery that is to be located in Ontario. Where the machinery comes from is not a limitation.

Mr. Singer: All right. By way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise us whether any control is going to be asserted by government in the event that the machines replace jobs—in other words, that further automation takes place by reason of the purchase of machines and people are put out of work?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, naturally we are concerned, we have been concerned for some time on this side of the House, that increased productivity and modernization of plants can reduce the number of jobs—

Mr. Lewis: It does reduce jobs.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Oh, the member would have thrown the spinning jenny in the canal too!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But we happen to believe on this side—

Mr. Lewis: I should take that from a Luddite like the Attorney General?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the member for Scarborough West will await his proper turn.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We happen to believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this province and this country are going to be productive and are going to be competitive in world markets then we must modernize and we must increase our technology, and we must make sure that our manufacturing facilities have the most modern equipment and are in a position to compete on world markets.

Mr. Lewis: All very impressive!

Mr. J. Renwick: All very fine, but that is not what the minister said.

Mr. Singer: By further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise us why this benefit is limited only to corporations and that those who are not incorporated are not going to be able to take advantage of it, perhaps by way of the same opportunity in sales tax?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member, of course, is aware that we do not control the form of the personal income tax. If he is worried—

Mr. Singer: Sales tax, I said!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member asked why we were not making this benefit available. It is not open to us to make this available through the personal income tax form, as the member well knows.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary, why could the minister not make it available by adjustments in the provincial sales tax, which he does control?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member is talking about two different groups of machinery and equipment.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Scarborough West wish a supplementary? Then the member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary: Is it not possible that this allowance, if it has the benefit that the minister believes it to have, could be extended to the small businessman who conducts an unincorporated business, having regard to the concern which this government always expresses for the small businessman?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I would hope Mr. Benson would do something.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Would the minister consider restricting the credit to equipment purchased in Canada, unless such equipment is not available in Canada? In other words, is there a list which the federal government has that gives credit only if the foreign equipment is available on a better basis?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Presumably, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of this comes out in the tariffs themselves. What we want is a simple, uncluttered programme. We want to get this economy—

Mr. Pilkey: It sure is simple.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We want to get this economy rolling and we want to get it started today. We are not interested—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): They have achieved their objective.

Mr. J. Renwick: Why does the Treasurer not provide for an increase in consumer spending?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I can only say to the Premier, that I am glad we have got to them with this budget in the way we seem to have.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Oh no, no! I was excited.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My leader, Mr. Speaker, walked in with the orders of the day and the leader of the New Democratic Party was petrified that we were going to the people today. Just petrified!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: I thought he was going to challenge the socialists in an election.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Just petrified!

An hon. member: The member for Scarborough West had better go and talk to his daddy about it.

Another hon. member: The six per cent did not look too attractive.

Mr. Singer: Meanwhile, back on the budget. I hope the government can do better—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Perhaps we would allow the minister to complete his answer if he has not done so.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think I have answered it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): If he has an answer.

Mr. Stokes: It was just editorial anyway.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the final supplementary on this question.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Is the minister aware that of the $2.5 billion which is expected to be spent by incorporated firms located in Ontario over the next 12 months, approximately $1.8 billion is spent outside of Canada? And if so, would he not consider restricting that specific incentive to equipment that is produced in Canada?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not accept the validity of the figures to begin with. I would simply say this—

Mr. T. Reid: What are the figures?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —what we wanted, as I started to say—

Mr. T. Reid: What are the correct figures?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —as I started to say, Mr. Speaker, what we wanted was a simple way to get this economy rolling today.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are not interested in setting up a maze of bureaucratic procedures to decide whether they buy equipment here or in Hong Kong. Let us get on with this job.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): That is a change.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I come back to a slightly different variant of this matter, which is surely important. On page 24 of the budget the Treasurer described this as “a major move designed to produce a massive stimulus to business investment.” How did he arrive at the creation of 100,000 to 150,000 jobs through this programme?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have already explained, Mr. Speaker, that the 150,000 jobs which we believe it is necessary to create in this province would bring the rate of unemployment down to three per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but if I understand properly the Treasurer cannot at this time guarantee that this programme will produce a single job. Indeed, the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Lewis: Introduction of equipment can frequently automate jobs—it is not unknown.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): On a point of order!

With great respect, I enjoy the question period, but I sense these are matters that should be discussed when the members opposite make their contribution in the budget debate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member for Scarborough West wants to make a speech he is going to have his opportunity to do so. And if we want to start making speeches during the question period—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is the Premier in the chair?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —then members of the cabinet will be forced to do the same thing.

Mr. Singer: He is being rather sensitive.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not, but you know—

Mr. Singer: He is very touchy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I have frequently pointed out to the members that the question period is their period of time, and if they use it in a manner which could be used better in question period time, and what is said better said in other debates or otherwise, then they are the losers thereby.

I would also hope that we would get on to questions which are of immediate public interest, after we have explored a reasonable amount of the budget statements yesterday. I think it is a proper place for questions, but I would also point out that the members are becoming quite adept at turning a statement into a question. It has been allowed up to now, but I think we will have to watch that more closely, otherwise the government is tempted, of course, to make a speech in reply and then nobody is happy.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Why do you not just muzzle them?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor for a further question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If I might answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The member has asked for guarantees—

Mr. Lewis: Of additional jobs.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will guarantee the member this, that a programme to assimilate the private sector—which happens to be in line with the philosophy of those of us on this side of the fence—is guaranteed to do a better job than the—

Mr. Brown: It has taken them 25 years!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —socialist claptrap spending programmes which the member for Scarborough West advocates.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: I would like to deal with this balkanizer of Canada across the way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: This man who makes a fetish of wrecking Confederation in the name of parochialism—

Mr. Speaker: Order; order; order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: —to prevent these provocations to the members of my party who sit quietly in the opposition and await.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, what wonders, precisely, the private sector will perform? How many jobs? I want to hear it in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately the hon. member is re-asking a question which the member has asked. He is repetitious. I rule that question out of order.

Mr. Lewis: Okay! Well, may I point out, Mr. Speaker, you should rise to protest—

Mr. Speaker: Order; order!

Mr. Lewis: —against this fraud yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Stokes: It is as much of a fraud as the government's housing programme.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the provincial Treasurer on another matter.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we would give the member for Scarborough East the opportunity to ask a supplementary and the House will make sure that he is not repetitious also.

Mr. Deans: The question is out of order.

Mr. Lewis: If my question was out of order, I fail to see how a supplementary can be permitted.

An hon. member: It was ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was not asking a new question, he was asking the same question again.

Mr. Lewis: No, no, no. I am asking a separate question.

Mr. Speaker: No, when the hon. member asked about the number of jobs he was asking the same question as he had asked before. Therefore there could be supplementaries—

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Speaker: —because it was the same question as before. Therefore, in my opinion, the hon. member for Scarborough East has the floor for a supplementary.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Ask how many jobs.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could the Treasurer explain to the House how small incorporated businesses can take advantage of this five per cent incentive when they cannot borrow money below eight per cent?

Mr. Speaker: In the first place, that is not a supplementary question. In the second place, the question has been more or less previously asked.

The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: More, not less Mr. Speaker, more!

I have a question of the provincial Treasurer as I look for another jewel in his budget. It relates to the section on nursing home care.

Mr. Speaker, can the Treasurer say why the budget baldly states: "This assumes that a fee of $3.50 per day will be charged," but in the Treasurer's press release he referred to a needs-test principle. Does the Treasurer intend to have a needs-test principle for the nursing home coverage?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Give the member for Scarborough West another jewel.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), will announce the details of the programme.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: It is the Treasurer's budget; he must know something about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member—

Mr. Lewis: Admittedly we know very little, as the last few minutes have demonstrated.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Scarborough West will address through the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: This is a legitimate question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Treasurer setting a flat $3.50 per day or will there be a needs-tested formula for those in receipt of pension?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if the leader of the NDP will remain patient, my colleague the Minister of Health will in due course supply the member for Scarborough West with the details which he is so desperately trying to find out.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no cabinet decision on this yet?

Mr. Lewis: There is not a document that the Treasurer has produced which is intelligible.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the provincial Treasurer, in another aspect of his budget.

Mr. Speaker: At 2:30 exactly we will cease debating the budget and we will go to other questions.

An hon. member: What does Mr. Speaker mean, "debating"? I thought we were going to have a budget debate. This is the oral question period.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—we are not debating the budget.

An hon. member: Well who is debating it?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: The budget is the most important single document that this government has produced to date; surely we can question about it through the whole extent of the question period?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite correct. There is nothing to prevent the hon. members from asking questions on the budget, but not debating it. This has developed into a debate. If the members will ask questions it is perfectly agreeable, but we will cease the debating. Questions will be asked and answers will be given and there will be no debate.

Mr. Lewis: I will debate for only two minutes more, Mr. Speaker. May I ask a question of the provincial Treasurer about the civil service guidelines, the mandatory wage imposition in his budget. The civil service has been negotiating since January in good faith with the government. I gather they are now going to arbitration, and unbeknownst to them, without advance news of the five per cent ceiling. Will the Treasurer accept binding arbitration if it grants an increase above five per cent?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To begin with of course, Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Let me say this: The budget does not speak of guidelines. It speaks of our aim to limit on the average this year's salary increases to an average of five per cent. It does not speak of guidelines.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary: If the arbitration in which the Civil Service Association is now engaged results in an increase on the average beyond five per cent, will the Treasurer accept the position of the arbitrator?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is a very hypothetical question.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did the Treasurer not say at a press conference yesterday that he did not view an arbitration award as binding on the government if it exceeded five per cent?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I did not say that. I said that an arbitration award, whether it is five per cent, 10 per cent, 100 per cent or no per cent, is not necessarily binding on the Crown. It so happens that we have accepted, to my knowledge, each of the arbitration awards; but they are not binding on the Crown. The Crown cannot be bound. The member should know that.

Mr. Lewis: Why is the government making a scapegoat of the civil service?

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I would like to ask, by way of supplementary, where the Treasurer and his government were last year when the federal government sought to set down a six per cent wage guideline. Do they not think they are a little late?

Mr. Brown: They are playing politics.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has a further question?

Mr. Lewis: I think I should leave it now.

Mr. Speaker: The deputy leader of the opposition.

SUCCESSION DUTY CHANGES

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer.

In view of the fact that the changes in succession duty announced by him would reduce the number of estates to be taxed, would it not have been reasonable to announce at the same time a very substantial reduction in the number of civil servants and the office expenses required to continue to maintain the succession duty department of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I believe this member will find that The Department of Revenue, as I recall, actually has a complement decrease this year.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, and in further relation to succession duties, if the minister is able to work the same arrangement that four other provinces have already worked, is there any reason why Ontario should continue in the succession duty field when the changes he announced yesterday bring the Ontario Act more in line with the federal Act than ever before?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): We are fighting centralization.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think the answer to that question is set out in the budget. There is a matter of a revenue loss somewhat larger than we would want to have in one year. There is also the matter that by our being in the field, succession duties in total are less than they would be if we got out of it and simply took the Ottawa share.

And there is the third point, which is most important, that we believe we should maintain a presence in this field because of its relationship to capital gains taxation. Until such time as the intentions of the federal government are clear as to capital gains taxation, we think we would be most unwise to surrender this related field in one fell swoop. We want to know first.

Mr. Singer: A further supplementary: Is it not equally true that the province is holding onto succession duties as a further bargaining point, notwithstanding the inconvenience to those people whose estates have to be dealt with by two departments and have to incur very substantial extra costs?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The conclusion of that is not necessarily correct. Certainly what I have said is that we believe it is prudent to keep hold of this tax until we know what is going to happen at Ottawa. I suppose that could be said to make it a bargaining point. I would point out to the member that for many years, for example, our corporation tax changes followed those changes that were made in Ottawa—followed to the letter—and there was always doubt, I am sure in the member's mind and my mind, as to the wisdom of maintaining our own corporation tax. Yesterday's budget, and the changes which we made in two areas, surely prove the worthwhile aspects of maintaining control over some tax fields.

EQUALIZATION OF BEER PRICES

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of another question of the Treasurer, is it not true that the reduction of beer costs in the north and the readjustment of beer costs in the south in fact produce to the Province of Ontario substantial extra revenue as well as producing to the brewers substantial extra revenue, so in fact the government has given nothing away at all?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It produced, as I recall, about $2.5 million to the province, about $2.5 million to the industry—which has not had a raise in its prices since January, 1968; and by one of the anomalies of this whole thing it produces something like $3 million or $4 million for the government at Ottawa through excise taxes. I must say that is a matter of some chagrin also.

Mr. Singer: Not really quite Santa Claus.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if the Treasurer could—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question?

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): By way of supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Treasurer whether the principle that has been applied to equalizing the cost of beer across Ontario will now be applied to equalizing the cost of gasoline and fuel oil across Ontario, both of which are very high in northern Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: This of course is not supplementary to the original question. The deputy leader has the floor.

FISHING LICENCE FEES

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Treasurer could advise us whether the revenue expended in collecting fishing licence fees, and the cost of administration of that department, in fact exceeded the money that came in?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, the amount of resident fishing fees was about $1.6 million net; the gross was about $1.8 million. The cost ran in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent of the amount collected—which of course is rather high.

Mr. Singer: Of those people who bought fishing licences, could the Treasurer tell us what percentage that is of those people who fish?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: How effective was the enforcement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have mine on the wall. I hung it up on a plaque. I did not get it fixed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The hon. member, I think, is asking how many people were fishing without a licence. Well, we have no way of knowing that. There were some charges, as there always are, laid by the conservation officers and others. That was not a large part of the consideration. The people of this province are generally law-abiding people who obey the law and would have bought a licence. We are sure of that. We trust the people over here.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A supplementary question. How much revenue will be lost by commissions paid on licences already issued this year which will be refunded?

Mr. Sargent: One hundred and fifty thousand!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that is neither an urgent question nor is it one that should be asked in the oral question period.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: It may be a good question but this is not the proper place. The hon. minister does not have that information.

PURCHASES BY LAND BANK

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have one more question of the Treasurer. Will any of the $20 million that is set aside for the land bank be made available to assist the borough of North York in the purchase of York Downs golf club?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will be introducing legislation, or one of my colleagues will, in due course, and I would prefer to wait to answer that question until that time. I think there is assistance for the land bank corporation.

I notice there are press reports today indicating that it might be used for housing land. We already have such a programme through Ontario Housing and we are not envisaging in this corporation, purchasing land for housing. If the land bank goes ahead through OHC and through, in some instances, joint arrangements with Central Mortgage and Housing—whether York Downs is the sort of thing that we are talking about specifically here—I am not prepared to say at this moment or to give a definitive answer. Assistance, I think, would be available to Metropolitan Toronto or the borough of North York through perhaps a couple of other programmes—The Parks Assistance Act and The Conservation Authorities Act. Really what we are looking for is something very much in the future. We see land daily—

Mr. Lewis: Right, like Caledon Mountain Estates.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —which is not needed today for park purposes within an area—

An hon. member: Or Malvern!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and perhaps will not be needed for 10 or 20 years, but in the long-term public interest should be purchased now.

Mr. Lewis: Right!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It may be that this will eventually become a revolving fund.

Mr. Stokes: Like Manitoulin!

Mr. Lewis: Like the Niagara Escarpment perhaps?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Niagara Escarpment, for example.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary. In view of the fact that the minister in his budget statement, page 22, dealing with this Ontario Land Acquisition Corporation, said that these moneys are going to be used to maintain, in public use, particularly land in and around our urban centres, does that tie in with the answer he just gave us? Or does the answer he just gave us differ from that statement?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, it ties in.

Mr. Singer: Is the government going to make money available out of this fund to municipalities, such as North York or Metropolitan Toronto, which have a one-time chance to maintain in public ownership a large golf course?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think this is a hypothetical question until the legislation is here. We are thinking mainly at this point—we have not developed all our thinking on this completely—but mainly of provincial purchases rather than assisting in municipal purchases.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? If not, the hon. member for Ontario South.

Mr. Lewis: The minister should bring in another budget.

Mr. MacDonald: He is outdoing Walter Gordon.

INCLUSION OF PROVINCIAL BUILDINGS FOR TAXATION

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): I should like to ask the Treasurer when is the minister going to include provincial public buildings serviced by municipalities for taxation purposes?

Mr. Lewis: That is a hypothetical question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I say to the hon. member for Ontario South that the long-term aim of the government in tax reform is to make provincial buildings and provincially assisted land and buildings fully taxable. We took another step in that direction yesterday in that the community colleges will now be eligible for tax to $25, as will provincial parks. Buildings are another step along the way, and given the constraints of revenues of the province. I do not know just when that will happen, but it certainly is part of our long-term aim.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Paterson: On what basis will, say provincial parks, be assessed? At their current rate of value or that at the time when the land was acquired for the purpose of the taxation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) will be announcing the details of that programme. I am not going to stand here and give the details of the programmes of a number of other departments.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Correctional Services advises Mr. Speaker that he wishes to correct an answer which he gave earlier today. I think he should be given that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, thank you. In order that I will not leave any incorrect impression with the member for Riverdale, I would like to advise him that the information booklet I held up is distributed in the correctional institutions rather than in the jails. They are not available in the jails but are being made available to the correctional institutions around the province. I wanted to clarify that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. J. Renwick: A question then! Am I correct, then, that there is no booklet issued by the minister's department that is available in the institutions throughout the province, such as the Don Jail, relating to the question of bail information?

Hon. Mr. Apps: No. At the present time there is no information, but I understand that our department is discussing this with the Attorney General's department, making this information available in the jails.

Mr. Lewis: Is that so? The minister just prints it and hands it out?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Kent has the floor.

NOVA LASER SYSTEM

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs.

Is it true equipment owned by the University of Windsor, known as the Nova Laser system, is being used by a contractor in the Province of Ontario which other construction companies feel is unfair competition?

Hon. Mr. White: I have no knowledge of that, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would provide me with details of that report, I will be very happy to explore it.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary? The member for Sudbury East.

SUDBURY LABOUR COUNCIL REQUEST FOR MEETING

Mr. Martel: I have a question of the Minister of Health.

In view of the fact that on two occasions in the past few months the Sudbury Labour Council has written the minister for a meeting with members of the medical profession in Sudbury, the unions and the minister's staff to discuss the hospital crisis, can the minister indicate when he intends to reply to these requests by the labour council?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): I had not known that the replies had not been forwarded, Mr. Speaker. I will do so this week.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO STUDY OF TOURISM

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information.

Can the minister indicate the purpose of the study that is now being undertaken of tourism in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if this is a study concerning tourist councils. To which study is the member referring?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I believe it is a study commissioned by the minister's department to some firm in Toronto. They are going around visiting, in my area particularly, and spending two hours and turning out a report of some kind. I would like to ask, by way of further question, if this further study means that the one done by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company, and presented to the government in 1968, is now redundant and of no value to the government?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of such a study going on in northwestern Ontario, but I will check for the member and let him know.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information or the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Speaker: The member might please say to which minister he is addressing it.

Mr. Sargent: I guess it is to the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Speaker: The Provincial Secretary.

LIQUOR LICENCES IN RESORT AREAS

Mr. Sargent: With regard to the new legislation granting liquor licences to resort areas, is the minister involved now in granting these licences and how many has he processed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that licences under the resort areas programme have already been issued, but I would be very pleased to check into the matter for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

CORPORATION TAX

Mr. Deans: I think this is a question of the provincial Treasurer.

Is it the intention of the government to phase out corporation tax as a major source of revenue for the province and to replace it with personal income tax?

An hon. member: That is a stupid question!

Mr. Deans: Might I ask then, by way of a supplementary question, how the Treasurer explains the continuous decline in the use of corporation taxes as a major source of revenue and the fact that personal income tax has replaced it in the Province of Ontario over the last 10 years?

Mr. Yakabuski: The hon. member will never become leader asking a question like that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The personal income tax, of course, is a much more elastic and growth tax than is the corporation tax.

Mr. Lewis: Growth tax?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The personal income tax grows much more quickly than the corporation tax, given the same rates. The rates have been the same for both taxes for the last few years. I do not know when they were last changed. Percentage-wise, it is quite correct to say the personal income tax has been providing a larger share of provincial revenue proportionately than corporation tax.

The only way around this, of course, would be to raise the rates of corporation tax or to lower the rates of personal income tax.

Mr. Deans: Not a bad idea. It might have been useful in this budget.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The other reason, of course, which shows up rather dramatically, as to why corporation taxes have declined, in the last year particularly, was simply that there was not the same amount of dollars of profit there to pay taxes on.

Mr. Deans: Nor were there the same number of people working.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East has the floor.

CAPITAL EQUIPMENT INCENTIVE GRANT

Mr. T. Reid: I have a question of the provincial Treasurer.

Could the provincial Treasurer explain to the House how the five per cent incentive grant on capital equipment will create employment in the mining industry in this province, when in that industry employment has been falling, partially and primarily because of the introduction of equipment?

Could the minister comment on that fact when, I believe of the $2.5 billion spent on equipment in this province, approximately $500 million is spent by the mining companies? Will this not in fact decrease employment in that area?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Put it on the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order paper!

Mr. T. Reid: If the hon. minister does not understand that question, the hon. minister does not understand his budget.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

PATIENTS TO HOMES FOR SPECIAL CARE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

Has there been a freeze on the movement of patients from Ontario Hospitals into homes for special care? If so, is it province-wide; when did it begin; how long will it last; and what is the purpose for such action?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I know of no freeze, but may I take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

EQUALIZING BEER COSTS

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to re-put a question to the provincial Treasurer. I would like to ask the Treasurer whether the principles applied to equalizing the cost of beer across Ontario—and thereby lowering it in northern Ontario—are, as it were, the tip of the iceberg? If this experiment is successful, will it be applied to equalizing other costs, like fuel and gasoline?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that is within the power of this government and as long as we are able to discharge our duties, that will happen.

Mr. Martel: That will not be much longer.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The hon. member knows better.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Singer: This experiment will give the government another $2.5 million worth of revenue.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the report on the coroner system in Ontario by the Ontario Law Reform Commission. And if I could have your leave, sir, because it is such an important report, I would like to make a few remarks; they are not too brief.

By a letter dated April 27, 1970, the Ontario Law Reform Commission was asked by the then Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), my predecessor, to undertake a review of The Coroners Act and related matters with particular attention to the recommendation in relation to coroners made by the royal commission inquiry into civil rights.

The commission has now completed its report, sir, and the report is what I have just tabled. Copies of it are available and are being distributed to the members. The report covers three major areas in relation to the coroners' system: constitutional matters, procedural matters and organizational, structural and functional matters. Each of the 15 recommendations of the royal commission inquiry into civil rights was considered in one or more of these areas and was made the subject of appropriate recommendations. The Law Reform Commission made many additional recommendations.

Firstly, on constitutional matters, it is not within the constitutional competence of the Legislature of Ontario to enact laws in relation to procedure in criminal matters, this being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. The coroner's inquest is classified at common law as a "court of criminal record."

The province has never exercised its jurisdiction under section 92(14) of The BNA Act to create the coroner's "court of criminal record," but rather has accepted the coroner's court as constituted at common law. Without deciding the matter and without developing it, there is obiter dictum of the Ontario Court of Appeal in which support is given for the view that because an inquest is a common-law criminal court, matters of inquest procedure are within federal and not provincial jurisdiction.

If this view is correct, all of the existing procedural sections of The Coroners Act are ultra vires, as would be any attempt by the Legislature to implement the improvements in inquest procedure recommended by the royal commission inquiry into civil rights—such rights, for instance, as creating a right to counsel, a right to be heard and other fundamental rights.

A court of five judges of the British Columbia Court of Appeal disagreed with this view of the Ontario Court of Appeal. It was held in British Columbia that with the exception of sections that do not appear in the Ontario Act, the procedural sections of the British Columbia Act are intra vires provincial government.

The Law Reform Commission therefore sought a sound basis for provincial legislative jurisdiction. This it did by recommending the repeal by the provincial Legislature of "so much of the common law that particularly relates to coroners or the coroner system as is within the constitutionally assigned jurisdiction of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario." The effect of such a repeal would be to do away with the constitution of the coroner's court of criminal record—an abolition that is within provincial jurisdiction by virtue of The BNA Act.

In place of the common law coroner and the common law coroner's inquest, the commission has recommended in this report the creation of a provincial system of public inquiries into deaths. The historical terminology of "coroner" and "inquest" is to be retained, but only for convenience. An inquest under the legislation recommended by the commission would not be a court of criminal record but a form of public inquiry which, in essence, is not relative to the criminal law but to public safety, public health and matters well within the jurisdiction of this House. The procedure prescribed for such an inquiry is likewise within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: That makes sense.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In respect of procedural matters, the purpose of the constitutional analysis and recommendations was to ensure that the procedure followed by Ontario coroners would be characterized throughout by natural justice and by due process of law. The commission has recommended a system whereunder the ancient inquisitorial procedure of the coroner would be substantially modified in favour of the approach for securing civil rights set out in the royal commission inquiry into civil rights. This was accomplished by recommending that procedures be adopted which would have the effect of securing to persons with a substantial and direct interest in the matter under inquiry essential rights for a fair hearing. That is, sir, the right to notice, the right to counsel, the right to be heard, the right to cross-examine, the right to a public hearing and the right to an unbiased jury.

It was recommended that the powers of the coroner over the liberty of the subject be considerably curtailed. In the event that a witness fails to attend, refuses to answer a question, or does any other thing which before a court would have been contempt, the commission has recommended that the coroner be required to state a case to the supreme court, where evidence would be considered and a proper order made in the circumstances.

The commission has recommended that no person charged with a criminal offence arising out of a death be a compellable witness at the inquest touching the death. The commission has recommended that all other persons be made compellable witnesses, subject to the legal rules concerning privilege. It may be a possibility that a criminal charge respecting a death could be withheld, in order to exploit the inquest as part of the criminal investigation. However, the commission is of the view that should such an improper course ever be taken, a person who refused to testify because he apprehended that he was being compelled to incriminate himself would be protected by the fact that he would be entitled to a hearing before the Supreme Court before being punished for refusal to testify. In a proper case, the Supreme Court would simply refuse to make any order for punishment.

Finally, in respect of organizational, structural and functional matters, sir, the report contains a series of recommendations designed to strengthen the supervisory and disciplinary aspects of the coroner system. It is recommended that a code of ethics for coroners be promulgated, and that a coroners' council, similar to the judicial council established under The Provincial Courts Act, be established. The coroners' council would function in an advisory capacity in the matters of appointment, discipline and termination of appointment of coroners.

It was recommended that the chief officer of the coroner system be called the chief coroner of the Province of Ontario, and have both more clearly defined responsibilities than those now conferred on the supervising coroner. This officer should be a coroner but because of the nature of his duties he would not conduct inquests unless directed to by the minister. The office of a full-time deputy chief coroner was recommended and the creation of a limited number of officers known as regional coroners. These should provide local supervision in populous districts under the direction of the chief coroner. The commission made proposals aimed at answering the questions of whether some areas require full-time coroners and whether Ontario has the proper number of coroners.

Recommendations were made concerning the appointment of coroners with province-wide jurisdiction and a number of detailed procedures that are associated with the present limitations on the coroner's jurisdiction by county or municipal boundaries. Included in these are procedures relating to the powers of the local coroner, the local Crown attorney, the chief coroner and the Minister of Justice in transferring jurisdiction between coroners, ordering inquests and intervention into investigations being held by the coroner who has issued the warrant for the possession of a body.

The commission recommended that the Minister of Justice have power to appoint commissioners to conduct inquests in special cases and to appoint assessors to sit with the presiding officer at an inquest to provide specialized knowledge when required, for example where a death has resulted from alleged medical malpractice, or a disaster arising out of the collapse of a bridge or an aircraft tragedy.

Recommendations were made and designed to ensure that the coroner's powers of entry will be exercised in a manner that is consistent with accepted norms of civil rights. Recommendations were also made concerning the coroner's powers of seizure and his power to delegate his powers of entry and seizure to a police officer or even to a physician.

The commission recommended that public discussion or disclosure of matters that have come before a coroner in his official capacity should be limited. The commission concluded that this matter should be dealt with through the coroners' code of ethics rather than by legislation.

Finally, sir, it is not the intention of the government to proceed with legislation on this subject at the present session since the report obviously requires very serious consideration. We expect that further constructive comment may be forthcoming in the light of these recommendations and the publishing of the report so that they may be considered by the government over the next few months in full detail. The proposals of the commission are most interesting and helpful and I hope will assist all of the hon. members in considering the reform, the total reform, of the coroner system.

Mr. Sopha: Is a question for clarification in order?

Mr. Speaker: Really, questions, even for clarification, are not in order, but we have been in the habit of allowing a very limited number. I would allow the hon. member to ask it.

Mr. Sopha: Mine is very brief. Was there anything in that report about the replacement of medical people by lawyers as coroners as recommended by the Gregory commission in 1922?

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, there is comment on that. I would suggest that hon. member will have plenty of opportunity to study those aspects in the report.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a report containing some information with respect to licence issuing that was requested a few days ago.

Mr. Lewis: The member will not get that from us.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to lower the voting age in the Province of Ontario from 21 to 18.

Mr. Singer: That is good, we will go along.

Mr. Lewis: Another first. I did not hear the Minister of Trade and Development applaud.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, there is a matter I would like to bring to the attention of the House. On Thursday, April 15, in response to a request from the member for Riverdale, I made a statement with respect to the participation of ministers of the Crown in committees of the House.

In my previous ruling reference was made to the practice of the Province of Manitoba, and the question was asked why other jurisdictions were not included. In answer to this suggestion communication has now been made with all other jurisdictions in Canada, with the following results:

In Newfoundland, ministers are always on committees. While at the time that communication was made the standing committees for the present session had not yet been struck, it is interesting that three of the five members of the striking committee are ministers. There also exists at the present time a select committee on fisheries, of which two of the seven members are ministers.

In Prince Edward Island ministers are always included in committees, usually at the ratio of two out of six.

In Nova Scotia, on the latest public accounts committee, there are two ministers, and on other committees there is usually one minister out of seven members.

In New Brunswick ministers are on all committees, except the public accounts committee, usually at a ratio of one minister in every four members.

In Quebec ministers are on committees, the only ruling being that a minister may not be a chairman of a standing committee.

Manitoba, of course, was covered in my previous ruling.

In Saskatchewan there is no hard and fast rule. Ministers are on some committees in the same way as other members of the House. At the present time there are three ministers on the education committee out of 24; five of the 26 members on the law amendments committees are ministers; one minister is on the 11-man public accounts committee; two of the five members of the select striking committee are ministers.

In Alberta it is the regular practice to have ministers on committees. At the present time seven out of 25 members of the privileges and elections committee are ministers; seven out of 25 on the law and regulations committee; six out of 35 on the public accounts committee; 17 out of 64 on the public affairs, agriculture and education committee; and nine out of 28 on the private bills and printing committee.

In British Columbia, ministers are put on the committees as a matter of course, on the same basis as other members of the House.

Even in the House of Commons of Canada, where the very large number of members make the participation of ministers less necessary, there is no hard and fast rule. While ministers are omitted from the majority of the committees, there are very frequent occasions when ministers are included.

The member for York South appeared to think that there was some reason for starting the previous research into the practice of this House in 1946. As I explained at that time, this was done simply because 1946 marked the even quarter century. However, to resolve the hon. member's doubts, research has now been completed from Confederation, and it has been found that the participation of ministers in the years from 1867 to 1945 has been consistent.

For example, in the session of 1867-1868 there were four standing committees in which ministers were represented in the numbers five, three, three and one, the Prime Minister being on three of these committees. It is also interesting that the Prime Minister chaired the striking committee.

In the session of 1868 the number of standing committees was increased to five, the new committee being the public accounts committee, on which the Treasurer was a member, and the Prime Minister continued to sit on three committees.

Over the ensuing years the pattern remained consistent, ministers being represented on almost all committees, and the Prime Minister very often being a member of many committees. In the session of 1923, during the Drury ministry, it is to be noted that the whole cabinet were members of the private bills, municipal law and public accounts committees. During the Liberal regime of the 1930s and early 1940s, the practice remained unchanged. The Prime Minister was on all committees and the whole cabinet was on the public accounts committee.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: What happened during the NDP regime?

Mr. Speaker: I am much indebted to the new staff in the Clerk's office for a great deal of this research, which I think has been done very well.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, sir, I wish to put a question to the House leader as a prelude to some clarification which the deputy leader of the Liberal Party and I are seeking at 3.30 from members of the Prime Minister's staff. It was our understanding that in line with tradition practised in this House the leaders of the opposition parties would have an opportunity to reply to the budget with the full flood of television upon them. Our understanding is that for some reason the past practice is now under question and I wonder what the government's position is?

Mr. Brown: They are scared.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have had no concern or anything to do whatever, either for the government or for the opposition parties with the television or other arrangements in this chamber. I know nothing of what arrangements were made or are going to be made.

Mr. Lewis: If I may continue the questioning, Mr. Speaker, has the House leader determined the speaking order for the budget? It was our general understanding that the leader of the Liberal Party—of the official opposition, if it makes my friend feel better—would speak on Thursday and that I would have the opportunity to follow on Monday with an hour time slot given as in previous years for television coverage.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The hon. member was such a disaster on television last night, I do not know why he does not just give up while he is ahead.

Mr. Pilkey: The Treasurer fell flat on his face.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Scarborough West has just set them forth, is the way I understand the speaking arrangements—the Leader of the Liberal opposition on Thursday and the member for Scarborough West the first of the week.

Mr. Pilkey: The colour was good though—the Treasurer's shirt and tie looked good.

Mr. Lewis: But, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to the agreement which was, I understand, negotiated with the CBC and which operated last year and the year before? Why is it suddenly being altered in an election year?

Mr. Speaker: I think in view of what the House leader has said that he is not in any position to answer the questions. Mr. Speaker is also concerned about it because the last that he heard about it was very much as has been said on the floor of the House, and I would undertake—and I am sure the House leader would—to look into the matter and try and advise the member, because I have no information on it at all at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker. Speaking from past practices, if there is any departure from the normal procedures of this House, it can be done only with your approval and it was done with your approval. I know something of the matter because I was involved in the consultations that went on with the leaders of the various parties in conjunction with yourself for the permission of the television cameras to come in.

Now it is passing strange, I would suggest to you, sir, if there has been unilateral action on the part of any media to come in and pick what they want without your approval or consultation, so that in effect, the opposition parties have been excluded. I would suggest, sir, that this is a matter that you should look into and report at an early date to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that I had no knowledge that the lights were out here until I came in here today. I notice there are still cables outside—I nearly fell over one at noon—so that I was of the impression that there was no change. No one has been in touch with me, so I will be glad to look into it and I am sure the House leader will also, and we will get in touch with the—

Mr. Lewis: I suspect it is a nefarious plot on the part of the government.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, let me say I will be most happy to look into the matter. I know nothing of what arrangements were made, how they were made or for what duration. I shall certainly find out.

Mr. Lewis: I would choose the minister as an advocate every time.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, if I may add the little bit I know. There seems to be a—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I detect, Mr. Speaker, some criticism of the media, of the CBC. I am not normally one who would defend the CBC or the television media generally, however I think it must be said if they have decided after the events of last week that they have had a bellyfull of the socialists on television, I agree.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, speaking to that point of order—

Mr. Lewis: It was yesterday's budget which drove them into hiding.

Mr. Brown: We know how to run our affairs. They cannot even put on a convention!

Mr. Singer: I would advise you, sir, that a meeting has been convened in the lobby out here for 3:30; at which the hon. leader of the NDP and I will be present, along with, apparently, a representative of the Premier's office. But I would think that either the House leader or the provincial Treasurer—who are so knowledgeable about this and so anxious to defend equal rights for all people in this House—should make themselves present, because they could speak more authoritatively on behalf of government than the representative of the Premier's office.

Mr. Lewis: They have probably scuttled the public corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lewis: First the attack on the public sector. That is right on CBC.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Has the House leader any order of the day?

Mr. J. Renwick: Move the adjournment again!

PLANNING ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 28, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if I may.

At the time of the adjournment yesterday afternoon, the House leader announced that it might be possible that bills would be called. While we were in caucus this morning we received a notice from the whip of the Conservative Party advising us that all day today would be devoted to the estimates of The Department of Agriculture and Food.

We are of course ready to proceed, as we always are, but I think it would be most helpful in organizing the work of our caucus if it were possible for the House leader, for the government and the whip of the government to consult together before they dispatch notices to caucuses.

I would ask the House leader's co-operation in this matter.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose last night I announced the order of business for today. If the hon. member will look at Hansard, he will find that I—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What did the minister send around today?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —I specifically mentioned the bill introduced by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, this bill, No. 28—and I said that we would go to that secondly. So that is the order of business. If the members would listen, they would have it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

There were three bills introduced yesterday, and while I was not here at the conclusion of the proceedings and did not hear what the House leader said, certainly—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is all in Hansard.

Mr. Singer: Well, the Hansard is not printed yet.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh yes it is.

Mr. Singer: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, one would think it would be the greater part of common courtesy that we should have a reasonable time available to look at the bills. In fact, we got no notice. In fact, we understood that it was the intention of government—and we did not find out until mid-morning that they again had changed their minds—to call the bill relating to the five per cent refund corporation tax and to call the bill relating to the changes in succession duties.

Now a bill having been introduced yesterday, Mr. Speaker, it is most unusual if the bill happens to be in our books today. It has just never happened before in that way. One must conclude that the government has been sitting on these bills because this was obviously printed in advance and could have been made available to us if the government had been able to properly organize their business.

Now this bill—we have been over the photostat copy of it; that was all that was available to us when we had a chance to discuss it. I say, sir, that is thoroughly unfair.

It is not a controversial bill. We are prepared to proceed, but we object most strenuously to the cavalier way in which the government tries to run the business of the House. Either they are cavalier and uncaring or they are just stupid.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): I vote for the second.

Mr. Speaker: Is this on the point of order?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if I may just speak to second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will wait, because the minister always has the right to speak on the introduction of a bill, and also to close the debate.

On the point of order?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, just further on that point of order. I recognize that on occasion bills are printed and inserted in the book during the course of the morning. Surely it is a matter which should be referred to our standing committees—that when bills are shown on the order paper as not printed we can follow the order paper for the purpose of determining what business is going to be called?

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member's point is perfectly good, I would point out to him that this is a debate proceeding in the House upon which a member may only speak once. I had not noticed it before he got speaking, unfortunately. I trust that the hon. members will watch this in the future.

Mr. J. Renwick: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It would be just as easy for the hon. member on his left to convey the same views. Is the minister ready to proceed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I want to speak briefly to the point of order again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He has already spoken.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has spoken twice to the point of order and it is not in order. I think we should not perpetuate the matter because I think it has been brought to the House leader's attention. I think he has indicated that he did make the necessary announcement yesterday in the House and also that the government, of course, must supervise the running of the House. I will take it upon myself to speak to the government whip to ensure that such an occasion as happened today, I hope would not happen again in the future.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege if I may. I think this is privilege. I would point out that when this bill was introduced, and before it was introduced, there was a great demand on the opposite side of the House that it be dealt with most expeditiously.

Mr. Martel: That is a red herring.

Mr. Singer: There are 50 bills we want to have introduced.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Therefore, to accommodate the House, this was done.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs has a wish to speak on the introduction of the bill.

Mr. Singer: This is probably the most inefficient House since 1867.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to unduly prolong this particular discussion, but I would simply say that yesterday I undertook to the hon. member for Peterborough that if the bill could not be printed, I would see that mimeograph copies would be made available to all members of the House. I checked this morning and the bill was printed and, I was told, in the books even though on the order paper, since the staff did not really have time, it was marked as not printed. Members of this House have requested that this matter be dealt with as expeditiously as possible once it was introduced and that is the reason we are proceeding with it in this manner.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps then the hon. minister would wish to proceed with the bill. Does he wish to make any statement at the beginning of the debate?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I think not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North?

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): I must say that I thought the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) was unduly—there were times when he would bring in six or eight bills in the last two weeks of the House and expect them all to get passage. This bill, having received first reading yesterday and being dealt with in second reading today, of course, puts that much more pressure on us in opposition.

I do wish to thank him for sending a copy of the printed bill to me at 1:10 this afternoon. The copy which came to our caucus was of course, one copy only with which we had to deal overnight.

The bill itself deals with many amendments, some of which are amendments to Bill 162 of last year, which I thought was going to take care of certain situations which needed looking after. Evidently additional amendments were required, so we have various principles in this bill, to all of which we give agreement—the first one, particularly, will plug loopholes that have been used on various occasions across the province to get plans of subdivisions through, or separations of parcels of land on which devious methods were used, without getting proper consent.

We agree heartily to the amendment and the principle in the first section of the bill whereby the fee will remain with the grantor. Therefore consents will be required through the proper channels before property separation or plans of subdivision can be established.

A section deals with the consents, of course, which must be utilized within two years after the date upon which the consent was granted, otherwise they lapse. This, of course, was just an amendment to the bill of last year when one year was the time factor. I suppose the extra time involved is due to the fact that quite often one year is not sufficient for the proper operations to proceed.

On the principle by which the land division committee will not have jurisdiction in areas where a committee of adjustment is in operation, or an official plan has been filed with the minister, except by permission of bylaws of that municipal council, I suppose, as the land division committees become more sophisticated, some municipalities would in fact want to hand over their consent authorities to the land division committee.

I presume that is the reason for this being in there. I could not think of any other. Perhaps the minister will give us that idea. Will he give me a more definite answer on that, the reasons for that section?

The use of the approval: Draft plans of subdivision must be used now in a period of three years otherwise they become invalid according to the principle of this next section. I would judge that this is to prevent trafficking or the resale of land on which draft plans have been approved prior to complete plans of subdivision. Now we all know that land on which draft plans approved for subdivision are available would command considerably higher value.

If this in fact is brought in for that purpose—to prevent trafficking in land which has these plans of approval, these draft plans of subdivision, for a three-year period only—I would greatly favour the principle that is involved there. This I understand—I see by the second part of the section—could be extended by the minister. I suppose it is certainly common or not unthinkable that it is going to take more than three or four years to get final approval through that department over at 801 Bay Street. If conditions get much worse than they are now this may even have to be extended even more than that.

The minister here can extend the draft plan approval beyond the three-year period if for one reason or another, because of delays, final approval cannot be had in three years.

The bylaws establishing committees of adjustment must now give 30 days' notice before the committees of adjustment can become legal. I would hope in that 30-day period after the department has been given notice that the municipality has passed bylaws to establish a committee of adjustment, that The Department of Municipal Affairs would then see that this committee of adjustment is properly schooled and trained in its duties regarding severances and matters over which it would have control; especially relating to minor boundary changes where you have people who are not in their proper zoning areas. I would hope that this 30 days' notice is in here for that particular purpose.

The principle of raising the fee of an applicant to a committee of adjustment from $25 to $50, I presume, has been figured out to be in keeping with present day inflated prices, so basically, Mr. Speaker, we will support this bill on second reading.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments on this.

My colleague, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman), had asked the minister that this be hurried through, as he was concerned about what had been taking place in the Peterborough area. I want to say on his behalf that he had done so, not in an effort to frustrate development, but to stop the desecration of the area. White Rock Estates, in their actions of last year, showed pretty clearly how easy it is to destroy a local township by the use of the legislation that this is intended to correct.

In the case of Peterborough, for example, there was a recent hearing. Prior to that there had been something in the order of 12,000 lots created in the Victoria, Peterborough, Renfrew and Sudbury areas within about a one-month period. So in actual fact this legislation is going to be complementary to the planning legislation of the province and will enable the local municipalities to carry out a proper planning function without permitting developers to abuse what had been previously a loophole in the legislation.

It is interesting to note that some of the plans of subdivisions had been turned down by the community planning branch and I am curious to know why that had taken place. They are now registered and it is also interesting to note that the Lindsay registry office, prior to this legislation—perhaps it has increased even to date—there had been 800 lots registered. It seems that the solicitors and the developers had found a pretty genuine loophole that was being used to convey the holdings of major developers—land speculators in most instances—to convey these and parcels of land by the use of one single deed.

I am certainly hoping that this legislation will pass through here today and that we will be able to put an end to what has been a frustrating experience for many municipalities in the province of Ontario.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): There is a very grave problem, Mr. Speaker, which concerns the efforts of the government minister to make this legislative requirement more effective and more speedy, and the minister is probably aware, as my friend the last speaker says, that the community planning branch of his department is very intimately involved in these matters. There is a syndrome of great irritation and complaint within that branch of the tardiness with which plans of subdivision are dealt with. It is no exaggeration to say that in the districts of Sudbury, with which I am most familiar, anything up to 18 months is involved from the first filing of the plan until final approval by the minister.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): The hon. member is lucky.

Mr. Sopha: We are lucky?

Mr. Gaunt: The hon. member is lucky.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I hear my colleagues in the profession saying that it is up to 18 months and I refer the minister to the fact of which he is aware and with which I acquaint the House that in the district of Thunder Bay his predecessor designated an official who apparently has power to make the final decision.

The Thunder Bay people were effective, I suppose, on the basis that geographically they are so far distant that they needed a local mechanism of control. I have written to the predecessor of this minister pleading with him for the designation of a similar official, armed with appropriate powers, in Sudbury.

The previous minister, of course, always an aspiring figure, to great and dizzy heights, was not a man who was known for the rapidity with which he answered his correspondence. That was not one of his more fetching qualities. I did receive a vague reply from him that the matter was being considered.

I raised this with this minister at the time of his last visit to Sudbury and I can only, again, on behalf of those people that are involved, plead in this form with him for an early resolution of that difficulty. We, on this side of the House, believe in decentralization and one thinks of the "very far-reaching limbs," to use Toynbee's words, of this province, whereon there is every good reason for the decentralization of bureaucratic functions such as this. The man does not have to be under the eye of the minister—constantly under his surveillance. And, of course, it is very closely related to the desperate housing problem.

It is a remarkable thing—just to put it in real terms, for the edification of my friend from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson)—that International Nickel Company is scouring the nation and other parts of the world for workers, 18 years of age, at least 150 pounds, in good health, with nothing wrong with their spinal column—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could get back to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Sopha: Well, half the population of Inverness has moved to Sudbury to work in the mines and they need houses. The two things go together.

This is directly related to the function of The Planning Act. It is quite wrong for bureaucratic and legislative controls to thrust themselves between people's human need for housing—their right to it—and the efficient functioning of the economy and the response of those of us who are in charge of providing them with decent housing.

I hope the minister, when he addresses some remarks, will be able to assure me that at least in that area, perhaps for all of north-eastern Ontario, that in short he will designate an official with the powers to decide on subdivisions.

As a lawyer who does not practise in this area I see no reason why it would need more than perhaps three months at the outside. Surely all inquiries could be made within 90 days to enable the minister to make his decision on it. We all believe in the social-controlled regulation of land resources, but also we have a deep obligation to respond quickly. When he rises I hope he will tell me that these pleas will be given a sympathetic ear by him and the difficulty—as far as it is a human one—will be removed.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this is obviously fire engine legislation. I remember a previous occasion a year ago when this same section of the same Act which is being amended today was brought before us. Within a period of hours the minister, as he then was, of Municipal Affairs, had sent the developers, the land speculators—not that I have any great feeling for them—and the legal profession as a whole which dealt in conveyancing into a tailspin with respect to the problem of consent on abutting lands. Very few registrations were going through the registry offices of this province for many days thereafter until the problem became obviated in terms of what that consent meant.

Surely the problem that it is being sought to remedy here has been long known to The Department of Municipal Affairs? Those loophole lookers, those fellows who spend time, and are rewarded for devising means of getting around the law, found the department's previous legislation was too precipitous and not sufficiently thought out—as I hope this is not the case with this bill. They found a number of devices—two or three ways—in which to get around the previous legislation.

This wiped out that 10 acre business and made all land in the province subject to, in one form or another—either by registration by an official plan or through various forms of consent through planning boards, committees of adjustment or, finally, where these were not available the minister himself—all subject to these approvals prior to registration irrespective of the size of the land.

Having come up against that particular problem, where they could not convey without either of these two conditions being present, they then begin to embody into a single deed—not a multiplicity of deeds—conveying, or mortgaging, or in any way dealing with the signing, or what not, of various parcels of land singly. They would take a strip of 100 lots and embody them in a single document.

In the body of the document would be such wording that the grantor grants to 100 different names, if you will, and as the case was in some instances. Many of these names were nominees. Many of these are fictitious names. The secretary in the legal office might become the happy beneficiary of a block of land.

If it was done that way, done with simultaneity, done all at once, the purpose of the Act was then undermined and the loophole was created because there was no residual land, there was no abutting land left. It was all caught up into a single conveyance and swung over to other names, however fictitious that whole procedure might have been. This is what this present legislation is designed to do.

Another way of effecting it, I understand, is that the solicitor would arrive at the registry office with an envelope containing quite a number of single deeds conveying the property in whole over to another individual. The thing would be set up in advance. He simply handed the envelope over, the total conveyance; delivery of title was effected on the spot at a single instant. The important thing there being that it is not the question of time of registration, which has to be done obviously seriatim, even if only a few seconds apart; that is the determining factor at the time of delivery to the other solicitor.

Deeds and even other mortgages, for that matter, or any conveyances, need not be registered on titles in this province in order to constitute them valid and binding. It is a simple relation between two private individuals and if they see fit, as in all prudence they ought to do, to register the documents subsequently, so be it.

Perhaps some thought should be given on the principle of this bill, in obviating the difficulties there are under this present section, to making registration mandatory. Certainly that would solve an awful lot of difficulties, and moreover the specific difficulty we are confronting here. If registration were the time—the formal, explicit, legal time—at which title in any of its various modality passed—the time should be that of registration. Anyone who does not register is already foolish as things presently stand, because if he does not seek, as in the case of a deed, to register the document, surely the other fellow can sell it to somebody else tomorrow and pass title and the binding effect would lie, subsequent thereto, in the registered document. It would have priority in law in the form of notice, although it could be contested as to its fraudulence over and against the person so doing.

These thoughts are the background situation with respect to this legislation. We in this party will support the legislation. I did not raise my voice at all with the expedition with which this is to be carried forward. As to specific nice points which might be mentioned, I would ask the minister to consider, even if it is this afternoon, putting it through the Committee of the Whole House so that more time will not be taken in this debate on principle with respect to various matters which may be brought to his attention with respect to the provisions touching lapse. There are two different provisions under that particular heading which I will not go into, and other rather minor matters which affect this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario South.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to first commend the minister for introducing Bill 28. The bill is certainly needed here in the Province of Ontario to cover the loopholes in The Planning Act. However, I am a little concerned about section 5.

I realize that by raising this fee from $25 to $50 it probably helps to cover the cost of operation of our committee of adjustment. However, I find in my own area and, I am sure, in many parts of the province that many people suffer who make application to the committee of adjustment to be heard and only to be turned down and have to pay a $25 fee.

The person I am concerned about is the person who has a small lot and wants to make an adjustment on it and is going to have to pay a $50 fee, because I am sure if it is permitted it will be done by these committees of adjustment. I would like to ask the minister to explain the reason for this increase; and secondly I would like to know if this bill will have third reading and royal assent today.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I too would like to see this legislation passed if possible today, Mr. Speaker. I believe the member for Wentworth has pointed out the extent of my concern. I did mention before in the House—you will find some remarks on page 596 in Hansard. I also would like to ask the House to give every consideration to the expediting part of this bill through the process here today, as I believe that if we have planning at all it must be proper planning. For those reasons, sir, I would urge the members to speed this process.

Mr. Speaker: Is there further debate before the minister closes? The minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the various points that have been raised in reference to this bill, I would just mention that when we provide legislation which does restrict the normal conveyance or the pre-conveyance of land any way one would like, there is bound to be, from time to time, ways devised to circumvent the provisions of the law. In this instance there was a decision before one of the county courts and, taking that decision into consideration, it was necessary to devise legislation which would meet the problem created by that decision and thereby prevent the division of land in irregular and improper ways that people might decide upon at some time in the future. For that reason, section 26 has been amended as provided under section 1 of this bill, and it will, I think, meet the requirements. We have drafted it carefully, and taking into account the particulars of the decision—

Mr. Brown: Is that what the minister did the first time around?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I beg pardon?

Mr. Brown: Is it drafted more carefully than the first time?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, it is a decision that was made only recently and is the result of the rather ingenious way of dealing with the particular problem of land division, a way that I think—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Who did that? Lawyers have circumvented it?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I am not sure just whether it was lawyers or who it was, but somebody devised a way.

Mr. Brown: Was it circumvented by law or was it a legal fault in the Act?

Mr. Speaker: The operator will not put on microphones for members who are interrupting a speaker.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the other sections; in certain circumstances when a consent to land division has been properly obtained, and not necessarily by delays but by reason of many factors, transactions were not completed within the period of a year and through no fault of the individuals involved. It was therefore decided that we should extend that period of time after the consent was given for the completion of a matter to two years to give people adequate time to deal with these matters.

Some of these points have been raised with me by various members of this House, particularly the hon. members for Victoria-Haliburton and for Ontario South, and the hon. member for Peterborough has spoken to me. For that reason we have assessed these matters in the department ourselves, and want them to be dealt with and corrected.

A year ago, in 1970, arrangements for the land division committee were brought forward. At the present time, under the legislation, a majority is required to constitute a quorum. That may prove to be a difficulty for the proper functioning of those committees and since we have amended the legislation so that it limits the quorum to three members if they are more than three on the committee. If there are only three it would be limited to a majority of two.

Another section that we are dealing with in the legislation touches on the matter of draft plan approval and there has been some comment about that process and about the community planning branch. The members will appreciate that draft plan approval must be obtained before a developer or the one planning a subdivision can proceed with the other matter of the plan through the local municipality and so, once the draft plan approval is given then it leaves the control of the department itself, or the community planning branch of the department, and is in the hands of the developer in his negotiations with the municipality. It is not simply a case of the community planning branch having day-to-day control of that subdivision.

There are many processes it must go through; the engineering must be done; we must take into account matters of water resources and so on; so it does take a period of time. On the other hand there are changes in municipalities by way of completion of official plans and other arrangements, and a subdivision for which draft plan approval may have been obtained may not be in accord with subsequent changes.

At the present time, once draft plan approval has been given there is no limitation on it as to time, and certainly its marketability is increased once that draft plan approval is obtained. Under the circumstances I felt, and the government concurred, that we should set a limited period of time—three years—within which final approval would be obtained, or within such further period as might be granted on the basis of application for extension of the period.

We want to facilitate these things, but on the other hand we do not wish to impede the proper development of municipalities by leaving draft plan approvals hanging fire for a long period of time, and I have found since coming to the department there have been a few cases where they have been in existence for a long period of time.

In reference to the committee of adjustment, the members will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that where there is no committee of adjustment the minister has the obligation to deal with the matter of consent. When a land division committee is established by a county or an area then there is a period of time before it becomes properly organized and is ready to deal with matters before it. Hence we allow that period of time. The municipality has to pass a bylaw and notify the ministers and there is a period of 30 days after the passing so that there is a clear division of responsibility; the minister's responsibility ends at a certain point of time and the local board takes up its obligations and responsibilities.

The other section has reference to the application fee. At the present time the fee is up to $25, and we have found that a number of land division committees and municipalities have realized that the cost of operating a land division committee is not met by the fee that is charged to the applicant. Some applications do require a great deal of time and work by a municipality and the committee, and hence we felt it is advisable to increase that fee to a minimum of $50.

It was suggested that we might strike out any limitation, but I do not think that would be proper because then you would leave it open to a very large fee at times and I think it would be unfair to the applicant. In this way he knows the limitation of the fee that can be imposed on him.

I believe I have dealt with most of the matters. The hon. member for Sudbury did raise one matter about local planning consent and I have talked to him separately in reference to that matter. We are as anxious as he that the final approval should be given as quickly as possible and the community planning branch is working toward that, and certainly the suggestion he has made, as others have made, is being given careful consideration.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be directed for third reading?

What committee?

Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is directed to the Committee of the Whole House, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: House in Committee of the Whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

PLANNING ACT

House in committee on Bill 28, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Mr. Chairman: Bill 28, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Are there any comments, questions or amendments to any section of this bill? The hon. member for Wentworth; which section?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): A question on section 2.

Mr. Chairman: Section 2. Anything on section 1? We will proceed to section 2 then.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deans: I would just like to ask the minister if he could tell me why they made this change to the quorum. Why it was not a matter of "in excess of 50 per cent"?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I could not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: I am curious to know why the minister made the change in section 2(3)(a), that where a land division committee is composed of three members, two members constitute a quorum, but where that committee is larger than three members then three members constitute a quorum. Why does he make that kind of a ruling? Why not in excess of 50 per cent of the total members?

Hon. Mr. Bales: At the present time, Mr. Chairman, it is a majority of the members, but we have found that there is a difficulty created in that if we had a committee say of nine, sometimes they do not always have five in attendance and for that reason the work of the committee and the applications before it have on occasion been held up.

On the other hand, I think we must have a reasonable number of people dealing with these matters; we should not permit them just to have a very small committee. I think three is a reasonable number under the circumstances. I certainly would not want it less than three, unless of course it is a committee only of three. I felt in that case the majority of two would be better.

Mr. Deans: I am always a little concerned where we set a quorum at less than a majority. I think that if a committee is structured with nine persons on it and they cannot get five out, then they should replace the people on the committee.

On the matter of setting the quorum at three, if as the minister said there were nine and they could only get three out, there is something wrong with that committee and the manner in which it is operating—and I really do not agree with setting a quorum at such a low level. I think it leaves room for a great deal of lobbying, for one thing, in the case of only having to speak with three members.

Now I am not suggesting that there is anything that goes on that is wrong, but I think that if it is necessary that a majority of members on any committee, particularly one dealing with a matter as important as this, if the quorum is set at a majority then we are sure that we are hearing the opinion of the entire committee; we are hearing the opinion that would have carried the vote in the committee regardless.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, if I could comment on one other matter mentioned: I used the figure nine as an example only. In most cases the committees of adjustment are either five or seven, so far as I have been able to ascertain, and I think three is quite a reasonable number taking into account that average of five to a committee.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on section 2? If not, section 3.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, the minister said that the reason for the automatic termination of draft plans—it says after a three-year period—was that he wanted to speed this up, he did not want them lying around and not being dealt with. If that is the case then why the three-year period? Why not two as an illustration, if it is an effort to speed up? I just wondered why the three-year period as opposed to any other period?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, you must have a reasonable period of time for people to complete their engineering plans, their applications to the municipality, and so forth.

I think three years is a reasonable period, particularly when there is included the power of the ministry to extend the period of time, if necessary, on application.

If you leave it an indefinite period as at the present time, then, as I explained, there may be changes in the municipality's plans, or an official plan may be established, and the draft plan and the approval obtained from the municipality may be at variance with the official plan arrangements. A person has had a plan approved by the municipality and it is at variance—I do not think that is a very good thing.

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet, if I may, there is a slight amendment in reference to this section. If I could, I move an amendment simply changing a section number in section 3, sub-section 2, in the second line; instead of section 26, it should be section 28.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bales moves that—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How can the Minister of Municipal Affairs deal with an amendment when he has not got it in writing?

Mr. Chairman: I assume that it is going to be coming in writing, I trust, from the hon. minister. It is such a brief amendment that if the—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The minister will have to write it fast.

Mr. Singer: The minister will have to write it out the same as we have to do.

Mr. Martel: The minister is not even trying.

Mr. Chairman: In view of the briefness of the amendment I was agreeable to accept it without it being in writing but under no circumstances—

Mr. Singer: No, I did not think Mr. Chairman would. Here it comes.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Where is all the care that went into this? Some care! The minister ought to take it back and do the whole thing over again and then come back with it.

Mr. Chairman: —would I now put the motion. May I please have it in writing?

An hon. member: There ought to be a motion—

Mr. Singer: Listen to the barracking! There has been many a time when I did not get a similar amendment in writing from that side.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bales has moved that subsection 2 of section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out "26" in the second line and inserting in place thereof "28."

Mr. Singer: All right. That sounds better.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Just a minute.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Good: This still allows the minister complete authority to change or withdraw consent of the draft plan at any time during that three-year period? Section 28(11)?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Section 28 (11) under the Act says:

Upon settlement of the draft plan, the minister may give his approval thereto and may, in his discretion, withdraw his approval of a final plan for registration.

Mr. Good: The minister has until 1974 on anything that is approved now?

Hon. Mr. Bales: That is correct. It takes it to July 1, 1974, so that they are not cut out from their present status.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments or questions on section 3?

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Mr. Pilkey: On section 5.

Mr. Chairman: Section 5?

On section 5.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman) asked the minister why the $50 fee as opposed to $25? Why the change? Was it a question of the cost factor to the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Bales: That is what I explained previously. We felt that there should be a limitation put in there so that an arbitrary figure was not picked.

Mr. Deans: It already was.

Mr. Brown: Is it not true that, in fact, this is going to provide a hardship on precisely landholders, the small farmers who want to separate one parcel of land? To a developer it means nothing—$25 is nothing—but to the ordinary person living in the rural areas of Ontario who wants to separate a small piece of land, that is a substantial amount of money. It is the typical kind of thing that comes from the Tory party. Debit the poor who cannot afford it and make it easy for the person who can afford it.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, that reasoning is completely fallacious. There is nothing like that to it at all. We are going to establish land division committees and if they are going to function properly then the costs of the matter must be borne by those who apply. There is no obligation to charge the $50. It is up to the municipality or to the area to set its own fee. There is simply a maximum set. When we are setting a maximum we are protecting the individuals so that they cannot have an indefinite or indiscriminate amount allocated as a charge.

Mr. Brown: Why does the minister not set it on the basis of the amount of land involved, the value of the transaction, rather than on a uniform scale right across the board regardless of the amount?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Then the fee would be higher.

Mr. Brown: Yes, in some cases it would, but it could be afforded.

Mr. Deans: I would like to ask the minister if he honestly believes that municipalities are going to charge less than the maximum permitted?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Some will.

Mr. Good: Sure they will.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Some do now.

Mr. Deans: There was an occasion, I know, when they did not charge anything. I realize that.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): It is up to them.

Mr. Deans: My experience has been that generally when they charge, they charge the full amount. I am just curious to know whether the minister does think that municipalities would charge less than the full amount when they intended to charge?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I think that municipalities will use good judgment in the matter. I think they want to assess their costs and we are anxious that land division committees be established. Unless they are going to be able to charge a fee that will meet the costs in-olved, we are going to find a reticence by certain counties to establish those committees.

Sections 5 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 28, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the Committee of the Whole House rise and report one bill with amendments, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House begs to report one bill with amendments, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 28, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Clerk of the House: The 17th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Chairman, in rising to present the estimates of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food for the consideration of the House, I first of all want to pay tribute to the staff of our department who, to me, are among the finest civil servants to be found anywhere in Canada. I know of no more dedicated group of people than they. They work hours long beyond what could be considered normal working hours for the civil service, in providing the service and regulatory functions which our department provides.

This department is a service and a regulatory department. Throughout the entire extension branch, the major emphasis is on helping farm people to make farm management decisions. These involve decisions relating to farm drainage; whether or not to expand the enterprise or to give up certain parts of the enterprise, to specialize in certain lines or to expand the holdings of the farm, whether through a direct purchase or through ARDA acquisition of land.

Certainly, these decisions are based very much on the necessity that modern agriculture demands for making decisions that are sometimes very far-reaching. This really is the job of the extension branch and it is doing an excellent job in this regard.

The budget of our department, Mr. Chairman, is in the amount of something like $80.75 million this year. I will be prepared to deal with each item, vote by vote, as we proceed through the estimate book and will have a good deal to say, I expect, about various matters that are brought to our attention by the members from all sides of the House in discussing the various items that are up for presentation.

I leave it at that, Mr. Chairman, and hope that we may proceed forthwith with the estimates.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, I rise to begin the criticism of these current estimates with the disadvantage of having had them in my hands for less than 24 hours, and with the knowledge that Friday's consideration of them may again be preceded by consideration of legislation, so that, in fact, we cannot hope to make meaningful comments and suggestions before the beginning of next week.

We also have had to bow to the computer in the manner in which the accounts are laid out, which, for the first time this year, is in accordance with the so called national accounts coding system. It seems clearer than before but it will need some getting used to.

I will commend the three-year comparison on page 9 of the estimates and also the three-year comparison on the lead pages of each department, which gives effect to a much needed reform we sought in the standing committee on public accounts last year. So I do commend the department on a little more thorough résumé of the various departments. As we get into them, we will be able to deal more specifically with each one.

I would like to make one comment on the junior farmer loans item, that is on vote 102, subsection 7, of course, this is the most shocking in the agriculture production programme economy, particularly since the current year will be the second in which the amount of the loan has declined by $2 million, the actual amount for 1969-1970 being $5,624,503, and the estimates for 1970-1971 being $3,670,040, and the current estimate being $1,760,800. In fact, on page 21, the Ontario junior farmer establishment loan corporation will have a deficit for 1971-1972 of $1,600,000, which is to be made up by the transfer payment from the provincial Treasurer.

This sad state of affairs is just one more example of Ontario's lack of co-operation with the federal government. It is as though we had two governments vying with each other to see how each can put the other down.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Well, that is in the name of the new warfare.

Mr. Innes: That is right. It was quite evident in the budget yesterday.

Mr. Sopha: New warfare. We will be going to war.

Mr. Innes: Or who can be top dog. It is the Ontario junior farmer who is being hurt by this most of all. The federal farm credit corporation has set its interest rate at around eight per cent, but the Quebec farmer is rebated three per cent of this, and the Ontario government sees fit to do nothing about it.

The Quebec farmers, in fact, and especially young farmers, get the kind of break that our own farmers no longer enjoy. The revision in the Ontario junior farmer loan programme was meant to be part of a new deal, but instead it was cut off abruptly, and no deal was forthcoming. This certainly was not the intent of the farm income committee, but it was to be part of a package deal whereby we would have revised the whole financial picture of farm loans in the Ontario segment.

The strength of mixed farming is the ability to follow, or even anticipate the market trends, and to come out on top. Extreme specialization places the individual farmer in the power of the big distributors and the chains, which, by their purchasing patterns, effectively dominate the market and set the effective prices. It is not necessary to have a conspiracy for this. All you have to do is to be big enough, as the packers and the supermarkets are, and the whole pattern of the market is yours to call the shots.

The specialists from Guelph and the department elsewhere who tour the countryside giving advice are all too often people who have themselves never made one cent through practical farming. Nor could they ever do so. They have gone through the academic rigour all right, but they have not got their boots and hands dirty struggling to make a dollar. Field experience is lacking in these people. Yet they presume to give advice, and if the farmer listens, he finds himself trapped, at the mercy of the meat packers and the grocery chains.

Supply management was never more required than at the present time and never more urgently. Hopefully the federal Bill C-176, which is being debated in the House of Commons at the present time, will allow the federal government and the provinces, working together, the combined power and authority to control the market effectively and match production with consumption.

In the meantime, in Ontario, a serious emergency exists, particularly in the hog and poultry industries. Many of these producers will be forced into bankruptcy in the very near future, if some of them are not already in that condition at the moment.

Never has the plight of the Ontario farmer been so bleak as it is today. It is ironical that prices today for certain farm products are less than those obtaining at the heights or, should I say, in the depths of the depression of the Thirties. I have a 1931 newspaper which shows that the farmer in that year got for his eggs 28 cents a dozen for extras; 24 cents for firsts and 20 cents for seconds. Last week, 40 years later, the price for grade A was 23 cents.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Quite a difference!

Mr. Innes: Just a moment. The minister will have time to speak. And the cost of production today is somewhere between 29 cents to 31 cents.

The figures for dressed poultry at that particular time 40 years ago were: birds over five pounds, 26 cents a pound; four to five pounds, 24 cents a pound; and four pounds and under, 21 cents a pound. Today the broiler prices are 20 cents. These figures tell their own story.

What about hogs? Hogs last week were $21.70 a hundredweight and in July, 1969, they were will over $36 a hundredweight; for a difference in that short period of approximately $15 per hundredweight or in the neighbourhood of $25 per hog. It is almost unbelievable. Certainly there is no sign of any change in this picture for some time until a lot of people are forced out of production.

Mr. Chairman, nearly everyone else is on his way up but the farmer is still in the dustbowl, financially speaking. The only answer is to control production and tailor it to the market. General Motors and General Electric do not continue to produce a given production line when the sales for that item fall off. They immediately slow down or cease that operation. And they are not adverse to building into their actual planning the deliberate use of the unemployment insurance mechanism to serve their own ends; in other words, they use this fund as part of their production strategy.

The farmer has no such opportunity to shut down. Instead, he is lectured constantly by the specialists and told that he too must specialize in producing certain products in quantity in order to survive. Efficiency, the farmer is advised, will allow him to produce far more of that particular product. But the farmer who listens to this advice too carefully gambles his whole future. He puts all his eggs in one basket.

I feel that The Department of Agriculture and Food must concern itself with this problem of farmers who are about to be forced out of business by these circumstances over which they have little or no control. Many of the victims are young aggressive farmers, and agriculture can ill afford to sacrifice these young people in an industry that must continue to attract young people if it is to survive.

George McLoughlin—who the minister is quite aware of, knows very well—chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, in a speech to Western Ontario Breeders Incorporated warned against farm enterprises getting too big, too fast and thus becoming unmanageable. He indicated that when operations become too big efficiency goes down, proper management is curtailed and the grip of the operator is consequently lost. This is particularly true, he said, of the livestock industry.

The specialists who are going around the province from the department, handing out advice to the farmers would themselves do well to study what Mr. McLoughlin has said. I am convinced that they are recommending consolidation procedures and other measures resulting in greatly expanded production in spite of a market analysis that would set other goals in priorities. The best interests of the farmer and of the industry must always be those of the marketplace, coupled with the ability of a given operator to manage a given undertaking. These are the only criteria that matter.

The people from Guelph and the department, if they have other criteria, should be constantly reminded that they are off-track. It is not what they are being paid for. They are being paid to ensure that the farmer is made to work in Ontario and to deliver a fair living to those who engage in it. This is their job.

The recent increase in the capital grants structure, which I feel is a reasonably good programme for the farmers across the province, has some features that have been brought to my attention and possibly need a little revision. Comments are coming to me at a great rate from serious members of the farming community who do not like the way the capital grants programme is being put into effect.

In the first place it appears that it is a blanket approach to all farm problems. Large, medium, small and even part-time farmers appear to be treated the same for actuarial purposes. It seems relatively easy to get a capital grant or up to $3,000. A father can get a grant for $3,000. A father and a farmer who has a $3,000 income can get a grant for $3,000, and in a week or so he can sell that farm to his son and he can also get $3,000 for an operation that has only a $3,000 income. Another way is to incorporate, which makes the resultant corporation eligible for $6,000—double what the unincorporated farmer gets.

I have had complaints about this, and they say to me: "Why should farmers be asked to incorporate in order to receive an extra $3,000?" It would appear the department is directly encouraging incorporation of farms at a time when many accountants and tax specialists are advising otherwise.

The way in which the grants programme is administered has also had direct implications for conservation and for the environment. George Jones of the crop science department at the University of Guelph has recently published an important article on agricultural practices in Ontario and their impact on the environment. He lists soil erosion as one of the most significant factors affecting the Ontario picture today. I should like to read into the record this quotation from his article:

The increasing number of acres devoted to continuous corn or simple cropping systems using corn, soya beans and small grains can only mean one thing: greater erosion and, consequently, greater erosion programmes.

No one who recognizes erosion as an environmental hazard should ignore the meadow-crop solution, especially in the rolling topography of southern Ontario. A crop man operating in this environment knows that meadow crops flourish here and, along with small grains, have long provided the basic feed for livestock.

The meadow crops provide our last answer to erosion control. This statement goes without challenge. The only problem is how to make money by growing them. As far as I can see, the only hurdle that keeps us from making money from them is how to store them so that the resultant feed is of consistently high quality.

Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a need in capital grants structure for the building-in of an encouragement to Ontario farmers to maintain pasture, particularly in the areas subject to continuous erosion. Last year I mentioned that in Britain there are tax concessions for farmers who keep their land in pasture over a long period of years.

For the moment the concept of a cow-calf operation in Ontario has been an impractical one because of the high cost of land and the burden of taxation. There has been no hope of a profitable operation. However, the cost of replacement cattle to feedlot operators in southern Ontario has continued to rise due to transportation costs from western Ontario.

Here then is an area where the minister could do some promotion. As he knows, the beef industry is one of the brighter spots in the agricultural picture today.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): It is about the only one left.

Mr. Innes: He could kill several birds with one stone. He could prevent erosion and improve the environment at the same time as he was assisting the Ontario farmer and the feedlot operator by an imaginative grant-aided pasture and meadow programme.

Let me turn to the question of Bill 10—we have heard about that bill before—and its effect on relations between Ontario and Quebec and upon the Liberal concept of free trade, which we are only prepared to compromise in the most extreme circumstances.

As the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) has clearly shown, the Minister of Agriculture and Food has misled the House. I will leave it to my colleague to develop all the ramifications, of order and privilege, that may arise from that revelation so clearly documented in Hansard. But I do want to add fuel to the fire, if I may, by quoting from the minister's own submission to the House of Commons standing committee on agriculture's public hearing into Bill C-176—The Farm Products Marketing Act—held at Sutton Place on Monday, January 25 last. The following is a direct quotation from what the minister said on that particular occasion:

The discussions that have taken place at meetings of provincial Ministers and Deputy Ministers of Agriculture in 1968, 1969, and again in 1970 have clearly indicated the need for some legislative mechanism whereby the interprovincial movement and marketing of certain farm products could be conducted in an orderly manner. It is essential to prevent undue distress and unnecessary disruption of production and marketing programmes that have been established by producers in many of the provinces. Provincial Ministers and Deputy Ministers of Agriculture have expressed that philosophy to the federal minister on several occasions. His introduction of the bill under examination today, I assume, is a result of his responding to what we believe to be a positive need in Canada today.

He went on to say:

We have marketing problems in Canada today, problems that we cannot ignore, problems that must be resolved. We believe that effective national marketing legislation is essential. It is true that most of the provinces have acted in an interim way to prevent distress in their own areas, and I admit that Ontario is a party to the establishment of measures—

Now I want the House to get this last phrase—that can only be described as being less than desirable.

In spite of that January admission, the minister has gone his own way since with his policy of economic separatism, which can only have the effect of erecting a Berlin Wall over Canada and, particularly, at the border at Lancaster.

Make no mistake—this matter can escalate. To show how serious the situation is regarded, I would like to quote from two CBC noon-time farm broadcasts which our research department recorded so we might have evidence to refute the minister in his claim that, while he cannot speak the language of his Quebec counterpart, the two deputies get on like a house on fire.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not say that.

Mr. Innes: That is not enough, Mr. Chairman. While I am not a fanatical exponent of bilingualism in every corner of Canada, it seems clear to me, and surely to all thinking men, that a minister who has had to deal with his opposite number in Quebec on a matter of such immense importance to such a large cross-section of Ontario ought to have some tools to do the job.

The CBC's Steve Casselman was in touch with Quebec officials and here is what he said:

I contacted the hon. Norman Toupin, Quebec's Minister of Agriculture. He feels that if Ontario does instigate Bill 10 and put it forth, this will only develop balkanization in agricultural products.

"We have no choice but to strengthen our position and harden our laws to be on an equal footing with Ontario and other provinces," he said.

I asked him if they would retaliate by possibly reducing the number of fruit and vegetable imports from Ontario, and he said, that he hoped it would not go this far, but that if it should, he realized that Ontario spills over much more agricultural products into Quebec than Quebec does the other way. He emphasized that Ontario is much more vulnerable than Quebec is.

Mr. Chairman, I ask you does this sound like the talk of a minister who has been consulted? The truth is the minister himself was not consulted. This all started and ended at the deputy minister level. It did not extend to an understanding between the responsible ministers who were not even talking the same language.

Meanwhile, the broiler marketing board of Ontario has been using warlike phrases, like "deterrent," "seize" and "destroy missions." After taking inventory in the major food outlets, the board's office told the CBC that it was ready to do just that. Quebec pointed out that they could only hold the material briefly for evidence, not destroy it, and that the maximum penalty was a $25 fine. The argument that Ontario was escalating the interprovincial trade war thus had great evidential backing. The Ontario fine is $500 for the first offence and for subsequent offences not more than $5,000. There are much stronger teeth in Ontario's law than in Quebec's, but the question is who will those teeth ultimately bite?

The Catholic Farmers Union of Quebec is now militant, and has been in constant consultation with hon. Norman Toupin. Their members told him that the Ontario government acts much faster in protectionist legislation than the Quebec government and they have called for an escalator of the inter-provincial struggle. Mr. Toupin told Steve Casselman that Quebec is now preparing legislation that will increase its own fines against offenders by which, of course, is meant free traders in the Liberal sense.

Now Manitoba has taken its case to the Supreme Court of Canada and, in spite of earlier denials, Ontario has intervened. It is clear that we ought to leave this to the federal government. That is the Liberal position, that we have to have co-ordinated legislation stemming from Bill C-176 and not, to quote the minister himself, "measures that can only be described as being less than desirable."

Mr. Chairman, this is only one of the most glaring examples of lack of leadership on the part of this government in the field of agriculture. Later, I intend to raise the question of taxation and rebates and to illustrate some of these glaring anomalies where the big man has gained again through a loophole which has not yet been plugged. The overtaxation of farmers, followed by paying them back with their own money, has not fooled any one. I shall also touch on agriculture education and the delay in the standardization of farm machinery in later remarks. Thank you.

Mr. K. C. Bolton (Middlesex South): Mr. Chairman, I am happy to enter into this discussion of agricultural policy. Like the Liberal critic, I regret that time has been so short for preparation. I also regret that we happened to pick a day when I have laryngitis, but I hold nobody else responsible for that but myself. I recklessly walked in the snow on Saturday, while trying to raise money to build a swimming pool in Dorchester. I suppose, maybe, it was worth it.

I am happy to have been given the privilege by my party to act, at least for the time being, as a critic of agriculture, because I share with the minister the privilege of living in Middlesex county, a county that is very well known throughout Ontario and throughout the country as being a county of very advanced agricultural production.

My intention is to speak briefly today. I hope my voice returns later to speak at greater length on other subjects in relation to agriculture. But, today, I want to speak about the underlying philosophy of the Agriculture Department. I must take the members back two years to the publication of "The Challenge of Abundance."

Members may recall that, in 1966, there was a demonstration by the farmers who were concerned about their income. Then, there was a conference in Vineland which reached certain conclusions which the government appeared to accept, the basic principles being that a cheap food policy is not only inevitable but desirable if food prices are to be kept within family budgets. Cheap food is necessary because a great many people are living on very low levels of income, many below the poverty level.

But—and here I move to the second principle—experience has proven that farmers are not now able to earn enough income in the marketplace, even with the assistance of marketing plans. I do not need, in this House, to belabour what should be a very apparent fact that the majority of farmers are in a very serious cost-price squeeze. We find that farmers are leaving the farm at the rate of at least 3,000 a year in Ontario.

The third principle, as it was stated at that time, at the Vineland conference, was that, because of these facts the farm income gained in the marketplace must be supplemented with payments from federal and provincial governments. Such payments should be regarded as a consumer subsidy to keep prices down to ensure farmers enough income to cover their costs of production, capital needs and a decent family income.

Mr. Chairman, following that conference and that discussion we were presented with a splendid booklet—not a booklet, a book—magnificently produced, and containing what I had thought would be a statement of declared policy on the part of the government. I want to refer to some of the issues raised at that time.

The opening statement was:

Agriculture is a unique industry. It is the largest in Canada. It contributes more to export earnings and has increased its efficiency at a faster rate than any other sector in the nation's economy.

Therefore, agriculture deserves the full consideration of all who are concerned about the economy of our province and of our nation.

We would expect, therefore, that the government will present to us, in the estimates and elsewhere, a statement of policy which would indicate a general recognition of the supreme importance of the industry.

Yet, though this industry is so important, we find remarkably little evidence that there is any new thought being given to the grave problem this industry is now facing.

The independent farmer-businessman has lower returns to his investment, management and labour than most other businessmen.

I quote, I remind members, from the document produced by the government itself.

This intolerable situation, to a significant degree, can be attributed to a lack of industry planning, especially in the field of production marketing and the failure of the farmers' organizations.

Then we are asked to look at four of these questions. What sort of changes do we want? Who should guide or institute these changes? Who should benefit and by how much? What costs are involved in change and who should pay for them? How should these changes be instituted?

The special committee on farm income concluded its opening statement by saying, "There has been a long period of dialogue. Now is the time for action." Mr. Chairman, we in the New Democratic Party are asking, "What is the action? What is the intended change?"

We recognize throughout this province and throughout the country a very grave problem. We find farmers who are either giving their milk away or pouring it out on the ground because they cannot get the right prices for their product. We find very considerable unrest in the whole community. We find farmers leaving this industry. We ask, "What is the policy of the government to remedy this situation?"

I trust that in the course of the debates on his estimates we will be provided with some of the answers to these extremely important questions.

Reference has been made already to taxation. Farmers carry a major burden of taxation in Ontario, even though they very rarely belong to the high-income categories. The greatest burden of taxes—mind you, I want to emphasize this: I am not at this moment quoting from New Democratic propaganda or socialist propaganda, if you prefer the term; I am quoting from government documents. Later I shall refer to New Democratic policy—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Or propaganda.

Mr. Bolton: —or propaganda, as you wish.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Great stuff. Good reading.

Mr. Bolton: To continue:

The greatest burden of taxation imposed on farms in Ontario comes through property taxation which bears little relationship to the income position of the taxpayer. The property tax bill does not change according to the ability of the taxpayer to pay.

What is the government's answer to this problem—a rebate of 25 per cent of what they should not have taken away in the first place?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): No Tories would plot that though.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): A real expert.

Mr. Martel: Does not have to be an expert.

Mr. Bolton: May I, with profound respect for the Minister of Agriculture and Food, for whom I do have respect, attempt to answer some of the questions that are posed in "A Challenge of Abundance."

What sort of changes do we want? May I offer some of the proposed answers? What the farmer wants is a chance to carry on his family farm in a way that provides a decent income for himself and the prospect that his sons and daughters will wish to stay in their rural environment.

He wants to have as fair a chance as other workers of securing proper return for his efforts. He wants recognition of the contribution he makes to the economy of his country. With few exceptions he does not demand excessive returns for his labour; certainly if he does, he is thwarted in that intention. What he asks is a chance to live in a rural area providing the needs of his community, sharing in providing for the world one of its basic requirements—its food.

He does not wish to see the efforts of his industry exploited by others. He regrets—and does so with real justice—the regular comment that is made when he asks for a fair price, that he is the one responsible for forcing up food prices. We can give plenty of evidence to show that whatever slight gain the farmer makes is as nothing compared with the gain that is made by the middleman. This needs examination.

May I continue then with the suggestion about the changes we would offer the farmer? First of all, the elimination of monopoly control over the price of many things he buys—fertilizers, weed spray and other basic supplies—through co-operatives where possible.

We suggest the use of chemicals would be limited until the safety seal was awarded. The treatment of land and crops with residual sprays and dusts will be recorded for future reference.

The farmer wants some help with his farm machinery problem. I spent several days at a farm show recently and saw the enormous and the extremely expensive machinery that farmers are required to buy—machinery that breaks down very readily and very consistently, with a long delay in the supply of parts; the machinery for which he pays far too much.

We would propose a Farm Machinery Act to provide for mandatory testing of machinery offered for sale in the province, with the results made known to farmers and manufacturers. We would enforce the stocking of spare parts, so that the farmers would not lose the days they now lose waiting for their machinery to be repaired. We would try to eliminate unwarranted, expensive promotional advertising campaigns.

The Act would provide for the creation of a Crown corporation to act as first purchaser of all farm machinery and as the distributors to local dealers. We would make the burden lighter for farmers by encouraging standardized parts through the corporation's buying power.

Then, too, as I am sure you will recall, more than 10 years ago our policy—very clearly stated—about the burden of education costs on farm lands, as distinct from residential and other farm property. We do not believe that a farmer should be asked to pay education tax on the land he uses for farm purposes. Unless and until we take the tax off all residential property he will be required to pay on that alone but we encourage development of a municipal foundation plan. We will of course move in due course—and may that be soon—to collect at least 80 per cent of the education tax provincially rather than locally.

Land and other productive facilities would be exempt from education taxes and would pay property taxes at a lower rate, where feasible and public ownership where necessary.

We will provide for the farmer long-term credit for the financing of adequate acreage and other capital requirements for modern farm operations, at interest rates more closely related to the earning capacity of agriculture.

We would provide much more generous credit to co-operatives and marketing boards for the development of their operations.

We would encourage co-operative and publicly-owned facilities for storage, processing and distribution of food products. Then, too, we would encourage the development of a Department of Co-operatives with a full-time minister to encourage the greatest development of a programme of self help.

These are just some of the things, Mr. Chairman, that provide an answer to the question, "What sort of changes do we want?" Here are some of them. I invite the minister, when he makes his reply, to tell us what changes are proposed by the government to meet the basic needs of the farmer of today.

Mr. Chairman, for rather obvious reasons, I cannot go on speaking much longer. I shall return when we return to the question of agricultural marketing—

An hon. member: And when he is in better voice.

Mr. Bolton: And when I have more of a voice.

I am in your hands, Mr. Chairman. I want to return to this debate at a later time; I do not want the debate to discontinue. What is my procedure at this point, for withdrawing without the debate closing off?

Mr. Chairman: I am afraid there is no provision for such activity. The normal procedure in the House is for a member of each of the opposition parties to have their critic—

Mr. Martel: He cannot speak.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Have you no cure for laryngitis?

Mr. Chairman:—provide his remarks and then the hon. minister replies. I must confess I have not encountered such a situation before. The hon. member is suggesting that he has more to say?

Mr. Bolton: I will come in on the various votes, then, Mr. Chairman, if I may.

Mr. Chairman: I misunderstood, I am sorry. I thought the hon. member wished to re-enter into the debate as the critic.

Mr. Bolton: No.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You can count on us being there at all times, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bolton: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister wish to respond to any of the remarks?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I really do not intend to respond at any great length. I realize that there will be debate on other items as we come along and I hope the hon. member for Middlesex South will find his voice sufficiently recovered to present his party's position at that time.

With regard to certain suggestions that have been made, I share with my friend from Oxford the concern expressed by a great many hog farmers with the deplorable price of hogs today in this country. There is a very good reason for it.

Certainly his position, which I assume is the position of his party, relative to supply management, is, I think, a move forward in the position of his party as far as that particular aspect of agriculture is concerned. Because there have been many people in the past most reluctant to confess, as farmers—and he is a farmer, and a good farmer in Ontario—that there is necessity for supply management in agricultural production.

I do not know why we have been so reluctant to confess this as farm people. Perhaps it is because of a rugged individualism that so many of us seem to be so proud of. Nevertheless, it is a fact of life. Certainly the manufacturing industry for years has practised supply management, as he points out, using the unemployment insurance fund to offset the unfortunate effect which the lay-off of people from manufacturing plants may have when they decide to implement supply management as far as the production of those respective plants is concerned.

I fancy that if there had been some type of supply management worked out a few years ago regarding hog production perhaps we might not have been in the position we are in today.

But I would point out, through you, Mr. Chairman, to the members of this House that on numerous occasions when one could see the buildup of feed grain supplies in western Canada taking place and the unfortunate lack of sales of that western grain, that it was inevitable that western departments of agriculture would encourage their farm people to diversify, to use that grain for livestock or poultry feed and consequently convert that grain into cash. It was just as obvious as it could be. And they did just that.

Now, we expressed very great concern. As a matter of fact, at various conferences where we were meeting with federal officials and with other provincial officials, we raised the point that the greatest threat facing Ontario

—I should say Canadian agriculture and in particular eastern Canada agriculture—since the depression of the Thirties was the pile-up of feed grains in western Canada.

The dairy industry had already moved to supply management through the effects of the national dairy commission, working through the respective provincial milk marketing boards. To some degree, there have been controls in some other areas in the Province of Ontario, but there was virtually no control as far as the production of hogs and poultry products was concerned, other than in certain provinces—Ontario was one of them—as far as broilers were concerned. In fact, other provinces had the same type of legislation.

I pointed out as well in an address that I had the privilege to make here in Toronto, a year ago last winter that unless some action was taken by the federal government to relieve that incredible concern that was being expressed by western farmers with this buildup of feed grains, that they had no choice but to make that diversification to other agricultural production, particularly livestock feed. I suggested and I urged that all of us, as Canadian citizens, should support the federal government in every way possible in moving that surplus of feed grains and mill-wheat into world export markets, even if it was at the cost to the taxpayers of Canada of a substantial sum. That is why I supported, quite frankly, the lift programme that I believe many people will believe had a very marked effect on reducing the amount of surplus wheat and perhaps encouraging the disposal of a good deal of that feed grain from western Canada.

We agreed completely that something had to be done. We warned the federal government on numerous occasions of the incredible dangers that lay ahead. Here we had had, in the Province of Ontario and, in fact, throughout Canada, a very buoyant hog market. In fact, a buoyant hog market pertained over most of the North American continent. So buoyant that it was in the neighbourhood of $35 to $40 a hundred-weight for dressed weight hogs.

This was a substantial price and a good price. I am not saying that it is too high at all, but even during that time we were importing into this country substantial quantities of pork just to meet domestic requirements. There was certainly room for some expansion in the production of hogs within Canada itself.

The buildup of feed grains in western Canada was an open invitation to farmers, and particularly to western governments to encourage their farmers to diversify. Diversify they did, with an increase in hog production of 75 per cent in Saskatchewan, 45 per cent in Manitoba, and about 35 per cent in round figures in the Province of Alberta. At the same time in eastern Canada we increased production by about 11 per cent.

This was coupled with an increase in hog production in the United States of about 13 per cent. Due to the again buoyant hog market and to an enormous stockpile of feed corn, they looked upon it as being a useful move to change to hog production. The result was that we had incredible over-production of hogs. Fortunately, through efforts of our food council; through efforts of the Canadian swine council; through efforts of the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, we were able to increase the export of pork products out of Canada by 68 per cent in 1970, and that to me was the safety valve that helped a very great deal.

Along with that, the chain stores here co-operated with the Ontario Food Council in promoting pork, to get pork sold. The consumer price was reduced accordingly as the live price had come down, and I think it can be attributed to that major effort that we estimate an increase of about 10 pounds per capita in the consumption of pork at retail level in the Province of Ontario last year, and I believe that figure can be attributed across Canada as well. This was a major step forward.

I will have to confess that it was at the expense to some degree of other meats, particularly poultry products. I do not think it had a very marked effect on the beef trade, but it might have had some effect, and we recognize that there are great difficulties involved in this programme.

What is the offsetting feature? What is likely to take place in the future concerning these products? Well last fall, as you will recall, southern leaf blight had a major effect in the United States corn-growing areas of a substantial reduction in the production of feed corn supplies. In fact, we had quite a threat of it in the Province of Ontario, but I do not think it really affected production very much here, and I certainly hope it will not this year.

The federal government has made extensive efforts to move feed grains and they have been successful in escalating the sale of feed grains substantially over previous years, and I think that most farmers in western Canada recognize that feed grains will not be as cheap as they have been in the past. Many of them have become disenchanted already with feeding hogs rather than being able to grow grain and sell it to the local elevator and get it out of the country.

This, to me, will be reflected in what would appear to be a turnabout in prices. If all indicators appear to be correct, sometime later this summer we might have quite a substantial change in hog prices. Hog prices have been of a cyclical nature for a great many years, but I venture to suggest to my hon. friend from Oxford that there would be few farmers, if any, in the Province of Ontario who would agree that they wished to submit themselves to quota production of hogs.

I have seen no such indication of that anywhere in anything that I have read concerning the statements attributed to either the Canadian Swine Council or to the Ontario Hog Producers Marketing Board membership, but they do believe that there is necessity to try and gear in some way across Canada production to known markets within Canada and to those markets that can be developed outside Canada for export trade in pork.

We have been encouraged with the opportunities that appear to be developing, particularly in the Orient, in Japan, for pork sales, and I think that there are opportunities here that we should explore to the full. But we must recognize that if we are going to get into the export market on pork products then we are going to have to accept world prices, and if we are going to accept world prices then does that mean that that price should pertain to pork sold not only in the Province of Ontario, but across Canada?

This is where some pork producers are expounding the philosophy—which perhaps has a great deal of merit to it—that there should be a two-price system established for pork. That would entail some administrative problems but I think would, to a very large degree, help to relieve some of the concern that has been expressed.

With regard to capital grants—we will come to that vote later on, Mr. Chairman—my hon. friend advises us that there are farmers who are critical of the double grants to corporate farmers. Well, let me say to him that there were many farmers who were critical of the fact that there was not a double grant to corporate farmers in the past. In the past programme of the capital grants programme we just had $1,000 which was available no matter whether it was one farmer or whether there were two or three farmers operating as a corporate entity, and it did not appear to be fair to them.

We have said that where there are two or more farmers operating in a corporate entity, both of whom have an active interest and a working relationship in the partnership, they can qualify for double grants. But even that does not satisfy many farmers. There are farmers coming to us now and saying, "There are five in this family, three or four in another"—and I know one farmer has come to us with 800 acres of land and he said, "I expect that we should be entitled to eight grants." Now where do you draw the line? Frankly, it is not easy to resolve.

I am interested in the suggestion that we should expand Ontario's cow-calf operations. We have been talking about this for many years, and we have been successful, particularly in northern Ontario, in doing just that. Perhaps there are other opportunities throughout southern Ontario and we hope that we can encourage farmers to do it, but I would have some reservations, to provide capital grants for that purpose.

My hon. friend came to Bill 10, and I was delighted to hear him refer to what I thought was a very excellent submission made by the Province of Ontario to the federal standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): That was one of the minister's good days, was it not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I thought, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend might have said that that was a very excellent presentation. Now he did not, and I do not want to put words in his mouth, but by the same token I would have—

Mr. MacDonald: Do not be bashful; say it yourself.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, modesty overcomes me and I just simply cannot do that.

Mr. Innes: Why spoil a good thing?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would have hoped, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend, when he quoted from page 2 of that submission, might have continued to read the last sentence of that page: "That in the absence of such national marketing legislation we had no other alternative." And this is what we mean by the introduction of the measures that were taken last September, to which my hon. friend said I had referred to as being less than desirable. And I make no apologies for having that that, because I believe it quite firmly.

Let me say had my hon. friend turned over the page and read from the top of page 3 of that submission and I quote, Mr. Chairman:

I suggest to you that the question facing this committee is not, should we or should we not have national marketing legislation but rather it is, how soon can we expect to have national marketing legislation to bring order and stability to the industry?

Mr. Singer: Why does the minister not ask his Tory friends in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To continue:

We can scarcely stand idly by and allow our producers who have adopted supply management programmes to become buried under the unplanned production of other areas that is literally dumped on our markets. Until a national Marketing Act has been developed and proclaimed, the provinces will be forced to use whatever measures they can develop to protect the interests of their producers. It is possible that voluntary agreements can be established, but our experience has indicated little success by this method.

Mr. Chairman, that is the position, clearly enunciated, that we took. And in reply to my hon. friend from Downsview who quite properly suggests why do I not say that to my counterparts at Ottawa, let me say that they were in that meeting and heard me say it.

Mr. Gaunt: It is a wonder, though, they will listen to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Unfortunately, my influence is not as great as my hon. friend from Downsview would have people believe.

Mr. MacDonald: Unfortunately, the minister is talking now the way he used to, or sometimes does when he lapses from his flashes of wisdom. They are rabid free enterprise.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, of course.

Mr. MacDonald: And the minister is encouraging them to put in a socialist programme.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, not a socialist programme. Not by any means.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: When I get on the member's bandwagon, my friend, I will be a great deal older than I am today and I doubt if that will ever happen.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The minister will be a great deal wiser, too.

Mr. Martel: He would have to be wiser.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat distressed the other day to find in this House—and I really am concerned and no little shocked but not really surprised—to note the incredible opposition that was launched by our friends in the opposition parties against our attempt to look after the interests of Ontario producers.

I must confess that I am not against anybody but I see nothing wrong with being pro-Ontario. That is our job in this House—to look after the interests of Ontario producers and it was with, I must confess, Mr. Chairman, a great degree of concern and amazement that I listened to the opposition the other day. In this connection I would just like to quote from an editorial that appeared in Farm and Country that has just been brought out I think—

Mr. Innes: How much farming has he done?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think this paper goes into every farm home in the Province of Ontario. It is looked upon as one of the outstanding farm papers in this country.

Mr. Deans: What is the date?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The dateline is April 27, 1971, page 4 of Farm and Country.

WHY THE FUROR?

The concern over Bill 10, the seize and detain measure, expressed by both opposition parties in the Legislature was understandable. After all, it is the duty of Her Majesty's loyal opposition to probe, examine and study every measure brought before the House. They are the watchdogs of democracy but there is a difference between concern, which should always be present, and mindless opposition for the sake of opposition. Regrettably, neither the Liberal nor the New Democratic Parties added lustre to their reputations in the recent debate.

Then it goes on to say—

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the minister not quote their article on "OMBILL" of two years ago?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member did that for me. My hon. friend from York South did that, Mr. Chairman.

This cannot be described as responsible opposition. It smells of opportunism. Possibly the attackers figured there were only 750 broiler chicken growers left in the province, not many votes at the next election, so why not make a little hay? We regret to inform the would-be governing parties—

That is a great over-statement!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To continue:

—that over recent years, most farmers have been inclined to stick together when trouble looms. Rather than 750 scattered chicken farmers there could be a hundred times that number of other producers who will come to their defence. They should remember this next time. If they do not, it is more than likely that farmers will remember the behaviour of some politicians in the Legislature.

Here, Mr. Chairman, I have a letter over the signature of the general manager of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, dated April 22. He addresses this letter to me:

At the board of directors meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture held on April 15:

The following resolutions were carried unanimously: Be it resolved that the OFA strongly supports the proposed amendment to The Farm Products Marketing Act to empower local boards to seize and detain regulated farm products at the risk and expense of the owner; and be it resolved that the OFA strongly supports the proposed amendment to The Farm Products Marketing Act to provide for a delegation of provincial powers to a national marketing agency.

These two resolutions are brought to your attention to indicate that we do support your actions in both areas mentioned and thank you for your attention.

S. J. Hale,
General Manager

Now, if the Ontario Federation of Agriculture—

Mr. Sargent: Did the minister request that letter from him? Did he ask for the letter?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No. As a matter of fact, that came to me quite unsolicited and quite by surprise. I am delighted to have it.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that not a normal procedure, that things come to you unsolicited?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Of course.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the minister make the point then?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Because my hon. friend said that I asked for it.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, really? It is interesting that he felt that he had to make that point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend asked for it. He asked if I had solicited it.

Mr. MacDonald: It is very interesting that the minister felt compelled to make the point that the letter was unsolicited.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I always try to reply to members of the House when they ask me a question. I try to reply honestly as well.

Mr. Singer: Well, is the minister going to intervene?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, we are going to intervene.

Mr. Singer: The minister is?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I told the member that yesterday.

Mr. Singer: Why did the minister say two or three times he was not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I said once I was not.

Mr. Singer: It was a couple more times. Does he want me to find some more?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend is quite right. We are certainly going to intervene when it comes before us, but the problem is this—and I think it was summed up rather well by the editor of this paper when he refers to the fact in my explanation as to why we require Bill 10. He went on to say:

Mr. Stewart explained that the chicken question was too acute to wait for the federal farm marketing Bill C-176 to become law. In any case, there is no guarantee it will become legislation. The previous marketing bill evaporated when the last session of Parliament ended. Even if passed by this House, this House of Commons, it has to be approved by the Senate. After this, Canada's provinces have to pass complementary legislation and national commission agencies also have to be established. Effective national farm marketing legislation is still a long way off.

This is the concern I have quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that it is all too far away off. Perhaps it would have been better in retrospect—and I do not say this in any critical way of my friend, the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, when he introduced a bill that was all inclusive of all farm products, all commodities in Canada—perhaps it might have been better had there been a commission established for poultry and poultry products, similar to the dairy commission.

We discussed this last winter in the House during our estimates debate and I thought it was a good debate. I conveyed those concerns to the minister but he believed that rather than go through the exercise of debating this thing every time any commodity group wanted to come under national legislation, it would be far better to draft what he described—some have described—as an omnibus bill which would be all-inclusive. I think the secret of all this thing and the opposition that has been launched against it—and I deplore that, even at Ottawa's level as well as throughout our own province by people who say that it is the wrong thing to have, saying that if this bill goes through no commodity will be safe.

Every commodity will be as safe under that legislation as the respective Legislatures throughout Canada want to make it. By that I mean that each Minister of Agriculture is responsible to the Legislatures and through the government, through his respective government, to the Legislatures in the provinces.

Under the proposed legislation there can only be an extension of authority granted by the province to the federal government to establish any type of a national structure within the province. It means that unless, as a government, we grant to the federal government that right, the Province of Ontario stays outside the terms of the national bill.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, how does the minister gauge that? Does he gauge it by way of vote or does he take it upon himself to say the beef producers should have a marketing plan, we will put them into the federal plan?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is a good question, Mr. Chairman. It can be done in a variety of ways. My friend from Huron-Bruce mentions beef. In Ontario, we have made the decision that beef producers will remain outside The Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act.

Members will recall we made a special Act in 1968 which established The Ontario

Beef Cattle Marketing Act outside the terms and provisions of The Farm Products Marketing Act. It allowed them to make a voluntary deduction but in no way provided the opportunity for any type of a marketing plan to be established for beef. I have used that as an illustration of how we in the Province of Ontario view the fact that beef should be excluded from the national legislation.

With regard to other commodities—

I think my hon. friend had said what are we going to do regarding broilers, we will say, which is a current subject of debate. We would simply say that the broiler producers of the Province of Ontario themselves in 1966 voted, by over a two-thirds majority, to establish quota production of broilers in this province—I should say quota marketing of broilers in this province. I think that is more appropriate; that is really the quota involved—quota marketing of broilers in Ontario.

Having established that quota, I think we would be perfectly in order on their behalf, after having discussed it with them and having their request for us to do it, to ask the federal government to extend the powers to the federal government to cut the national broiler market so that Ontario would get its share of national production. That to me would be the way it would work.

Mr. Gaunt: So any group that has a marketing plan now would automatically be enrolled.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, not automatically at all—only those commodities that would request such action.

Now I do not know if we had used eggs for an illustration. As you know we have had two votes on egg quotas in Ontario and both have been defeated. I do not know whether there will be a vote on eggs this summer or not; I understand that the egg board wants to have a vote and I am not sure whether the power has been granted or not.

But it is in the process of discussion now as to whether there will be an egg vote. A plan is being discussed.

If this vote carries with quota production for eggs in Ontario, I would think that it would be reasonable to expect that our egg producers would want that power of quota marketing extended to the federal government so that all provinces might participate in that and we would all share the national egg pie.

This is the thing I think we have to recognize: that our producers must make those decisions themselves. Now obviously the federal government cannot, because they do not have any authority, enter into a vote or to call a vote in the provinces of Canada—they do not have that authority. But I believe it is in sections 7 and 17 of the national Act where it states that if a majority of the producers in Canada wants a plan, the federal minister can bring in such a commodity type of plan. The federal minister's interpretation is that he will depend on the province, the minister and the province, to say whether or not there should be that type of request come from that province. To me that brings it right back to the responsibility of the minister and the marketing boards in the provinces to make those determinations.

My concern was expressed, and it was expressed again in this presentation that I made, that if a province decides to opt out of the national legislation, we do not want that province dumping its surplus or expanded production over into the other provinces that put themselves under the national plan. That to me is a very serious and a very definite matter that we want clearly enunciated.

Mr. Gaunt: It is not clear yet, is it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, maybe it is not. But certainly the interpretation that we have from the federal minister is that where a province decides to opt out, that province will be required to dispose of its production within its own border. I think if we have that kind of an understanding then we can make this plan work, and I do not think we can make it work any other way.

Mr. Chairman, these are very complex matters. They are very difficult matters to resolve, and I can assure you that we are as anxious as anyone to proceed with the legislation that is now before the House of Commons on the commodities that we think should be involved—and I think they involve poultry products; I cannot see them going much further than that at the moment. Perhaps they will some day.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question in regard to this legislation that we hear is going to be passed in Quebec in retaliation to what Ontario had done by passing Bill 10? As I have been informed they are going to pass similar legislation in regard to eggs and onions. Is that correct? Is the minister aware of any legislation that they are going to pass?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would answer this question in this way: The minister in Quebec has no more authority to stop broilers coming into the Province of Ontario without the right to—that is, no one is trying to stop them coming in—but the minister has no authority to tell any producer of broilers in Ontario that he cannot sell those broilers in Ontario without a permit than I have to tell the egg producers of Ontario, or the minister in Manitoba has to tell egg producers in Manitoba, that they cannot ship into the Province of Quebec. We both recognize this. We have discussed this many times together. We recognize this to be a fact.

Now since September 3 nobody challenged that regulation that the broiler board had to require anyone who sold or offered for sale broilers in Ontario to have a marketing permit. We did not say they could not ship them in here; we did not say they could not store them here. We simply said that when they sell those broilers they require a marketing permit the same as our own broiler producers require, because they produce under a regulation, under a marketing quota. So all we are doing is saying anybody else selling broilers in Ontario does the same thing.

Mr. Spence: Could I ask the minister—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Now just a moment. If I may—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! It seems to me that this sort of debate across the floor of the House is not proper at this time. The minister is given the privilege of his opening remarks; the opposition critics are given the opportunity to make their contribution. The minister then may reply if he wishes. But debate of this type should take place under the specific vote, so that we have been somewhat out of order with this type of debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Could I ask you, Mr. Chairman, for your guidance? Though the minister has raised a couple of basic policy issues and I agree with you perhaps that there should not be debate now, is it not possible to move to the first vote and under the main office, where many times in the past we have thrashed out these issues and do it there neatly now in sequence. Because I think you will believe me when I tell you that if we do not get it in now we are going to get it in sometime before the estimates are over. Therefore it might be if we move to vote—main office—and let us see if we cannot resolve this.

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the hon. member for York South I do agree that this sort of debate is going to be gotten into in the deliberations on these estimates at one point or another; there is no doubt about it. They do have a specific department programme for marketing and it seems to that is where this sort of debate should take place. Now vote 101 is the main office vote—

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: If you are going to allocate any discussion of Bill 10 to marketing, I wonder if we will be barred at that point in talking about some of the legal issues involved because I note under main office there is a vote of $81,700 that deals with legal services, and it would seem to me that at that point some of the things I want to say should be quite in order.

Mr. Chairman: I would not rule the hon. member for Downsview out of order at that time on that score because the legal services of The Department of Agriculture and Food per se may be discussed as a legal service of that department. If he wishes to bring out the operation and function of these legal services within the department, I would not rule him out of order.

Mr. Singer: And their relation particularly to the—

Mr. Chairman: Now does the committee agree we should perhaps discontinue this sort of across-the-floor debate and proceed with the minister's comments? Does the minister have any further comments?

Perhaps I might take a moment, before we actually get into the estimates and while the deputies are moving to the table, to point out that we do have a new presentation of the estimates this year, as the hon. members no doubt have noticed.

The Department of Agriculture and Food, of course, is found on page 11, on which page is a complete summary of that department.

The hon. members will find on page 12, that the first vote, vote 101 of that department, sets forth the programme under departmental administration and so on until we complete all of the votes of The Department of Agriculture and Food.

Members will also notice that under each specific vote we have detailed items, and those items are covered in detail on the right-hand page facing the vote number. In other words, vote 101, item 1, the main office, is detailed on page 13. If any of the hon. members want to know, for example, what comes under a main office vote in any department, if they look at page 346 in the index they have a general description.

So it seems to me the presentation is very clear-cut this time, and that we can proceed with the votes in order and take the items as they appear within the vote. If this is agreeable I therefore call vote 101, item 1, main office.

The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, in the main office vote, I presume that we are going to be discussing a number of policy matters that actually do not fall into any of the other categories.

That being so, there are a few comments that I would like to make with respect to the farm tax rebate system and the educational tax, as well as the cost-price squeeze. I presume those would be in order at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member like to detail them again? Which items?

Mr. Gaunt: I am going to be talking about the cost price squeeze and the farm tax rebate and educational costs on farm land, and so on. I cannot find anywhere in the votes where those would fit precisely and since the—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, vote 102.

Mr. Chairman: That is right. The hon. minister says that comes under vote 102, the farm tax rebate.

The hon. member speaks of a price squeeze situation?

Mr. Gaunt: Right, it is basically a policy.

Mr. Chairman: I see, under that heading, therefore, it would be under vote 101, main office.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few brief comments in this respect. The matter has been alluded to by my colleague from Oxford, and the member from Middlesex South also mentioned it. It seems to me that the cost-price squeeze is a continuing problem; I think it will continue for the foreseeable future.

I was very interested to note in the 1970 issue of Canadian Farm Economics, some statistics which were very revealing to say the least.

Using 1935 to 1939 as a base period, when we take 1946 the prices paid by farmers for goods and services—in other words, their input costs—represented 157. The same period, prices received by the farmers, 204.1. Prices received as a percentage of the price paid, 130. If we go down the line we come to 1951: prices paid by farmers 230, prices received by farmers 296.8, and the prices received as a percentage of the prices paid, 129.

We come down to 1960: prices paid by farmers, 276.7; prices received by farmers, 250; prices received as a percentage of prices paid, 90.

And we go on down to 1966 and 1968. Rather than read the indices for the prices paid by farmers and prices received by farmers, I am just going to read the percentage paid as against the percentage received. In 1966 it had dropped to 89, and in 1968 it had dropped to 77.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, what we are talking about here, basically, is that the farmers in this province—and in this country actually; this was a Canadian statistic—the farmers in this country had roughly 25 per cent less disposable income, or real income, if you like than they had in the 1935-1939 base period.

I think that is a very revealing statistic because if we are talking about farm prices as over and above the prices paid by farmers for goods and services, then we are talking about a period immediately after the depression; the recovery was just starting to take place. As a matter of fact, I was only born in 1935 and I do not quite remember it, but I understand that in reading the various analyses and the various records of the history of things that took place at that time, that this was a recovery period and to think that prices in 1968 were 25 per cent below what they were in that period is really startling, I think, to say the least.

Mr. Chairman, it comes around to the point where many of the older farmers—and we have a preponderance of older farmers in the Province of Ontario. There are more farmers over the age of 50, 45 to 50, than there are under that age. Many times I have older farmers coming to me, as I am sure they come to all members in agricultural ridings. They say: "You know, I really do not know what to tell my son to do. I do not think he should farm. I do not think that there is any real future in farming for a young man, and, if my intuition is correct, I am going to tell my son to get the best education he can, get as good a training as he can, and get into some other occupation."

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a sad state of affairs. We cannot live without our farmers in this province and in this country. We can live without moon shots. We can do without those, but we cannot do without our farmers. We simply cannot live without them.

I think the highest priority has to be given to our agricultural problems in this country and in this province—in every province across Canada—because it seems to me that with the obvious shifts in population, where we have the concentration of population in our large urban centres, we tend to programme for those people. I realize they have very important problems. They have very pressing problems; transportation problems, housing problems, all of these things, of course, are important. But ultimately, if we cannot feed those people then all of these other things are for nothing.

It seems to me that we have to re-adjust our priorities in this country and devote a little more attention to the agricultural problems than we have been doing up until now, particularly in recent years. I realize that it is not easy. I often sit down and I wonder just what the answers are and I think if any one person in this country had the answer, he would be a multi-millionaire.

No one has all the answers. Of course they do not, but it seems to be that the farm prices—and I realize that that is not the entire answer but I think it is part of the answer—have to come from the marketplace. Increased farm prices have to come from the marketplace, with all the various connotations that means.

Now, whether we have supply management right across the board—I agree with supply management. I think it is the wise thing to do, particularly when it is practiced so adeptly by other segments of the economy.

Farmers are in the marketplace, they have to compete in the marketplace, and if they are going to compete effectively I think they have to have some type of supply management programme. In my view, I think that part of the answer is to get more money out of the marketplace and out of the marketing system, rather than government subsidies and government efficiency payments and government support. We have seen these things in the past and perhaps there is short-term benefit but in the long haul I think these things have done the industry irreparable damage.

I make those comments and I want the minister to respond. I want him to tell me in his view what he would do if he had a son who was 20 years of age and at the point of making a decision of whether he farms or not; would he in fact tell his son, "No I do not think the future is for you here on the home farm."

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have some comments that are essentially in the same area, put perhaps somewhat different, and so maybe I could throw my two bits into the pot and the minister can reply to both of them at the same time.

I was interested when the minister was deploring the inadequate prices for pork at the present time and then giving a very comprehensive explanation as to why that was the case—it has to do with trade; it has to do with a lot of factors. The point I want to get to is this: is the minister's explanation really relevant? He is evading the main point, and that is: how are you going to assure the farmers of an adequate income?

The minister will agree with me that in any given year any given product is going to face exactly the same conditions that pork products or pork producers are facing today. There is weather, there is the ineffectiveness of supply management, there is trade flow within the country and internationally, and all are brought to bear. So let us not for one moment assume that if perchance you have resolved any given example of this basic farm problem you have gotten anywhere. You have got to solve it in a fundamental way.

If I may go around a little bit I shall come to the point where the hon. member for Huron-Bruce concluded, but my conclusion is a fundamentally different one. The basic problem in agriculture is income and please do not accept my word for it, let us go back to the Challenge of Abundance. The interesting thing is that after all the work that went into this report—and it was not an ivory tower effort; it was chaired by the deputy minister, and I sometimes wonder who is the more influential in shaping policy—the deputy or the minister? We will not explore that for the moment.

There were three practising farmers on it, as well as others who are interested in agriculture and food from the consumer's point of view. After they had made all of this study, as usually happens, a preface was written reflecting the reaction to the whole study. Let me read one paragraph to him, the fourth paragraph in the preface:

Since World War II, confused by wartime policies and misled by the immediate postwar prosperity of agriculture, the farmer placed his reliance on a series of temporary expedients as a substitute for long-term planning and comprehensive programming. The result is an income crisis of major proportions.

The blame cannot be levelled at any one organization or institution. It is a result of the attitude and the philosophy of a majority of people associated with the industry. Unless immediate steps are taken to tackle this crucial issue the entire agricultural industry faces a violent upheaval that will bring little or no benefit to society but would disrupt and destroy the social and economic structure of rural Ontario. The warning signals have been flying for some time.

One does not have to be revolutionary; you do not need to go out and cry havoc; all you have to do is read that. It pinpoints the basic programme. Now, one year after that report came out the minister and I both attended an annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture out at the Skyline Hotel. The outgoing chairman—who was leaving the Ontario Federation of Agriculture to take up his full-time responsibilities with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—referred in passing to the Challenge of Abundance. And listen to his comment, Mr. Chairman:

It is a depressingly true fact that Ontario farmers have seemingly gained almost nothing since the tabling of the report of the special committee on farm income.

This should not be. The industry is standing still instead of moving steadily forward as it should.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that one more year has passed and Charlie Munroe's comments are just as valid today. What are we going to do about it? It is interesting to note that it says, "unless immediate steps are taken to tackle this crucial issue." The minister will counter that this is the farmer's problem, and I am not going to argue with him. To some degree this is the farmer's problem.

Indeed, the farmers have created this problem because of the divisions within their ranks and because of an excessive preoccupation with the mechanism for achieving this—namely the GFO. We all went off on the preoccupation with the GFO and that blew up in our faces; it was an abortive effort. And we are now back where? At scratch! Nothing has happened.

If the farming community, because of the divisions in their ranks or for whatever reason, cannot do anything about it I submit to you that the government is not absolved of some responsibility. The thing that is so depressing, as one thinks about the problems of rural Canada and rural Ontario, is that ever since the end of the war we have gone through an almost endless succession of mechanisms to cope with this fundamental income problem of agriculture. Let us forget about broilers, let us forget about eggs, let us forget about hogs—any one of the products, this is fundamental to all of them. This is basic to the industry.

We talked about floor prices at the federal level. I happened to be at the federal level as a civil servant within the party structure at that time, and I remember watching what happened. Every time there was an agricultural crisis Jimmy Gardiner could not get a business-dominated cabinet to move and acknowledge that something should be done until—it was not a crisis—it was complete calamity, so that any effort taken by that government was only after there was such severe evidence of a crisis that they acted too little and too late.

Next we got to the "deficiency price" stage and we toiled with that. We tried to make it work for a time. Then, in the mid-Sixties, when the crisis provoked the farmers to the point that they came up University Avenue in their tractors like tanks attacking the bastion of Queen's Park and ranged themselves out in the front—another crisis. So, we have a conference, and out of the conference emerges the possibility of united approach, a new idea and a new slogan—"incentive prices." A committee was set up to study incentive prices and somehow the concept got lost in the process. When the report came out there was nothing about incentive prices. The committee evaded the point that it was set up to go after. The government has evaded the point ever since and nothing has happened.

Let me come to the point that my hon. friend from Huron-Bruce mentioned. His comment was that for increased prices farmers will have to go to the marketplace. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, if farmers will have to go to the marketplace to get a fair return in terms of their labour and their capital investment, they will never have it in the future as they have never had it in the past. They have not got the bargaining strength in the marketplace.

Great gods! How stupid has one got to be not to recognize that fact? They have not got the bargaining strength and, furthermore, their bargaining strength is getting less and less. How are they going to cope with the multinational corporation? Sure, they will get a measure of strength through their marketing boards, and, sure, the minister will now give them a marketing board, the strength to seize products at the expense of the owner and things of that nature, but that is peripheral.

The fundamental problem is that they have not got the strength to get what they are entitled to in the marketplace. So if the hon. member from the Liberal Party, in keeping with the basic philosophy of the Liberal Party, says that farmers have got to get it in the marketplace, it simply will not happen. Their philosophy is bankrupt.

Mr. Gaunt: I said that was part of the answer. Do not quote me.

Mr. MacDonald: May I suggest to the hon. member that it is not part of the answer, because we have certainly proved that you can give to farmers strength in marketing boards. They can go so far in terms of getting a fair price and, if they drive the price too far, the product pours over the tariff walls and they have to run for cover. That is what happened in the bean business some two or three years ago.

Mr. Gaunt: All right, what is the alternative—to give them a billion dollars out of the public purse?

Mr. MacDonald: This is where the hon. member has to face up to some facts. We give to the manufacturing industry of this country something like $2 billion out of the pocket of the public through tariffs.

Mr. Gaunt: All right, I am just asking.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, they have got it. Now, I do not want to get into any side arguments with my friend for the moment. All I am saying is that, in my view, experience has proven that pointing to the marketplace as the place where farmers are going to get a fair return is proof of the bankruptcy of the policy that he is asserting. The only way that you are going to get it is to get rid of what is known as cheap food prices, which is a real misnomer and really misleading, because it is not cheap as far as the consumer is concerned.

Unfortunately farmers are now only three or four or five per cent of society and no government—whether Conservative, Liberal, or NDP—is going to be able to survive while permitting a massive increase in food prices. You just cannot survive, whatever may be the intellectual and theoretical validity of it. You are not going to impose that kind of a burden on the 95 per cent, when they think the burden is already intolerable, for the benefit of the other five.

So what do I conclude? I go back to the essential principles of incentive food prices. Let farmers have their marketing boards. Let them get from the marketplaces as much as their strength will permit, or the conditions of the marketplace will permit. But if when that process is over, agriculture is not getting a fair return in accordance with the principles of "The Challenge of Abundance," namely, a fair return on their capital investment, a fair return on their labour, then they are entitled to get it from society as a whole.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: Free enterprisers in the Tory and Liberal Party, may be able to pander the farmers. They may be able to flatter them, and say, "You are the last rugged individualists." But I will tell you what is going to happen, the farmers are just like the small businessmen, who are always praised as being the last champions of free enterprise. They are patted on the back until those who dominate the economy come to the conclusion that the time is ripe to knock them on the head, and out they go!

That is what is happening to farmers. That is what is happening to small business, if the hon. member for Huron-Bruce is correct. It is deplorable that agriculture is sort of fading away. We fritter away our money on shots to the moon, but the people who produce the food, the people who want to live in all of the conditions of rural life are being driven out of it. No farmer in his right mind today—or at least nine out of 10 of them in their right mind today—are not going to say to their sons: "Son, stay on the farm."

An hon. member: Sure!

Mr. MacDonald: The only way the government is going to alter that is by a planned economic development that says to agriculture, "You are entitled to fair returns in accordance with the principles underlying 'Challenge of Abundance' and we shall make damn sure you get it."

If that means subsidies, let us not run in panic from subsidies. This government is handing out subsidies on EIO loans—the whole public is handing out $2 billion in subsidies to manufacturing all the time through tariffs.

The minister is confusing the issue by bolstering the farmers' prejudice against assistance from the government. This is part of the prejudice and this is part of his whole outlook. In fact, I go back to this chapter:

The blame cannot be levelled at any one organization or institution. It has been the result of the attitudes and the philosophy of the majority of people associated with the industry.

The attitude and the philosophy of the government and of the Liberal Party and of all those in the agricultural community who seek to perpetuate the proposition that it is somehow demeaning that agriculture should demand and get what they are entitled to for a fair contribution to the economy of this country. The government is perpetuating the attitudes which created the problem and it will always live on.

I do not know whether one can make any headway in trying to cope with the massive misconceptions on this point in rural Ontario. I know it is easy for the minister to get up on his podium—and, indeed, for the Liberal Party to get up and say essentially the same thing, because the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, for whom I have not only a great respect—I was almost going to say an affection, but that might be misinterpreted—has said exactly the same thing.

Mr. Gaunt: Please, please!

Mr. MacDonald: The farmer must get it in the marketplace, he said. Well, the John R. Stewarts of the agricultural community think that the farmers can get it in the marketplace, but the great majority of farmers, I hope, have reached the point that they cannot. Quit kidding them, quit confusing the issue.

Let me sum it up and go back to a question I want to put to the minister. What is the government going to do about the basic problem of agricultural income across the board? We are interested in getting the minister's explanations as to why the hog situation is deplorable at the moment, but that is irrelevant really. What is the government ready and willing to do to cope with the basic problem in agriculture—for hogs, for anything.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): Supply and demand.

Mr. MacDonald: We have heard nothing about that because the minister did not get it from "Challenge of Abundance." What we got was too sharply focused in the GFO and that blew up. So now have drifted back into a policy vacuum or the basic problem of agriculture. Has the minister any alternative?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the question demands an answer and certainly an answer that cannot be provided easily. There is no question of that at all because he hit the nail right on the head when he said that one of the basic problems in the whole issue is the fact that the farmers themselves refuse to accept any type of regimentation within their own organization. Witness the "Challenge of Abundance" report.

If my hon. friend had gone on, he would have seen the price incentive programme, which was really developed by one of the members of the committee. The reason I appointed him to the committee was because he had developed that programme within the federation of agriculture and I thought this was the place to put him—right on the committee. And he went on to that committee.

Mr. MacDonald: It is essentially the same programme as the farm union had in the late Fifties. That is why there was hope. But the minister does not seem to agree.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They went on with that programme, but my hon. friend did not go any further. If he had read through that report, they recommended that there be one farm organization and that there be a food supply agency established. That I think was the thing, more than perhaps anything else, that created the problem as far as the GFO vote was concerned. It is only a personal expression of opinion, but I think this was one of the reasons why the farm people of Ontario voted down GFO in June of 1969.

Mr. MacDonald: If I can say it unprovocatively, there was nothing more important than their suspicions of how you had manipulated farm organization for years.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, if that suspicion was abroad, it was generated by none other than the then leader of the New Democratic Party in this province. That is where it came from.

Mr. Villeneuve: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: You flatter me if you think I could do this on such a scale across the province.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I can tell you that. Because this man, who is the former leader of the New Democratic Party—

An hon. member: He put on a campaign.

Hon. Mr. Stewart—this hon. member, the member for York South now, has been out abroad preaching dissatisfaction, crisis in Ontario, doing everything he could to destroy the problems of agriculture in this province. This has been his stock in trade.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: He does not have to preach it.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not have to preach it—rather to report. I am asking the minister to recognize it.

Mr. Martel: That is nonsense. He created—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Of course. How can we do anything about it when there is somebody running around the province, as he has been, trying to destroy the very things we are trying to do?

Mr. MacDonald: On one day the minister says I have no influence in rural Ontario. The next time he says I persuaded them all to a certain attitude. How ludicrous can he get?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Certainly the member contributed to it. There is no question of that whatever.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): They are treating the minister mean.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not get too alarmed about that. Let me suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that as far as correcting the incredibly low income that farm people sustain throughout this province and this nation—there is no one knows it better than I. I operate a farm—

Mr. MacDonald: The minister has no answer. He is bankrupt.

Mr. Innes: The most sophisticated.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I operate a farm, but I point out to you that those particular commodity groups within the agricultural community who have, by their own initiative, attempted to gear the supply of their product to what the market will require, are in reasonably comfortable economic condition. And I point to the tobacco growers of this province as the best illustration of any that I can find.

I point as well to the fluid milk producers of this country, for there is a group of people who, by their own initiative, have developed a plan for quota production geared to what the market will absorb. They have the best programme of product promotion there is going in this country today, to increase the use of their product so that they themselves are in a better position and I think we would have to agree that they are in reasonably good condition.

Mr. Martel: They got 10 cents a quart, did they not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There are two commodities that are not in bad shape. The other commodity is beef, which is reasonably good today.

Mr. Chairman: Order please, it being 6 of the clock I do now leave the chair and we will resume at eight. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister. I am sure he has many more remarks.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister has the floor.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned the House at 6 o'clock I was discussing matters pertaining to the pricing of farm products within Canada. My hon. friend from York South (Mr. MacDonald) had suggested, I took from his remarks, that we in the Province of Ontario should be doing something about more satisfactory price levels for farm products, even though they are produced on a national basis.

This, I am sure, is a noble objective but one that is not that easy to obtain nor to reach. He referred to the tractor parades of 1966. Certainly they came about because of a most unsatisfactory price level for industrial milk at that time. The real row that developed at that time among the farmers of Ontario was that they believed we had the right to get into the field of commodity subsidization. I took the position that the Province of Ontario should not become involved in commodity pricing in competition with other provinces because, if members will recall, the Province of Quebec at that time was very much involved in commodity subsidization of industrial milk.

We felt that if we were going to have uniformity of milk pricing across Canada the subsidy—and we agreed that there should be a subsidy—should be paid at the national level so that there would not be the incredible competition that was obviously developing between provinces as regards commodity pricing.

I was not in opposition to the farmers' position for increased prices. There were those who thought that I was. I certainly did not take that position but I did believe that the federal government should assume, through a national dairy commission, the establishment of a uniform price for industrial milk products across Canada, which could not be achieved unless the Province of Quebec withdrew from the field of milk subsidization.

Our discussions went on with the minister of Quebec and the federal minister of the day to the place where we mutually agreed on Ontario getting into the field of subsidization for an interim period, I believe, of something like six months. We then agreed with the Province of Quebec that we would both withdraw from the field of commodity subsidization and the federal government would assume that responsibility on a national basis, and this was achieved.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that is the place where it should be achieved. One could not hope to generate within the province, where a commodity is produced on a national basis, a price that is higher within that province than it is within other provinces unless one realizes it is but an invitation to the other provinces to ship to the province where the higher price establishment has been made. It just follows like night follows day that that is what will happen. Certainly that is what happened as far as our recent commodity problems are concerned. Our broiler producers in Ontario established a reasonable price for broilers based on a marketing quota, but there were other provinces that did not see fit to establish that type of quota restriction and they simply produced and shipped in here under the umbrella of the price structure that had been established within Ontario. This applied certainly in other provinces such as British Columbia where the same thing was taking place.

This is the difficulty that one runs into. I fully support and sympathize with what my hon. friend from York South has suggested, that certainly we recognize the price of many commodities is far from satisfactory. But, as I pointed out before the dinner hour adjournment, those producers that have agreed among themselves to gear their supply to what the market will absorb have been able to accomplish something as far as a better economic position is concerned. I pointed out that tobacco growers and the fluid milk industry, for example—both of these commodity groups have been pretty well able to assist themselves to a much more satisfactory income level.

If we recognize these basic principles and if those commodities which can be produced in abundance virtually overnight, such as poultry and poultry products, come under some type of a national bill where there can be some type of supply management provided, it seems to me that we can accomplish a great deal more in reaching the objective described by my friend, the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), when he says that the marketplace should produce more of a satisfactory price level.

I think that this can be accomplished to a much greater degree when there is bargaining power placed in the hands of the producers themselves, but on a national basis—and that is really what we are talking about. On a provincial basis certainly they have been able to accomplish a very great deal, but because of this movement of products back and forth throughout Canada on an unrestricted basis, as far as supply and price are concerned, then it simply destroys the effectiveness of the commodity marketing plan within the province.

To me it may not be the whole answer, and I am inclined to think that it is not. But I think it is one way of reaching a more desirable level of farm prices than we have had in the past. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if we work toward this objective on a national level I think a good deal can be accomplished. But I must confess that it is a most frustrating and difficult experience to try to reach that objective when we have many farmers, even within in this province, who seek on every occasion to destroy any desire of others to collectively strengthen their bargaining position by working together. This is one of the great frustrations that I have been faced with, and I am afraid it has characterized us as farm people for all too long.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to prolong this debate, but the minister has made some very interesting comments which perhaps, if I had had the opportunity to be more fully in contact with the agricultural community 24 hours a day, I would have been aware of them.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): You mean if you were an agriculturalist of any kind you would know the difference between a chicken and a broiler.

Mr. MacDonald: You have obviously had too much to drink over supper.

Mr. W. Hodgson: No, I did not have too much to drink.

Mr. MacDonald: If you have got nothing more to say than that, I would suggest to the hon. member that he just lapse into silence. We were having a relatively intelligent debate until he dragged it down to that level. What was I going to say—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Well, the member is a national president; he is a big man.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): If the member has nothing worthwhile to say, do not say it.

Mr. MacDonald: The principle that if you have higher prices in any given province the products are going to flow in from other provinces surely is a very obvious one—so obvious that I would have thought that when Tom Robson came up with the idea in the OFA and presented it to the Vineland conference, he would have recognized that was the case. Indeed anybody would have recognized that when they initially offered the proposition of incentive prices.

If it is so obvious now that this would not work, why did you kid the troops for three years?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not kid the troops.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, okay. The minister put his deputy as chairman of a committee that went into three years of study, and therefore the farmers were led to believe that there was some serious consideration of this proposition on the basis of how you would implement the principle of incentive prices.

It is so obvious now that it simply would not work within the provincial framework, it must have been obvious before. Or else you were doing some pretty shallow thinking. I agree, obviously I agree, that one province cannot move on its own, but if the minister is really committed to coming up with a fundamental solution to the problem of farm income, I would have been persuaded that this was still in his mind if I had heard his voice raised rather frequently and vigorously vis-à-vis Ottawa in trying to get Ottawa to do the same thing, to join with provinces to get some sort of basic assurance of adequate farm income through incentive prices or anything else.

But now the minister insists there is another answer to it, and this is what I found to be rather new. The other answer to it is that we get national marketing, and in other words we will make it possible for the farmers to get out of the marketplace through national marketing plans what they have never been able to get out of the marketplace before.

Well, forgive me for being a bit doubtful and saying you are pursuing another will of the wisp. Because there is an awful lot of experience, for reasons that I stated before the supper break, that the farmers simply have not got the strength to get out of the marketplace what they are entitled to in terms of a fair return. It is rather interesting—the Liberals and Tories come together in saying to the farmers, "Get into the marketplace and get what you are entitled to," which simply means—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why do you not grow up? It is the same old malarkey.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Is this part of the Waffle policy?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the Liberals and Tories are saying that food prices are going to be driven even higher, and I suggest to you that the farmers are not going to be able to get what they are entitled to, through extracting it—

An hon. member: That is not true and the member knows it.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: —through higher food prices, because any government, including this government, is not going to tolerate that for very long. So once again you are kidding the farmers. That is the problem: The Liberal and Tory parties have kidded the farmers for years.

Mr. W. Hodgson: You are kidding the farmers.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Both sides now.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it may be a long process to enlighten them, but we will engage in it; we will pursue it—

Mr. T. Reid: By nationalizing the farms.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sargent: He is out of order. He is the one who is out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: I not only have the floor but I am finished. I know I am finished and they do not; that is the problem.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): I want to follow up on this point because I do have some comments concerning the remarks of the hon. member for York South, and in addition I want to pursue one other point with the minister.

The member for York South has seized on a point that I made, and the minister mentioned it as well, when I suggested that there was an income problem on the farm. Of course, there is; everybody knows there is. And I suggested that part of that extra income would have to come from the marketplace, and I reiterate that, it will have to come from the marketplace, and that is precisely what I meant.

Let me elaborate on that. If the egg people across this province and across this country had had supply management operating, they would have been getting 35 to 40 cents a dozen for their eggs now; they are getting 26 cents. If that is not getting more money out of the marketplace, I do not know what is. Of course it is.

The same with the hog man. If there had been a programme of supply management across this country operating in the hog industry, the hog farmers in this province, as well as in other provinces, would have been getting $35, $36, $37 a hundredweight for their hogs instead of $22. That is what I mean by getting more money out of the marketplace.

I recognize that it is only part of the problem and I certainly underline that and I agree with my friend from York South on one thing. I agree that the governments have not done enough in the past to redress the imbalance. They have not done enough in the past and I think they are going to have to accept that proposition that they are going to have to move in partnership with the marketplace, if you like, in order to give the farmers of this country a decent standard of living.

But having said that, I have to remind my hon. friend from York South that whether we like it or not, we operate in a competitive market society. If we are talking about changing that system, then that is an entirely different argument and we have to set that aside.

But, whether we like it or not, those are the rules of the ballgame. We have to operate within those rules and those rules are set down by the system—the competitive market system.

As far as I am concerned, I think this government could have done a lot more and, indeed, should be doing a lot more in pouring money into research to actually encourage farmers to produce more of the products that we import into this province. I really believe this.

I think that, when one takes a look at the import figures, we import more into this province, Ontario—and it is supposed to be an agricultural producing province—than we export.

Mr. Stokes: Tomato paste.

Mr. Gaunt: Tomato paste, lettuce, frozen foods. I think we could produce these things in our province. We should not have to import them. I think if we poured a lot more money into research and into encouraging farm people to go into this type of production, to put more money in the farmers' pockets in this province, then I think we would be doing them a real service. Now there are, of course, some imports that we just cannot produce here in the province. We cannot produce bananas. We cannot produce oranges. We have to import them into the province.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Can you produce lettuce in January?

Mr. Gaunt: Those things we have to accept, but I think there are certain products that we are importing into this country that our farmers here could grow and grow very well. I would like to see The Department of Agriculture pursue that course.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the minister? I attended an agricultural meeting in Guelph in January of this year. There were speakers there who informed us that in Canada we imported last year $39 million more worth of agricultural products than we exported. This is unusual for a country that can produce practically all but citrus fruits.

What is taking place, or does the minister know? It is a very hard question to answer.

Why is that occurring? Are our products of a good enough quality, or what is taking place, or are individuals bringing products into this country to lower our markets here in Canada or Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Spence) asked a question that is extremely difficult to answer off the top of my head, because I do not have the statistics at hand, but if memory serves me correctly, in the figures that he used was included the amount of beef that was brought in here as one of the commodities from Oceania. Now this beef came in—

Mr. Sargent: From where?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: From Australia and New Zealand. Much of it was processed here and shipped on to the United States in great quantities. This, of course, appeared as an import figure for this country. Now, a lot of it appeared as an export figure as well, but by the same token this is where a lot of the import figures come from.

I would also point out to my hon. friend that because of the climate of this country, and the fact that our people have the second highest standard of living in the world today, that our consumers have available, 12 months of the year, the type of fruit and vegetables that we have become accustomed to and take for granted every day. Other than hothouse tomatoes and cucumbers, such as my friend from Essex South the other day, presented us with in this House, all that produce has to be imported. It comes in from the United States, from California, Arizona, and under irrigation from Mexico. Our greenhouse industry finds itself in extreme competition with comparatively cheap labour, because of the climate where one can grow these crops on a successive basis under irrigation, almost on a continual production basis.

I suppose that if we were to deny our consumers the opportunity to enjoy a 12-month diet of that kind of consumer food item, we could cut down greatly on the imports that come into this country. There are certain other commodities that do come in, for example, certain pork cuts that come in here from outside, but by the same token we ship certain pork cuts out of this country. As I said earlier, we have increased our exports in pork last year by 68 per cent. It is extremely difficult to say just how we can increase the growing of some of these products.

My hon. friend from Huron-Bruce mentioned tomato paste. I was greatly interested in that commodity. I felt that here was an opportunity that we could really expand production of a commodity that is obviously being shipped in here as a highly acceptable commodity in this country because it has been used to manufacture so many tomato products.

The truth of the matter was that the farmers themselves determined that they could not grow tomatoes in competition with that kind of a price level. They themselves turned down the idea. It was not turned down by the government. They turned it down themselves as a Tomato Marketing Board. If they make that decision, who are we to say to them: "You are going to grow those tomatoes anyway, whether you want to or not"? I think we have to be reasonable about these kind of things.

I suggest to you that one of the major efforts of our food council is to place emphasis on trying to grow as much as possible of the commodities that we use in Ontario, and in Canada, in our own province. I must say that consumer tastes and preferences, and our standard of living, just seem to keep going ahead of us that much more, and so it is not as easy to catch up as we might like to think.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if I might just take a moment before we proceed. We have some special guests with us this evening. In Mr. Speaker's gallery there is a group of 35 boys from Trinity College School in Port Hope. I am sure we would want to extend a special welcome to them.

The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, along the same line that my colleague from Huron-Bruce has been discussing with the minister, and to some extent touched on by the member for Youth South, as an urban consumer I have watched with very substantial interest the recent price war between our supermarkets. While the urban consumer certainly has benefited—he has been able to get his supplies at a cheaper price—the spreading effect, the wave effect of this price war seems to me to be something that the minister should be concerning himself about at very great length and in substantial depth.

Let us start on the supermarket level. As I read in the financial pages of the papers the quarterly returns or the annual returns of these various supermarket chains, it seems reasonably apparent, to me at least, that their profits have not gone up. They have gone down. As I have watched the changes in top management in those things, it seems that quite ruthlessly, the people who arrange for changes in top management have been chopping off officials who seem to have had substantial experience, probably in direct relationship to the profit ratio in their balance sheet.

Then, as I talked to people who have been with these chains, or have left the chains, and the entrepreneurs—sort of the middleman who gets in—it is admitted quite freely in private conversation that as these price wars started, and as they waxed enthusiastically, the muscle was applied to the producers, to the farmers, and that the farmer was told in no uncertain terms, "We, X Supermarket Chain Limited, are in the price war and this is all we are going to pay you, Mr. Farmer, for your goods."

The farmer produces them and there they are; he has got them in supply and he is in trouble. It is often the case. I cannot give you chapter and verse of the specific commodities, but often he has to sell at a lower price than it is costing him to produce because there it is, he has got it and there is nobody to protect him.

What has bothered me very much, Mr. Chairman, is that this minister, who now calls himself the Minister of Agriculture and Food, has not made his voice heard in connection with this kind of a price war, which seems to have had very limited benefit for anyone in our society. I share the opinion of my colleague from Huron-Bruce that somewhere along the line, if the urban consumer is going to purchase in the marketplace, he has got to pay a reasonable price so that the producer is going to get a reasonable return for his investment and for his time and his effort.

As far as I have been able to watch in this price war that has taken place here in Metropolitan Toronto, no one except, very narrowly, the urban consumer, seems to have benefited. The deleterious effect all the way down the line from top management through the shareholders, through the entrepreneurs, and particularly the producers, has been just a tragedy. I have watched very carefully, and lord knows I am no authority on farm economy, but I have watched very carefully for the words to come from the Minister of Agriculture and Food saying, "I am concerned. I am the responsible minister in government and I am concerned about what is happening to our producers in the rural areas and I am going to do something about it.”

As carefully as I have watched and as carefully as I have listened, there has been no word. I ask the minister in all sincerity—and I am not trying to bait him yet; that will come on the next vote—I ask him in all sincerity what is his view in relation to this sort of thing, this unusual product of our present economy that is doing no one any good, least of all the farmers and their ability to produce and their ability to make an honest living?

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, on this same point that was raised by the member for Huron-Bruce, there are a couple of factors I might point out to the minister and this House in relation to this particular matter.

I am sure he is aware that I have a resolution on the order paper dealing with this very topic about the province moving into this technology to improve our agricultural situation.

There are possibly two points I would like to make in this regard.

At the present time I am drafting a letter that I hope will get to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) within the next couple of days. This deals with the onion business in our provinces and this has been an agricultural product that certainly has had its ups and downs, and trials and tribulations.

I know one of the people in my area has made approaches to officials of your department and, I believe, to The Department of Trade and Development as he has procured verbal contracts in England for the distribution or the shipping of dehydrated onions and onion salt. If he can get into this business it will mean the removal from the Ontario or Canadian market of approximately 500 acres of onions to go into this one particular product. Of course, the shipping is going to be much cheaper and the dollar return is going to be much better.

Here is one instance where, if we get the co-operation of your department—and I am sure we will—and that of the Minister of Trade and Development, we can help bolster the onion business in our particular province.

I have been dealing with a food processor who was attempting to get into the fast frozen food business. I believe most of the cauliflower, broccoli, brussels sprouts and other commodities of this type are being imported into our province and sold 12 months of the year at our frozen food counters. I think they are receiving a very good acceptance by the housewife if they are competitively priced. I would think if we in Ontario could grow these particular products—take acreage that may be in products that are in superfluous amounts—it would enhance our fresh markets during our growing season, and at the same time provide a source of supply in Canada of produce grown in Canada and thus reduce the imports.

I do happen to have some of the statistics with me. Our acreage, I believe, in fresh beans has dropped from 728 acres back in 1960 down to 470 acres in 1966. Beets—I believe we grew 1,120 acres, which is about half the Canadian production—have dropped down to 820 acres. We are losing acreage in these valuable market garden products.

Also related to this matter, of course, is the outlook of the Ontario Development Corporation. I do not want to go too far into this. I have a letter before me in relation to the EIO loan that was granted to the Campbell Soup Company where they entered into what they called the “first phase of production.”

A performance loan was granted to this company to develop a mushroom-growing operation in eastern Ontario. This is great. But the loan was made on the basis that this particular company was importing approximately $500,000 worth of mushrooms from the United States and it was estimated that in due course this would go up to $1 million. The establishment of this plant to grow them in Canada was intended to eliminate these imports.

How did the Ontario Development Corporation arrange this loan, where they have refused others in the food business? They state that this was the first step in an integrated food processing operation.

This is the reason, Mr. Chairman, that I have put this resolution on paper. To see if we can encourage the government—not only The Department of Agriculture, but The Ontario Department of Trade and Development—to try to give an assist; to encourage the development of new processing techniques and get the specialized agricultural products grown in greater quantities, and hopefully at better prices, and under contracts whereby the individual farmers can be assured of dollar income.

I do hope that we get a chance to debate this particular principle in the weeks to come and at that time I will certainly express myself more fully on this point.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this department has to do with the operation of the supply of food in this province. In my area we have the 51st and 53rd lowest on the income wage scale in the Province of Ontario. We have real farm poverty. We have farmers having incomes as low as $1,700 per year, so we have a disaster area in the area of agriculture.

I am not too knowledgeable about the mechanics and the operations of farm marketing boards and all the intricate things the minister is so knowledgeable about, but I am concerned about the fact that we have an alarming disappearance of the family farm. There must be some solution for the problems of agriculture in that, for instance, every day in the paper we see eight or nine auction sales of farm properties for sale in my area in the daily Sun-Times.

It is a matter of great concern in that these people are suffering hardships. With all the technology and all the advice the hon. minister has to offer, there must be some way to do something for this industry. I know a bit about the operation of the food industry. My colleague from Downsview was talking about the food price wars. They are a matter of concern to everyone in this province.

When Dominion Stores opened the price war, the hon. minister should have been on that firing line from the start. I do not know whether or not the minister will agree with what I have to say, but, for instance, they said, "We will not knowingly be undersold by anyone."

So a group in Winnipeg—five supermarket chains—got together and they said, "We will fix Dominion Stores." They each took 20 loss leaders and they published 100 loss leaders in the Winnipeg market and defied Dominion Stores to match these prices and Dominion Stores took a hell of a shellacking in trying to match these prices.

Somewhere along the line, these people in the food industry, they are—The most important thing in our lives is the supply of food. I am trying to say in a round-about way that the minister, representing the people of Ontario in this area, should be on top of this. First of all, how far has vertical integration gone? How much control of our lives have these big food chains in integration of the different commodity groups? I do not know the story on that, but the minister should be on top of it. How far have they integrated? Is it too late to block them some way?

It would seem to me that in every area the unions can get together and in the marketplace they can get a fair price for what they can sell. They sell their hands, their labour. They get a fair price, because they can collectively get together and go on strike.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Just a minimum.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, but I would like to have the minister tell me or tell the House how far would he go in helping agriculture go on strike against the people of this province, against the food chains of this province?

Mr. Pilkey: Just enough—

Mr. Sargent: I think the farmers have the most powerful tool in the world. They say a man will—I forget the progression here—but in the first day he is hungry, he will steal; the second day he will be violent, and the third day when he is hungry he will kill for food. The farmers have the most powerful weapon in the whole world in their hands to solve their problem. If the farmer goes on strike, all hell is going to break loose. They are going to get their just price on the marketplace, as the hon. member for Huron-Bruce says, if they have the co-ordination of government to help them get their just rights.

I think it behooves the minister—I say this respectfully—that if he is going to do a complete job in there, he should know how far they have integrated, how much power these big chains have in controlling the food supply, ruining the agricultural industry. Then you must ask yourself if you would help them go on strike. Could the farmers of this province say, "We will not take our supplies to the marketplace. We will hold everything off the market and see how long this is allowed to continue"? You would be in a hell of a mess representing the people of this province if you did not try to break that strike.

Somewhere along the line there must be something. We are putting a man on the moon—with all the technology we have, all the brainpower you have here, there must be some way. I know there are no pat answers for this, but there must be some way that you would say, "Okay, we will go to work and try to solve this thing because we have the power to break this monopoly control these food chains have on the food of our people." I would like to have your thoughts on this.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sargent: Can you please tell me if there is any sense in what I am saying?

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister have any comments? The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks in regard to this vote.

Many members and the public at large are perhaps not aware that in northwestern Ontario we have a sizable farming community. Generally, I would imagine the populace, particularly in southern Ontario, looks upon northwestern and northern Ontario as an area more of bush and trees and lakes and forests rather than one of agricultural areas.

Mr. Yakabuski: We are aware.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would like to point out to my friend who is holding down the back row over there that we have a sizable farming community in the Rainy River district. It is one of the very good areas in the province for growing hay particularly. The minister himself, I believe, was at the opening of the new cattle auction ring at Stratton last fall in which a fair number of buyers from the west and from southern Ontario come up to Stratton in the Rainy River district to purchase cattle and feeders for their feedlots down in this area of the country. It is a large cattle auction, as the hon. minister is aware, and it draws a good crowd.

But my friend who just spoke mentioned the fact that the farm income in his area was some $1,700 per head. In the Rainy River district among many of my farmers, the average income is much lower than that. I wonder if I might put a question to the minister; perhaps it might come up under a later vote. I wonder if, in concluding these remarks, I might ask him if there is any particular thrust within his department to do something about farm income in the northern regions of the province? If he has any programme to rationalize the farming in the northern parts, any programme which might lead to an increase in the average income for the farmer.

Before the minister rises to answer that question, I would like to extend an invitation to him once again to take part in the cattle auction at Stratton in the Rainy River district, and to all hon. members, next fall.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are two or three things I would like to say in reply to the various statements that have been made.

First of all, the member for Downsview raised the matter of the supermarket war. I can only suggest that there are not very many business enterprises that will continue to flourish when their profit statements, as indicated in the press, appear to be losing money as fast as they were. I think they will soon change their tactics.

With regard to the reported lack of action, which he noted, as far as I am concerned I am afraid he was not watching television because I was on at least three television shows and was quoted in several newspapers as being very much and very vitally concerned with the possible reaction that the supermarket war could have on primary producers. I do not know of any particular reaction that it has had as yet, and I doubt very much if it will now.

At the time there were certainly pressures put on processors. There were pressures being put on food brokers of one kind or another, to meet certain commitments of advertising and shelf-space and what have you in supermarket stores. We were concerned that that would in turn be passed on to the primary producers. I do not think it happened, but I do want to say that even at the time that the chain store war was going on, as I have mentioned earlier today, the supermarkets were all featuring pork in tremendous quantity.

They succeeded in moving enormous quantities of fresh pork which I think really saved the situation last fall. You will notice that the price did not drop much below, what, $28, $29 level. It was even around the $30 level until the fowl hit the market before Christmas. Then the prices started to slip when the chain stores stopped featuring pork in supermarkets and featured fowl instead.

This is a fact of life. It is there for all to see. My hon. friend from Downsview refers to the fact that we did not take as much action as we should have. Perhaps he did not see, but certainly we were in there pitching, and I wonder just what really is the counterpart—

Mr. Sargent: May I ask a question of the minister?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will come to the member's in a moment.

Mr. Sargent: I mean, how was the minister in there pitching? What was he doing?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If the member had been here instead of out there, he would have heard me say that I appeared on three television shows and was quoted in several newspapers across this province, as giving interviews with the press and with others concerning the possible effect that the supermarket price war would have eventually on the primary producers.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister call that in there pitching?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think so, yes, I do.

Mr. Sargent: Come on!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will tell the member it is a lot more than his friend Mr. Basford at Ottawa said he would do, and he said he would take no action at all. When his friend Mr. Basford at Ottawa determines—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend made statements about what I did not do, now I am going to tell him what I did.

A few years ago when we were talking about high beef prices, what did his friend Mr. Weinstein do—who is likely to be one of his party's candidates—the chairman for the federal Prime Minister's dinner downtown here a while ago? What did he and the federal minister, Mr. Basford, do when they talked about high beef prices? They said: "Go on strike; tell the consumers of Canada and Ontario to go on strike against high beef prices"—that is what the member's federal counterparts did.

The first time in the history of this country, since 1951, that the beef producers of this country ever got anything like a decent price, and Mr. Basford said at Ottawa, "Go on strike against beef prices."

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, it is what we are talking about. Now then, the member talks to me about what I did as far as the supermarket war is concerned. I said that I took the position that, unless the supermarket war could get levelled out, there would be an adverse effect on processors, which there then was appearing to be, and that the adverse effect would likely be passed on down the line to primary producers. In my opinion, this would be a very serious thing to have happen, because there are some commodity groups which can bargain in strength—bean producers for one group. They have got an agency plan; they control all the produce that is grown in Canada—virtually right there, in their own hands.

The Ontario Milk Marketing Board controls the price of whole milk; the chain stores could not cut it. They were just simply told, "That is the price that you are going to pay," and there it is. This is where you have organized people who can control their destiny within the marketplace. And, as my friend from Huron-Bruce says, they can get all they can out of the marketplace, and I think this is true. But there are other groups that are not so well organized—

Mr. Sargent: That is good. Why did he not tell us that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, of course, I told my hon. friend, but he does not want to believe it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, of course, I will.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South: The irresponsible attitude of the federal government has caused more problems than—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): On a question of privilege, I had hoped that someone from the Liberal Party would have spoken on this matter that was just raised by the minister in connection with Leon Weinstein, but since they have not, I will. I have had the pleasure of knowing and working with this man for many years. Everything that he did in the beef prices and everything else that had to do with food was an effort to bring food at lower cost to the consumers of this city. The consumers are important as well as the producers, and I think it comes very ill from the minister to criticize him for taking that action.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I make no apologies, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for High Park or anybody else for defending the farmers' position—let that be clearly known. And if the hon. member for High Park represents the thinking of the New Democratic Party when he criticizes me for suggesting that prices—that I am criticizing Leon Weinstein for advising consumers to go on strike—then he has another think coming, believe me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that—

Mr. Sargent: What did the minister do?

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend from Grey-Bruce, Mr. Chairman, has referred to vertical integration. There is a certain amount of vertical integration going on in the growing of a few cash crops, such as green beans, peas, some corn—

Mr. Sargent: Do they control the market?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They control some of it—not the chain stores, but the processing companies. They have a certain amount of it. I have the figures all here in the file somewhere. I can tell the member almost exactly to the acreage and the percentage what is controlled through vertical integration, but it is virtually nil as far as cattle are concerned. It is nil as far as the dairy industry is concerned, or virtually so.

Mr. Sargent: Cash crops?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Cash crops—a few. As I mentioned, green beans, canning corn, green peas—those are the three most common to vertical integration. These crops lend themselves to mechanical harvesting and that is the reason there have been some inroads made by the processing companies in vertical integration.

But let me suggest to my hon. friend that while I abhor vertical integration and the inroads that it can make, by the same token I must confess that those people who rent the land to the processing companies have told me that they have never made as much clear money in their lives as they are now making out of farming by renting the land. They have never made as much clear money out of farming in their lives as they are now by renting the land to those processing companies. Now there it is. So there they are.

There is no vertical integration that I know of in the beef industry. There may be in some others and I would think that—yes, here it is, four crops—sweet corn, green peas, green and wax beans and potatoes at varying degrees of vertical integration. It is estimated that six to seven per cent of the potatoes, 42.6 per cent of the sweet corn, 32.9 per cent of the green peas and 73.5 per cent of green and wax beans—these are the canning beans—were produced by vertically-integrated firms in Ontario. Those are the figures that our department's branch of economics and statistics have compiled.

Mr. Sargent: They are past the point of no return.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are integrated to that degree, but let me point out to my friend that I do not know how he says that there shall be no more integration. Because that means that those farmers—and many of them are widows, and many of them are farmers who have physical ailments—who are not able to operate their farms, but who have been able to rent their farms to the companies to grow these crops. Are we to say to them that they cannot gain that kind of a livelihood? There are two sides to the coin and I think we have to recognize both sides.

My hon. friend is quite right as far as the chain-store influence is concerned. There is no greater influence in the food market today than the chain stores. Certainly I am telling no one any news in that statement. Everybody knows this to be a fact of life. But to say that we are going to be able to do something to control the power of the chain store is, I would think, completely opposite and negative of what my hon. friend, who is a complete free enterpriser, believes in doing.

I just do not know how one does those kinds of things. Is it not wise then, to put bargaining power in the hands of organized people, who can say, "This is the price you are going to pay for milk, because this is what our milk board has been able to do"? Sure it is the processors who are selling the milk to the chain stores, but we know that the farmer is getting a basic price for milk. The same thing applies, as I mentioned, to beans.

My hon. friend from Essex South mentioned onions. Well, we have had an onion board in and out at least two or three times that I know of. Right now we are in the "out" stage; there is no onion board. Now, if there were, perhaps there could be a more uniform price.

So these are the things that I think farmers have to decide for themselves. The hon. member mentioned a strike. Well, if the farmers decide to go on strike, I suppose they have as much right to do that as any other segment of our society. I do not think there is anything to be said against that. If they feel that that is the way to do it, then that is the way to do it.

I would point out that it is very difficult to get the number of farmers across Canada to do the job that the hon. member suggests should be done. One group goes on strike and another group does not. It seems to me that the effect of that kind of strike would be diluted to a very great degree. This is only a personal opinion. Perhaps a strike has a great deal more merit than I am inclined to believe it might have in the long run.

Now with regard to Rainy River—my hon. friend from Rainy River said there is a very great deal done in Rainy River. We will come to that in the votes on northern affairs as time goes on. I know of no district in northern Ontario that has received greater assistance from this government and nobody has put it to better use than have the farm people of Rainy River. That cattleman's co-operative up there has done a fantastic job. There is a delightful story to be told about how this government over the years has aided a group of people who wanted to help themselves and they have accomplished that objective.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Great people up there.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are indeed, and they know and appreciate how a good government works for them.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, following up my question to the minister, it would seem to me that the minister's performance in the food price war was badly lacking, I would say.

He said he was in there pitching; he made two or three television appearances. It would seem to me that if he is going to do a meaningful job under the food head, which he is supposed to be doing, he should have been doing a bit more than a television show. In fact, it would seem to me that he should take the power that he has as minister of this large department to get tough with these people, because they do control the lives of a lot of other people.

The minister says he doubts very much whether their strike power would have any effect, because it would be watered down by various segments of the province.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In Canada, not the province.

Mr. Sargent: I suggest to the minister we are talking Ontario now.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Is the member at a loss for words?

Mr. Sargent: The minister says, "Oh." That is a very meaningful "oh," but if we had a farm vote here and we had almost 80 or 90 per cent participation across this province, the farmers—the minister knows how, if he backed that thing up—

An hon. member: You belong to the old school.

Mr. Sargent:—and his whole department was behind it and he made it a meaningful thing. The participation was very desirable—

An hon. member: The old excuse.

Mr. Sargent:—and if you would show the same amount of concern about this industry that is dying and if you are going to be the head in this province, I think you would do something more than appear on a television show and give them your words of wisdom when you should be doing something important.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): He does something important. What are you talking about?

An hon. member: He is a professional pallbearer.

Mr. Sargent: Insofar as protecting the—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Send the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) after him—he understands.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, there is no segment in all our economy that has as much plant value assets tied up as the agricultural industry and it is going down the pipe, and you are sitting there grinning and saying you pitched in and made two television appearances.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: When millions of dollars were being spent in advertising the price war, you were doing nothing.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Grow up.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Go back—

Mr. Sargent: I think the minister has a lot of nerve in having the food section tacked on to his department, because he is doing nothing in food other than drawing the minister's salary.

On Vote 101 item 1.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr Chairman, just a bit more explanation from the minister. I think the minister has been very frank and very explanatory today in his efforts to prove to the House that he has the interest of the farmers of the province at heart, and I have heard him say that for many years now.

I am interested in his apparent disdain for the discount stores and the remarks that caused my colleague to rise on a point of personal privilege. He has also said that the farmers, in leasing or selling lands to the processors, are making better money than they can make in any other manner. Will he not agree, and will he elaborate as much on his feelings, as to the part the processors and the packers are playing in this whole price structure, from the producer to the consumer?

We have to believe some of the facts we read about in financial institutions. The grocery stores, the large stores, had been operating before the discount programme at from three to one per cent markup. We must know that the processors and the packers have a much higher markup between the producer and themselves, and of course if the farmer can make more money in leasing, renting or selling land to the processors for their integration and operations, they must be passing it on to somebody—and the only person they can pass it on to is the producer, the farmer.

Will the minister give us his opinion as to the processors' part in this whole price structure—not just the discount stores that have reacted to the public consumers' concern about high food prices and the problem of the farmers in keeping a fair level of income through their produce?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to answer that question because I am not privy to the financial statements of the processing companies. All I can do is say that the percentage of profit on volume—that is, on the turnover—in the processing industry, particularly the meat packing industry, is the lowest of any industry in Canada today. But I believe the high volume of turnover is where they make it; on volume, and in using every item in the process. Virtually nothing goes to waste. So therein is why many believe they have been able to stay in business.

There is no question that they are under very severe pressure from the chain stores—no doubt of that whatever. For instance, in the private poultry processing industry there are 18 independents in the Province of Ontario alone, to say nothing of those larger processing plants that are integrated with feed companies and other outlets. But when you consider that, I think, there is something like some 40 pork-processing plants in Ontario—or at least there were—you get some idea of the very competitive field in which these companies operate.

They are bidding against one another on the hog market, not knowing which one is buying what hogs or whose hogs they are buying. It is a very, very competitive business. They then get the product into the plant; they have it processed; and then they have to sell it to five, six, seven at the outside; very large outlets. Herein is the place where the pressure is applied. There is no question about that in my mind.

It would seem to me that this puts the processor in a position that, I think, is in some regards—and I have heard many farmers say the same thing—an even more invidious position than the farmer himself and Heaven only knows he is in a bad enough position. But the processors cannot join up to try to establish a strong uniform price to the outlets because of The Combines Act in this country. He is in the position that he has to meet competition within the industry itself and believe you me that is one of the most competitive businesses there is that I know of today in Canada.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting point. We have now gone the full cycle in trying to arrive at a solution to the farmers' problem of low income. Are they suffering from low income or are they not? If we ascertain that fact, we have gone the full cycle. They have not enough income. The stores which are selling to the consumer have lost money through their discount programmes. They had a very small markup prior to that. The processor is facing problems. What is the solution to the farmers' income? Do we have then to raise it to the consumer? Is that the final outcome? To say that we are going to—

Mr. B. Newman: The member for Hamilton East wants it both ways, does he not?

Mr. Gisborn:—provide the farmers with a decent income in this province? Or is it the undeniable programme of vertical integration and a business farming community in this province, as well as across the country? Is that the only solution? If it is, then the minister should be forthright and honest about it and let us start to head in that direction because we cannot keep fooling ourselves and the public about who is responsible.

Mr. B. Newman: But the member wants to go both ways in his party, that is his problem.

Mr. Gisborn: The minister cannot answer the problems that are facing his own department.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! The member for Essex South.

Mr. B. Newman: The member wants to go both ways in his party. They want it both ways.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): And the member's leader has to ask daddy.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, on this particular topic, I wonder—in the terms of reference when the Minister of Agriculture became the Minister of Agriculture and Food—if within that realm he has the power to investigate the nature of the operation of the supermarkets or the food industry in toto? I do not mean to inquire into the private books of any one company, but it seems to me that the farmer is getting squeezed. We want to protect the—

Mr. Sargent: That is a good question.

Mr. Paterson: —consumer in the province as much as possible with reasonable food prices, but there is too much going on in between. Certainly, the profit picture of these companies is almost nil. It is 1.5 per cent.

I wonder if it is not somehow related to the distribution system itself, between the transportation of these commodities to the marketplace, or the way it is transported, and the collective agreements with those people involved in the transportation. Certainly, in the collective agreements among the workers in the supermarkets—I think they are the only ones in the whole food industry who are really making a buck, the people working in the supermarkets—they have got it made, according to the collective contracts that I have seen. They have very good incomes.

It has been told to me, and I have had it proved, that the lowest food prices in the Dominion of Canada can be found in the Kitchener area where there is one of the most successful open-air farm markets.

If this is the case, it could probably be holding true in other areas such as Niagara and my own, where there are a lot of farm stands where people can go out and buy directly from the producer and bypass the middle men. I do not want to go back to the old-fashioned way of merchandising, but there must be something in the method of merchandising in these giant supermarkets with all the frills, the chrome, steel and so forth, as well as their interest in merchandising products other than food items, that is adding so tremendously to the cost of food. The housewife is being forced to pay, and at the same time our primary producers and canners are suffering.

I just wonder if the minister has any authority at all to investigate this realm to see whether merchandising methods in these giant chains are being misdirected at tremendous cost to all of us?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We do not have any power in that regard.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 101, item 1. The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): A couple of questions of the minister. If I am off the proper vote, I am sure you will correct me, Mr. Chairman.

My colleague from Kent (Mr. Spence) quite some time ago brought up the problem of the fishermen, and the prices they have to contend with. They were selling the fish to the stores for something like three cents a pound—and the stores in turn filleted the fish and sold them for $1.35. Now there was quite an issue made of that at the time. Does that come under your department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, because I believe there is a federal marketing board.

Mr. Bukator: I realize that, but my colleague brought it up in the House and immediately the matter was looked into by the minister of that day, the Minister of Lands and Forests, and something was done about it. I was wondering whether there was some control that came from your department?

Let me ask another question. When the department stores were trying to outdo each other in cutting prices, many of the small stores in the province were badly hurt because the people who did the business in the community store, the little family store, shopped elsewhere. The private individual was very badly hit at that time; some of them were on the verge of going out of business.

Does your department have any record of how many small stores were hurt to the point where they went out of business, or do you have any records of that at all? I might repeat what I was saying about the small stores that were affected during the price war of the big chains. Does your department have any figures on the stores that were put out of business because of the action of the big department stores, or do you not have anything on that issue either?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Chairman, I have not heard of one that was put out of business specifically because of that. There certainly have been stores that have sold out for a variety of reasons. I have not heard of any bankruptcies. That is not to say they did not take place, but I did not hear of any.

Mr. Bukator: There is another question I want to ask before we get on to other items. Quite some time ago in this House I made quite an issue of the big stores, the canning factories, that packaged dog food and cat food and the minister was quite sympathetic to my argument of that day—that was three or four years ago. I made the argument in this House that if they are going to sell canned foods for animal consumption, why would they not put the ingredients and the amount of meat or whatever is in that can on the label so that people know what they are buying. Has anything been done in that area or is it still the same as it was?

I understand in many cases they contain a lot of cereals. Lord knows what goes into these canned foods, and yet they get a good price for them. It is my opinion that whatever they sell should be not only put in that can but, whatever the ingredient is, it should be spelled out on the label so the people know what they are paying a good price for because that is not a cheap commodity. Did you do anything in that department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think that this is done already. I am almost certain it is.

Mr. Bukator: The minister thinks, he is almost certain. Is it a fact?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not sure. As I say, I do not know if it is a fact or not. I do remember the hon. member making it a point. While it does not come under our department at all—it is federal; it comes under The Department of Consumer Affairs of the federal government—as far as I know it is already on them.

Vote 101, item 1, agreed to.

On vote 101, item 2, information services.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): I would like to ask the minister, in respect to information services: The minister mentioned previously—

Mr. Chairman: On information services?

Mr. Innes: I beg your pardon? That is right, information services. The minister mentioned that he was quite certain, by reason of the high buildup of grain in western Canada, that the hog industry would be in real difficulty before too long.

My question to him is what prospectus, so to speak, was passed on to the farmers of Ontario in respect to this knowledge? He, of course, knew but apparently it did not get through to him because there was a continual buildup of sow population. We have the greatest number of hogs being marketed at the present time in the history of Ontario at almost sacrificial prices.

I just wonder—with the individual areas throughout the province, the agricultural representatives and the area supervisors, so to speak—is this information funnelled out to the hog producers and in what regard?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, it certainly is, Mr. Chairman. There is wide publicity given to those positions that we have taken. I am sure that my hon. friend would recognize with his long experience in the agricultural community, that a series of high-priced hog years inevitably leads to a cycle of lower prices. It has always been that way and I assume it will ever be thus until some time, somewhere the farmers decide that there will be some type of active supply management geared to what the market will absorb.

I do not think there is any way that you can tell people not to do things. You can say that these are the things that are likely to happen, but you cannot tell them they cannot go ahead and breed more sows when little pigs—I had a letter the other day from a farmer who said he was selling little pigs at $28 and $30 apiece. He thought the well would never run dry. But it did and he is selling them today at $7 or $8 apiece. He is very bitter and I do not blame him. I would be bitter, too.

But whose fault is it really? Perhaps it is not his fault, but a combination of circumstances that has always been associated with the hog-feed ratio; and it runs in cycles. I do not think that there is anything very much that can be done about it short of supply management.

Our extension branch farm management specialists try to advise farmers through our agricultural representative service as much as we can on what the future of the market holds. There is an outlook conference every year held in Ottawa and we are holding similar conferences, throughout the Province of Ontario. Special days are held in each year indicating the outlook for the year and what the prospects are. Farmers base their decisions themselves on the knowledge that is available to them. All we can do is try to provide it to them and sometimes we are accused of providing too much information.

Mr. Innes: I thank the minister. Could he tell me at the moment if there are any segments of the industry that the information branch could look favourably at and tell the farmers that here is an area whereby they have an opportunity to raise their income—where it does look a little bit better than the hog situation?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, it is being done all the time.

Mr. Innes: Which ones are they?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot tell you exactly which ones they are. We talked about the cow-calf operation today. That holds a lot of promise. Today you cannot go out and say, "Produce more milk," because it is all under quota; you cannot go out and say, "Produce more tobacco," because that is all under quota; you cannot go out and say, "Produce more broilers," because that is all under quota. If you go out and talk about egg prices today at the depressed prices they are in, what can you talk about?

Mr. Innes: Are there any new products?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not that I know of.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, under this same vote, we see poultry houses and piggeries being built right at the present time across this province or in different parts of this province. Is the minister aware, or is he familiar with, or are his officials contacted when these poultry houses and piggeries and farrowing barns are built or have his extension officers anything to do with the building of them?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We provide advice in structural engineering wherever we are asked to do so.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I am concerned about this particular vote—101—they are asking for a quarter of a million dollars more this year—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We are on vote 101, item 2—information.

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 101, item 2—information services.

Mr. Sargent: The thing is, the total votes are up a quarter of a million dollars this year. We have a declining farm population. Is there ever any point at which you have a saturation in your department? Do you never get less or is it always growing? I am talking seriously of the fact that we have a declining farm population—we probably have half the farmers we had 20 years ago—yet you are continually asking for more money to run this department.

The minister has all these different marketing groups that are doing all his jobs for him now, but he is continually coming back, whacking us for more money. For instance, we have here—you are taking this item number 2 of vote 101, information services?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, on information services in the estimates.

Mr. Singer: It is a quarter of a million over 1969-1970 actual.

Mr. Sargent: What kind of information is going to cost us a quarter of a million dollars more this year? What is the department going to do that is going to need that much more money?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think my hon. friend is referring to the 1970-1971 estimates on information services; $904,000. Right? And the 1970-1971 estimates; $1,001,000. Right? Which is a difference of about $97,000 or something like that.

We are expanding the information services of our department to provide market service to the farm community through the phone-in service that we have been preparing and which we have just embarked on now. You can dial in—or at least the radio stations can dial in—which will activate a record and it will play back to you the market price on the various markets. It may be if you want beef, you dial in at a certain time for that; if you want commodity prices, that is fruit and vegetables, potatoes, apples, this kind of thing, you dial at another time. The same thing is true on hog prices and this kind of thing.

Mr. Sargent: For the consumer?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, for the producer. This is available to the producer and this service is provided for the various radio stations throughout the Province of Ontario. It is a hookup with them.

Mr. Sargent: What does that cost?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What does it cost us?

The member asked what the difference was, the $110,000. The salary award and merit increases were $69,000 over last year. The salary provisions for staff transfers, about $19,000. The employee benefits, $6,300. The work load increase is $15,900. So all told the information services in this market information service, this dialing service, would be about $35,000 in total.

Mr. Sargent: But it is amazing that the minister spends $1 million in this department for propaganda.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh I would not say it was propaganda, I would say it was information.

Mr. Sargent: But $1 million for information in this one department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is right.

Mr. Sargent: Then the department is going to provide $100,000 more information this year than last year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not necessarily. The staff salary increases were $69,000.

Mr. Sargent: This is information we are talking about?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes of course it is information, but there have to be people. That is, I would say, the hardest working branch of our whole department. Those people work hours and hours and hours trying to get information out to producers across this province and their salary increase, according to the civil service schedule of those people, is an increase of $69,000 over last year.

Mr. Sargent: As a taxpayer, would the minister say he could get by with a half a million in this job? Could he give us half a million dollars worth of information instead of a million dollars worth?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well of course, Mr. Chairman, I recall those days when my eloquent friend, the then member for Grey South, Farquhar Oliver, stood in his place as Leader of the Opposition and berated us for not providing enough information to the farm people of the Province of Ontario, and we stepped up our programme.

We have done a lot of things. We have built up an information branch that is second to none in this whole country of ours in providing the findings of research. We spend over $10 million in actual agricultural research. Our educational agricultural research programme is well over $16 million. What are we to do with these reports? Put them on a shelf and file them and not let the farmers see them?

Mr. Sargent: They should burn half of them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: How does one get this information out to the people? This is what the information branch is all about.

Mr. Sargent: This is Parkinson's law. It is working great here. You know that $1 million will buy a full page ad in the Toronto Daily Star for almost a year—$3,000 a day. It is completely ridiculous. You take $1 million of information for this one department. It is ridiculous.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: Yes, I might inquire as to how the new system of market information is working. Is the department on that system going to the radio stations, giving reports on the carload movement of various commodities, both within our own jurisdiction, and say within the Dominion of Canada and the United States, as well as the price and the other pertinent information?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The service will begin on Monday, May 3, which is not very far away. We have had a few trial runs, a few dry runs, but it begins then. It will begin with a livestock report, and thereafter at regular intervals we will initiate other commodity reports as we are able to develop adequate reporting systems. I can tell members that it has been a very difficult programme to set up, because it is so highly automated. It is operated by only one operator and a technician, so it is a pretty highly automated affair and very technical.

Simultaneously with the opening of the service to the radio stations, the same information will be available to farm people on a regular basis. They will be able to call a designated number, but they must pay the cost of that call—that is the long distance phone call—and the service will be there. I think it will provide an up-to-the-minute information service on the trends of the market—not just the prices that are paid that day but the trends of the market, the availability of supply.

Mr. Paterson: Is this a continuous programme through the day, updating?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, updating all the time.

Mr. Paterson: Is this particular service working closely with the food terminal or where does the department get information in relation to fruit and vegetables?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It will be working not only with the food terminal but it will be working with every source that we can work in.

Vote 101, item 2, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the committee of supply rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor is standing by for royal assent.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the throne.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed a bill to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following is the title of the bill to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 28, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to this bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Clerk of the House: The 17th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD

On vote 101, item 3:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 101, we are on item 3 now.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): On item 3, Mr. Chairman, if I can get the minister—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Saved by the bell!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister first of all, in this estimate which asks for $81,700, the extent of the legal staff he now has in his department?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): We have three lawyers attached to the main office.

Mr. Singer: Has he added one, or does he plan to add one? Because his estimate has gone up some $15,000 over last year.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Salary increases, same complement.

Mr. Singer: Same complement. Mr. Chairman, over several years we tried to establish, and I thought we had established with the former Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), that he or the occupant of that office was to be all of the law of the Province of Ontario. I wonder whether or not the three lawyers in the legal services branch of The Department of Agriculture and Food take instruction or discuss with the law officers of the Crown—those in the Attorney General's office—such questions as the drafting of legislation and that sort of thing?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, of course, there are relationships as far as The Regulations Act is concerned, and bills. There is that connection.

Mr. Singer: Could the Minister of Agriculture and Food tell us the extent of the discussions that took place between the members of his legal branch and the members of the Attorney General's office when Bill 10 was drafted?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It was drafted in consultation with the legislative counsel's office.

Mr. Singer: I see. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether, as this bill was being drafted in consultation with whoever was being consulted, it occurred to anyone that the question of constitutionality should be determined by some authoritative opinion?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend quite thoughtfully advised me a while ago that he was going to try to bait me when we came to this particular vote.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I am indeed—and well he deserves it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): The member would not bait anybody, would he?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not know what he means by baiting. But I have nothing to hide whatever, and if my hon. friend were as much aware of the legal rights of The Marketing Act as he seems to think he is, he would know that The Farm Products Marketing Act was submitted in 1957 to the Supreme Court of Canada, which upheld The Farm Products Marketing Act in Ontario as it is presently constituted. Therefore when we draft amendments to The Farm Products Marketing Act we do not necessarily have to take them to the law officers of the Crown to discuss with them items that pertain in our Act the same as they pertain in many other Acts across this country of ours today.

Mr. Singer: Is the minister in fact advising us, Mr. Chairman, that notwithstanding the fact that he knew there was a decision by the Court of Appeal in the Province of Quebec, notwithstanding the fact that he knew there was another decision, a contrary one, unambiguously made by the Court of Appeal in Manitoba where similar legislation had been ruled unconstitutional, he did not have the intelligence to seek an authoritative opinion as to the constitutionality of Bill 10?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There was no constitutionality issue at all as far as Bill 10 is concerned; absolutely none.

Mr. Singer: None. I see.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My friend is trying to confuse the power of seizure which is in most Acts that we have. Certainly it is in The Department of Lands and Forests Act. It certainly is in The Oleomargarine Act, The Edible Oil Products Act—it is in many other Acts; there is nothing unconstitutional about it at all.

The constitutionality issue, if there was one, should have been discussed last September if that is the problem, because that had to do with the issuance of the marketing permits. Now my friend is making a great fuss, Mr. Chairman, and—

Mr. Singer: And I intend to make more fuss too!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well that is fine. He can go right ahead and make that fuss, but he wants to make the fuss knowing full well that we have not said to any broiler shipper outside the Province of Ontario: "You cannot ship your broilers in here." We have not said that at all. We have said that when you have them in, you must comply with the marketing regulations that pertain in the Province of Ontario. That is entirely different than the plan that is in either Quebec or the hypothetical plan that was drafted in the Province of Manitoba.

Now if my hon. friend understands that difference he can base his argument on that, because we do not believe that we are in any way unconstitutional, either in Bill 10 or the marketing permit rights that have been granted to the broiler board under The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Mr. Singer: I am very pleased that the Minister of Agriculture and Food now believes that he can give an authoritative legal position, and that he has switched his ground to the extent that he said, "we do not believe." It would seem to me that since, in his various remarks that he made to this House, he was so familiar with what was going on in Quebec and Manitoba, the path of most obvious discretion would have been to have a supporting opinion in his hand from the law officers of the Crown of Ontario.

Be that as it may—this Minister of Agriculture and Food knows more than anybody else about everything—be that as it may, he did not. Then he subsequently refused—and he denied it in the House, he misled us. I had to quote Hansard to him. He said specifically: "There is no reason to intervene in the case going before the Supreme Court of Canada."

However, now he has changed his mind and he made the illuminating revelation to the House yesterday that, "Yes, we are going to intervene."

So, Mr. Chairman, the next question I want to ask him is this: Is his change of mind the result of certain remarks made over the weekend by the Premier (Mr. Davis) saying he, the Premier, was most concerned about the constitutionality?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I made those remarks the other night while my hon. friend was enjoying the hockey game—right here in this House—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it seems to be a matter of great delight to the Minister of Agriculture and Food that I went to the hockey game. I was there, certainly I was, and I am in the House much more often and much more frequently, and participate much more intelligently in most of the debates of the House than does the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I do not know where he goes and I do not really care where he goes, because he adds very little of benefit to the people of Ontario by his participation in the legislative process.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It gets my friend nowhere.

Mr. Singer: Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, be that as it may, I want to know the effect of the Premier's statement over the weekend saying that he was concerned when the minister previously told us that he, the Minister of Agriculture and Food, was not concerned.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have no comment on that.

Mr. Singer: The minister has no comment on that. Well it speaks for itself!

I think what in fact happened, Mr. Chairman—and it is patently obvious now—the Minister of Agriculture and Food in another one of his piques of temper flew off the handle and then he was overhauled by the leader. It is high time his leader took him in hand and started to tell him what these things are all about.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is leading the House astray, as he usually does. I was never spoken to by the Prime Minister in any way, shape or form. He never mentioned that particular subject.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): That took the wind out of the member for Downsview's sails.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the minister—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The intervention was decided on Wednesday last when we received word that the submission had been made to the Supreme Court, when the word came, as I explained the other night, to Ontario asking us if we wanted to take a position there. I said we would then deal with it. The request did come back asking us if we wished to take a position and I advised the Attorney General's office, through my deputy minister, that our department wished to be represented and our government wished to be represented at the Supreme Court hearing.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, that sounds as illogical as most things that this minister says.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, nothing illogical about it.

Mr. Singer: The minister at long last—and because of what his leader said—had to reverse his position. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No.

Mr. Singer: —the final question is will the minister have the courtesy to tell the members of this House on what side of the dispute he is intervening?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I have no information at this time.

Mr. Singer: No, he has no information! Well, Mr. Chairman, having said in such decisive language that in his opinion Bill 10 is within the constitutional powers of this province, is the minister now going to instruct his lawyers to go to Ottawa and go before the Supreme Court of Canada and argue against what the minister has said?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not taking any position in this. I am not a lawyer and we have not discussed it at all. We will talk this over with the law officers of the Crown and my own lawyers in this department and then we will take a position.

But I will say this, that as far as I am concerned my recommendation to the Attorney General is that we simply support the position that we have taken under The Farm Products Marketing Act of this province, which is quite different to the appeal which has gone to the Supreme Court by the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Singer: I see, I see.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend nods in great understanding and depth of knowledge and I assume that he has it all. All I am doing is telling exactly the position that I think we should be taking.

Mr. Singer: Then is the minister saying that it is his opinion, and he is so going to instruct whatever solicitors appear on behalf of the government of Ontario, that they should oppose the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal, the unanimous opinion of the Court of Appeal in Manitoba? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Would the member rather say that we instruct our officers of the court of Ontario, who go to the Supreme Court in Ottawa, to uphold the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal of the Province of Quebec, which was opposite on the same point?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Yes.

Mr. Singer: I am trying to find out what the minister is going to do. Is that what he is going to do? If that is what he is going to do, Mr. Chairman, then I think he should have the courtesy to advise this House what the opinion is of the law officers of the Crown in Ontario, because obviously the minister sets himself above any legal opinion.

He has attempted to argue that this is a valid Act by reason of the way it is going to be enforced. He has not even touched for one second on what the Act contains, because that is the test the courts are eventually going to apply to Bill 10 here in Ontario. No matter what is in his mind, it is what he has written in the Act.

And I say, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has abrogated his responsibility when he brings a controversial Act like this before us without any supporting opinion from the law officers of the Crown in Ontario as to its validity. He can explain until he is blue in the face, unless he is prepared to do that he is not doing his job as a responsible minister of the Crown.

I say this is just absolutely inexcusable. Now I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the minister is prepared to tell us what kind of discussions, if any, have ever gone on between him and, say, Mr. Gerald Baldwin, the Tory House leader in the House of Commons, who had a few very choice words to say about the approach of this minister to this kind of marketing legislation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, none whatever.

Mr. Singer: None whatever! And since the minister and his government are so concerned about what is happening in Ottawa—and constantly on their lips are the words of blame attached to those guys in Ottawa—would it not seem somewhat logical that this minister would consult with his Conservative friends in Ottawa, or perhaps listen to the House leader of his party in Ottawa? Would it not seem that the Conservatives throughout Canada have some kind of common view?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we do not apologize for what happens in Ottawa, we are Ontario.

Mr. Singer: You see this minister, Mr. Chairman, is a most puzzling person.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are Ontario. Those fellows keep apologizing for Ottawa. They get on the phone to their Ottawa friends for instructions.

Mr. Singer: Yes, we are Ontario; yes after the chauvinistic speech—the budget speech—wherein they were attempting to isolate this province, wherein they seem to abrogate their responsibility to the other sections of Canada. They do not care what is going on in the Maritimes or in Quebec or anywhere else.

They just want to carve a single empire out of the Province of Ontario, with tariff walls on the east and tariff walls on the west and send their inspectors in to seize and destroy; in abrogation again, Mr. Chairman, of everything that Mr. McRuer said in his report dealing with The Farm Products Marketing Act. Then I say, Mr. Chairman, the minister is a disgrace to the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Yes Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with two aspects of the McRuer report that came down last Thursday. I realize the minister and his officials probably have not had time to study the section in relation to The Farm Products Marketing Act as much as they would wish, nor have I—I forgot my glasses this week and I cannot read all the fine print.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Does this come under this vote?

Mr. Paterson: Yes, it is a legal opinion.

Mr. Singer: Which is more than the government ever had!

Mr. Paterson: It states the provisions giving the board the power to define farm products should be repealed. I wonder, at the outset, if the minister has any reaction to this, in particular the bit where the paragraph goes on to say that the definition is quite wide, and so on.

I notice in the definition that it does not include the growing of flowers as an agricultural production effort. The minister no doubt will recall the question in the House the other day when he, in his own opinion, thought the growing of flowers was an agricultural endeavour.

I just wonder. I possibly take a different opinion to Mr. McRuer on this section initially, and I would like to see the term "flower producer" or "flower grower" included in the terms of reference under the board. It seems to be excluded.

Would the minister care to comment?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Only to this extent, Mr. Chairman, that I undertook the other day that we would review The Farm Products Marketing Act in the light of the report. We intend to do that. I must confess that it is a very onerous responsibility and job which I think will take a very great deal of time, and we simply have not been at it yet.

Mr. Paterson: Would the minister give any consideration to including the growing of flowers as an agricultural endeavour?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will take that under advisement.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3. The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Yes, item 3 in respect to legal services. I imagine the new legislation would come under this particular vote.

Could the minister indicate whether the animal research bill, the controversial one that has been before the House for some time, will be coming forward this session?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, any reference to The Animals for Research Act should come up under the veterinary services branch.

Mr. Chairman: Anything else under item 3?

Vote 101, item 3, agreed to.

On item 4, personnel services:

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: What personnel are involved here?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: These are the people who look after the hiring and the salary classifications of the entire department. There are 12 in all.

Mr. Sargent: Is any temporary help involved here?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, there is no temporary help.

Mr. Sargent: Why do we have a billing of $13,000 under this for communication, and another $45,000 for information; a duplication of services there? Is there any relation there?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, this is an explanation of the transportation and communication services provided in the personnel section of the main office.

Vote 101, items 4 and 5, agreed to.

On item 6, systems and procedures:

Mr. Sargent: What does that mean—systems and procedures $21,000?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is office methods and the organization having to do with records management, electronic data processing; in other words the computer service provided to the department.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister rent the computer service?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, through the government computer services. Our branch uses government computer services but it is charged up against our department; that is, the pro rata is against our department.

Mr. Sargent: As a matter of interest, how many computers are there in the government's operation?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I could not tell the hon. member. I really do not know how many there are.

Vote 101 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 102 is on page 16, agricultural production programme.

On vote 102, item 1, administration:

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I want to make some comments with respect to the farm tax reduction programme. This particular programme comes under the administration section of the second vote.

There are really two items here with which I would like to deal. The first has to do with a specific problem which was rather unique to Huron county. The minister will no doubt recall that back in 1969 an over-zealous assessor got the idea that he would assess as commercial all of the farm properties in Huron county that had hog or poultry operations located on the premises.

All of those farmers involved decided that they would appeal that particular assessment. It was taken to the court of revision, and the court of revision came down with the decision that any agricultural intensified operation such as a hog barn, a poultry barn or what have you, if there was not 10 acres associated with it, was certainly a commercial assessment.

As far as the farm tax rebate programme is concerned, of course, the payments are made on the basis of the coding which is set out by the assessment department; if that assessment coding happens to be commercial, then of course those farmers do not get their tax rebate.

I have talked with the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) about this. We have mentioned it here in the House before, and I am wondering what the Minister of Agriculture and Food is doing in concert with his colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, to have this situation corrected. Presumably it will have to be corrected by way of legislative action.

It seems to me this is going to have to be done very quickly because the programme has been underway, the payments are being made and have been sent out for the most part. There are still some to come where there have been errors in coding other than this commercial coding business to which I make reference—they have been dealt with—and I presume The Department of Municipal Affairs is going to meet with the assessment department in each county to clarify some of the mistakes that have been made.

As I pointed out earlier, I think the problem in Huron county is rather unique in that I think it was one of two counties where this particular thing happened across the Province of Ontario at that time. So these farmers—I can think of two or three cases where they are big farmers in actual total production, but they do not have the 10-acre stipulation. They are under the 10 acres. Their total holdings are under 10 acres, therefore they are assessed as commercial and they are not eligible for the farm tax reduction payment.

I am wondering if the minister is going to really push that forward with his colleague or just what is going to happen. I understood that it was going to be corrected before now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Certainly there is concern here, and we have expressed the concern to the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough). As the member will appreciate, there is a new Minister of Municipal Affairs and we are going through the motions again; I assume that this matter will be taken care of.

There was an order-in-council drafted and passed which would deal with the incorrect coding to which my hon. friend refers. This will pick up a number of those who have been missed in the tax rebate programme. That will be dealt with. But the matter of business assessment is something that in my opinion should be spelled out clearly in legislation; there should be no business assessment levied against agricultural production of any kind.

I am not sure what the status of this is with The Department of Municipal Affairs. There certainly have been many discussions on it and they are very well aware of what my opinion is. I can only hope that in the fullness of time we will have legislation presented which will include what the former minister expressed and what I have expressed on this matter.

Mr. Gaunt: I appreciate the minister's comments in this regard. I think he feels as I do in this respect. These units are food production units and they are just as much an agricultural production unit as a farm of 100 acres; only it is more intense, the production is concentrated. Certainly as far as I am concerned I think there should be a change made and this correction should be set out by way of legislation for all to see so that The Assessment Act is clarified in that regard.

There is one other point I want to make with respect to the education tax as it applies to farm property. I believe the minister made a statement a while back that as far as he was personally concerned he felt that all education taxes should be removed from farm land and that they should be applied exclusively against the farm buildings. This would agree with the—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not quite, not quite!

I think we are talking about the same thing, but the way the member has expressed it is the tax off lands should be transferred exclusively against buildings, and that was not what I said. I said the education tax should be taken off the farm lands, but that buildings should continue to bear their share of the cost of education tax—the same as a greenhouse or the same as a gas station or a feed mill or a manufacturing plant—but that the education tax on farm lands per se should be taken up by the provincial government, which is what we have attempted to do in that tax rebate programme.

Mr. Gaunt: This would basically agree with the taxation report which was brought in by the then Minister of Municipal Affairs back—what, 16, 18 months ago now?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Gaunt: I am wondering: Is the government going to make any move toward adopting the other recommendations in that report?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I think we will have to wait for the Minister of Municipal Affairs to make his opinions on that known to the Legislature. That falls within his jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Innes: Yes, I would like to speak on a couple of problems in respect to the 25 per cent reduction. I have a peculiar situation in my riding and it may be common in the odd section of the province.

We have what is termed a chemical valley outside Woodstock and it is composed of a Cyanamid plant, the Canada Cement plant and Domtar. These people own the land and lease it back to the farmers at a nominal fee of so much a year. The Department of Municipal Affairs has seen fit to give them a tax reduction of 25 per cent on their land, which of course is not farmed by them. The intent of the Act was to return the money to the farmers who are working the land.

Like so many of these ad hoc situations in which the government pieces things together in a hurry, this is another example. To this day there are some of these farmers who have not received the tax rebate that has been passed on to companies. I would like the minister to comment on what he feels would be the just and proper way to cope with this particular situation. I have had farmers come to me and ask me what they were going to do.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would have no comment to make on that until I saw the terms of the agreement. What did the terms of the agreement say? It seems to me that it would be quite improper for me to pass an opinion on a legal matter unless we knew what the terms of the agreement were.

Mr. Innes: Of course the agreement was made previous to the tax reduction formula coming into effect and any agreement that was made previously to that certainly would not have any bearing on one that was made later, I would think.

Another problem that has been brought to my attention by the clerks of many of the municipalities is that certain properties have been in arrears of taxes for many years, and some of them of course have been up for land sale. The tax rebate went to the owner of the land at that particular time, even though the municipality did not receive their taxes for many years. Here is a landowner who cashes a cheque from the department for taxes that he has never paid and no doubt some of the land will be sold and he is away scot-free.

Does the minister feel that this is fair to the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well of course it depends on why the farmer withheld his taxes. There was a tax withholding programme—

Mr. Innes: No, no!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —supported by many last year. How are we to know why a man withheld his taxes? We paid the money to the farmer. The arrangement between the municipality and the farmers to collect the taxes is a well-known statute; it is set out clearly as to how they can do that. It has been done in many cases in the past as my hon. friend so well knows.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister how many farmers have not received their farm tax rebate yet?

Mr. Innes: Eight thousand.

Mr. Spence: Eight thousand? In the township in which I live a number of farms have been classed as residential instead of as farms. This has caused great concern to many of the farmers. One farm is 400 acres, which certainly is not a residential property. I wonder if the minister—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Reassessment!

Mr. Spence: —is trying to get this corrected?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I just answered that question a moment ago—

Mr. Spence: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —in reply to my friend from Huron-Bruce, that the new order-in-council passed a week or so ago attempts to pick up those who were improperly assessed in the coding on the computerized programme covering the assessment roll so that they will be taken care of. The applications, I believe, have been extended to September 15 rather than March, so it—

Mr. Ruston: September 30.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —will allow us to clean up some of those mistakes that have been made inadvertently in the past.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this may not be the place, but this vote seems to be kind of an omnibus operation.

I would like to ask the minister if he has ever considered the feasibility or practicality of rental-purchase agreements for farm equipment? I understand this is now in effect in the United States in some areas. Does the minister's research tell him that this is a practical thing to do? Is it feasible for the farmers of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh yes Mr. Chairman, there are many farmers in Ontario who practice that, but that is done through the private companies. There are many farmers who have rental agreements on equipment and they seem to like it pretty well because it avoids tying up capital.

Mr. Sargent: Has the minister ever considered offering forgivable loans to farmers?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend would observe the capital grants programme there is $6 million in this programme. We have been doing this for a number of years. A substantial capital grant is now available—40 per cent up to $3,000 for capital purchases to any one farmer in Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Has the minister ever considered the possibility of beef crop insurance?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Of what, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Sargent: Beef crop insurance.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Beef crop insurance?

Mr. Sargent: Right!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: This is a good one. The minister does not even understand this one.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The hon. minister is not the only one.

Mr. Sargent: We have crop insurance.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: The minister has heard of beef? That is cattle?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I have a few myself.

Mr. Sargent: Beef crop insurance.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Would the hon. member go over that again, please?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I have not been drinking. I think the member should erase that remark from Hansard. It was not very nice.

In fact, there is too much of that going on in the House—insinuations about a fellow having a drink. We all take a drink once in a while.

An hon. member: Not all!

Mr. Sargent: Okay, not all do, but the fact that the hon. member would say that tonight was not very nice.

Mr. MacDonald: Are we debating this?

Mr. Sargent: I would like to get the hon. member outside and talk to him about it some time.

Mr. MacDonald: Anytime anybody gets up here and rudely interrupts and frustrates the debate he will be spotted.

Mr. Sargent: Not like that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member should get off that self-righteous kick!

Mr. Sargent: That is not like the member. That does not become him at all.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): The member for York South can hand it out but he cannot take it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: Holier than thou!

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I think there are a lot of beef operators who think that this is a logical thing to ask. What does the minister think about it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have not heard the proposal broached before. It was a new terminology to me but I confess I am always willing to learn and always willing to listen. I will look forward to the proposal being made.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister not think that these people are the biggest gamblers in the world?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is a comment my hon. friend from Grey-Bruce might ascribe to us. I am a beef man myself, but I never figured that I was that big a gambler. I cannot afford to gamble.

Mr. Sargent: That is all the more reason why the hon. minister should be protected.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I guess it is.

Mr. Sargent: So the hon. minister is learning something new from the opposition.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Indeed I am.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. minister admits that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Indeed I do.

Mr. Paterson: Make it a guarantee for tender steaks!

Mr. Sargent: This will probably come up now in the minister's election platform. When is the election?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is hard to say.

An hon. member: Does that guarantee tender steaks?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex South. The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister. I take it there is no conflict with the grants for capital purposes and farm development and the loans in accordance with The Co-operative Loans Act, except that the one is for farm expansion and merger of smaller farms into a larger one for economic purposes?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Chairman. May I explain to my hon. friend from Hamilton East that the loans in accordance with The Co-operative Loans Act are for co-operatives that are already established, or for co-operatives that want to establish. By this I mean feed co-operatives, marketing co-operatives, this kind of thing. But the capital grants are available only to farmers per se.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes. That is the explanation that I expected. In browsing through the minister's report I came across a small paragraph relating to co-operative loan boards, and reading it, it instantaneously came to my mind—the government's Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme. With that also came to my mind a clipping that I saved and had in my files from the fall of 1968 where the farmers were quite disturbed about the fact that the Schneider meat-packing firm was one of the first groups in the first $1 million that was lent through that programme. It received some $250,000. It is quite an interesting analogy.

I wonder, in his concern over this, why the minister has not insisted, on behalf of the farmers, that the co-operatives could enjoy the EIO programme rather than The Co-operative Loans Act provisions. It seems to me quite discriminatory when industry can get loans on a less restrictive basis—

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gisborn:—than the co-operatives in this province. We all agree that co-operatives perform a very useful service.

I happened to take an interest in this and I went to the Act and read the provisions or regulations which applied to the co-operatives getting loans, and they are quite a restrictive set of regulations. They have to open their books. They have to send financial reports. They have to hire a manager approved by the minister. They have to continue to use a manager approved by the minister until the loan is paid off.

They are quite extensive. They have to pay it back at an interest rate set by the board; and if we read the qualifications for a loan under the EIO programme, there is no such thing. They have to perform for five years and to hire a certain number of men.

It is beyond me to understand why this minister, on behalf of the farmers in this province, who I believe are the people that developed the co-operatives for their own benefit, why he has not insisted that the EIO programme be available to them on a forgivable loan basis for expansion of increased facilities such as the grain elevators, cold storage and so forth—anything that expands their business.

Has the minister given that some thought on behalf of the farmers, because it was quite a discouraging thing to find out how and why the Schneider's packing-house firm got the $250,000; if the article out of the farm paper is correct, and I have no reason to believe it is not, it was just a handout to them, and almost admitted.

I suppose the minister has read the article. It ends up saying that Stuart Hicks, the development supervisor, who will be in charge of the Ayr plant, says the forgivable loan was one of the factors which influenced the company to choose the Ayr site, but not the only one.

If you remember, that was the location where FAME—I think it was the Farmers Allied Meat Enterprise group—wanted to build their packing plant, and of course they were given short shrift by this government. They were demolished and just told: "You have had it, boys. There is nothing for you."

But he goes on to say there were other reasons. Accessibility to market was another reason why Ayr was chosen instead of a number of other locations. "Our major markets are in the Metro Toronto area and Ayr is right on Highway 401." Mr. Hicks said his company could have partially financed this Ayr plant in other ways; but since many of its major competitors—Kraft Foods, Campbell Soup Company Limited, Canada Packers—had taken advantage of the forgivable loan why should not Schneider's?

After this kind of situation took place, surely this minister in charge of the department that regulates the loans for the co-operatives should have gone to the cabinet and said: "Look, what is going on here? Let us make these forgivable loans available to the co-operatives in this province on the same basis and on the same terms as to the industries in this province."

I wonder if the minister would give any good reason why he has not taken this position two years prior to this point and if he will consider taking this up to the cabinet to see that these people in this province get equal treatment to the industrial groups?

Mr. MacDonald: Stand up and fight for the farmers for a change!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I think the point is well taken, Mr. Chairman. We will certainly look into it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. Ruston: I want to ask the minister if the Soy Bean Marketing Board has ever approached the government with regard to whether it would be eligible for loans. I know it says "co-operative", but what about a marketing board that wished to put in storage for soy beans or a crushing plant? Would it have to go to the Ontario Development Corporation, or would there be any chance of it getting money through The Department of Agriculture and Food?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not under The Co-operative Loans Act. They are not a co-operative.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Yes Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister something concerning the Ontario Farm Safety Council.

Recently there has been a lot of concern with vehicle safety. As we read in the press daily, especially during the warm weather months, there are more and more farm accidents involving the use of the various implements and the vehicle itself.

Has the minister ever considered approaching the manufacturers with recommendations that they improve the safety features of the various types of vehicles used in the agricultural industry and also add additional safety features to the various types of equipment that are put to use in the agricultural industry?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Ontario Farm Safety Council has from time to time had these discussions with the manufacturers but unfortunately all of these safety features add to the price, the cost factor, of equipment. As a matter of fact, there have been from time to time equipment safety features, safety equipment—I think of roll bars for instance—made available on an optional basis on machinery. I can think of one company which had a supply of these that they simply could not sell. They ended up by simply getting rid of them at fire-sale prices because nobody would buy them. I do not know why but they just do not buy these things.

While we maintain a close record and have at hand reports supplied to us by the Farm Safety Council on all serious accidents—in fact in every county and district, as I understand it, through the ag rep's office there is a very accurate record kept of farm accidents or accidents involving rural people—and this is very enlightening but is hard to say how much effect the Farm Safety Council has had on reducing the number of accidents. That is an unknown factor, but they keep working at it with, I think, very effective results; and of course working through the Workmen's Compensation Board as well in all publicity that they can direct toward this particular programme. I think it is having some effect, but it is still far greater than anyone would like to believe.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the minister, through you, if the incidence of agricultural injuries as a result of the use of the vehicle and the implement is decreasing or is it still on an increase?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If memory serves me right it is decreasing.

I do not have the report right at hand but I believe it is decreasing, because for one reason the Workmen's Compensation Board rate has been reduced from $3.50 per 100 to $3.35. This is based, of course, on the accident history or record of the industry and so there is a reduction. We hope that it can be further reduced.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, there are two other avenues that concern me in this same respect, and one is the effect of the noise of the vehicle and the damage it can do to the hearing senses of the farmer himself. The other is the fact that the farmer working on the tractor for long periods of time is subjected to the fumes of the burning gases. As a result it may have a harmful effect on him which will not be detected early enough so that he would be eligible for workmen's compensation, but may adversely affect him in his later years. Is there not something that can be done to protect the farmer against both the aspect of deafness and with regard to pollution?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This matter of noise pollution certainly is of concern—as a matter of fact that was the theme of the Ontario Farm Safety Council this year. One of the demonstrations was of the type of earmuffs that can be provided now for farmers to wear who are riding tractors on a constant basis.

Another thought that has been aired and is certainly being stressed is that farmers should take that coffee break, as it were. We farmers have always thought we never had time to do that, but those farmers who are taking that coffee break in the afternoon or in the morning—getting off their tractor, shutting it down and getting a little exercise, having a coffee—can get back on much refreshed and go on with the job. I think this is an important safety feature.

Quite frankly I think we should be doing a lot more of that, and this is one of the things our farm safety specialists are stressing through the various county and district farm safety organizations.

With regard to the pollution factor, it is of concern, but most tractors are equipped to move the exhaust above the level at which the person is sitting or standing on the tractor. I have ridden a tractor a very great deal and I must confess I have never found it to be a very great problem myself.

Mr. B. Newman: Finally, one other question of the minister, Mr. Chairman: are farmers who are subjected to this excess of noise as a result of the vehicle itself eligible for workmen's compensation as far as their deafness is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I suppose they would be if it could be proved that is what happened, if they were insured as self-employed farmers under workmen's compensation. I have not heard of any case of deafness in farm labour which has been associated with this.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oxford.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, on the same particular subject, I notice in the United States that a recommendation has been made over there that all individuals up to 16 years be prohibited from driving tractors unless they have had some type of a course in the 4-H movement.

I hate to think of the compulsory aspect of it, but I would think that it might be well to have our 4-H programme include some type of educational course along this particular line at each of the particular areas in the 4-H categories—whether it be in the dairy or the horse clubs and so on.

Maybe it would be a good idea. Maybe it is being carried out now, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, we have 4-H tractor clubs, Mr. Chairman, but I think the hon. member is suggesting that in the calf clubs there be a sort of a sub-course to go along with it. That is a pretty good idea. I would like to give some thought to that, quite frankly.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask a couple of questions in relation to the agricultural manpower service? What efforts are the minister's department making to attract seasonal workers into, say, Essex and Kent counties or the Niagara Peninsula this year, other than the workers from the Caribbean areas?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Essex and Kent county?

Mr. Paterson: Yes, I used my own area, but is the department trying to attract them into the areas where we require extra work or extra manpower during their growing season?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is controlled, or at least it is under the jurisdiction of the joint federal-provincial manpower committee that has to do with seasonal help. I think they have done a pretty good job in trying to determine, first of all the needs of the farmers in their respective areas and then trying to fulfil those needs.

As far as the member's own particular area is concerned, I have not got the details on that, but I assume that it is being looked after by that particular committee. There will be representatives on that federal-provincial manpower committee from your area, who I am sure will be correlating their needs with the available sources of manpower, and I understand it is through advertising and transportation assistance and housing. These are the things that we have had before, but relating it to the specific requirements for this year, that will be determined by the people representing the member's area.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask, is the emphasis being put on individuals to come in, or families, students or non-students? Is there any guideline set out by the department as to what we wish in our particular area?

One of the things I was hoping that the department might be trying to do is to discourage some of the types that we have had drifting in in the past, because they are causing a great many problems to the communities in these areas. Is this manpower service actively encouraging this type of person to come in, or are we seeking to help those who really want to help themselves?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would think that would be our first objective; certainly the committee, I am assured, will be reflecting the requirements as enunciated by the people who represent the member's area on the federal-provincial manpower seasonal labour committee.

Mr. Chairman: Item number one.

Mr. Innes: I would like to speak on it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oxford.

Mr. Innes: Many of the schools, Mr. Chairman, throughout the secondary schools of the province, have set up their own little manpower depots, so to speak. I wonder if it would be possible for the department to sort of relay through the ag-rep service the availability of certain farm oriented people in the various areas throughout the province to be on call for certain work such as tomato picking, and down in my—

Mr. Paterson: Corn detasseling.

Mr. Innes: —corn detasseling, and these particular things. I know that in our particular area last year I thought the students did an excellent job in setting this up on their own. They worked through manpower to some degree, but on the other hand they set up their own system and used their own phones and had a real good programme. Maybe the minister could co-operate with them through the department in funnelling them to areas where there is a need for an extra force at a particular time of the year.

Mr. Chairman: Item 1 carried?

Vote 102, item 1, agreed to.

On item 2:

Mr. Chairman: Item 2, agricultural and horticultural societies. The member for Oxford.

Mr. Innes: I would like to ask the minister in respect to this particular vote—I have had complaints directed to me in some of the new areas of regional government throughout the province where there seems to be an apparent majority of urban people on the regional commissions. As such they have seen fit to do away with the grants to certain societies, agricultural societies, in their particular jurisdiction that previously were getting it through the county. And they have also expressed concern that they are going to be overhauled by the urban people who are on the particular regional government.

I just ask the minister if he has had any comments or complaints along this particular line?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have not had a complaint, and I am assured by the director of the branch that he has not heard of it any place.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask, in the same regard, in relation to the grants for community centres and such in the legislation that we passed a couple of years ago whereby more than one municipality could qualify, have there been any implications with the development of regional government where this has interfered, say, with the maximum grant being obtainable by a group of municipalities for these particular purposes?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This comes under vote 103, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Anything else under this item?

Vote 102, item 2, agreed to.

On item 3, crop insurance:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex Kent.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, it is time to rise and report.

Mr. Chairman: There have been no instructions yet.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the committee rise and report it has come to a certain resolution, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the motion for adjournment is put, could the House leader advise us what he thinks will be the order of business on Thursday?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had indicated earlier today that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon)—perhaps the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) was not here?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): The member for Downsview was at the hockey game.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—the Leader of the Opposition would lead off on the budget debate on Thursday, and I think we went further to indicate that the leader of the New Democratic Party would take part in that debate commencing Monday. If those addresses will not occupy the whole time we will go to continuation of these estimates, with possibly some second readings.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, can I ask another question of the House leader? Does he know whether the great television debate has been resolved?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member has brought that up also.

We discussed that earlier today. I had to indicate at that time that I had no part in the making of the arrangements and no knowledge of how they were made, how long they were to endure, or who they were to cover. Since then I have made inquiries. I learned that the CBC makes those arrangements at its own discretion. It did wish to cover the presentation of the budget address. I understand that it afforded publicity—interviews—yesterday evening to leaders of the opposition group—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—to some extent, and at the moment they have not rendered a decision as to whether they are going to cover the opposition speeches or not.

Mr. Singer: That is what I wanted to know.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This may or may not come about, I do not know.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the House leader one more question? I picked up a rumour over the supper hour that somehow we are going to get on to Public Works estimates. Could the House leader confirm that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have in mind that Public Works—the present arrangements are moving to definite stage—will probably move into committee early next week.

Mr. Singer: Does the House leader mean Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It will be Monday or Tuesday. I have got a couple of days yet.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): When are those fellows going to get organized over there?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I wonder if I could just—

An hon. member: The member will have a chance at committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that you yourself were in charge of the negotiations in regard to the CBC televising the proceedings of this House. I am wondering exactly what was in your mind in relation to whether the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party should also be televised when the budget came down. Was it in your mind that all three parties should be represented on the television debate?

Mr. Speaker: The matter was raised this afternoon and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) made certain remarks in the House which I think were quite correct. That was that some time ago—one or two sessions ago—there were meetings and there were arrangements made at that time in Mr. Speaker's office that television would be in the House for the opening ceremonies on the opening day of the session, and on budget day for the budget presentation and each of the leaders of the opposition parties.

The next year, as I recall it, all that happened was that Mr. Speaker was advised that these arrangements would continue and this was quite satisfactory and it had been agreed.

This year, all Mr. Speaker knows about it is that he was advised that television would be in the House on the budget presentation. As I said this afternoon, I have no further information on the matter. Personally I had presumed that the same custom was being followed, but the arrangements were not made by Mr. Speaker, they were made with his approval and after he had been consulted and he sat in on the meeting.

I said this afternoon I would endeavour to find out myself what the situation was. I have not yet been able to do that. I know now as much as the other members from what the House leader has said, and I hope to be able to find out in the morning. One can find these things out—

Mr. Sargent: You hope!

Mr. Speaker: I hope, yes—provided the people involved are available, and at the moment they are not available to me.

So that as far as Mr. Speaker is concerned the understanding was that the CBC was coming in as before, but he has nothing to show that. There have been no arrangements and no meetings with Mr. Speaker about that this year. That is all I can add at this moment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The NDP would not want any more television coverage like it had last weekend.

Mr. Speaker: Anything further in the order of business?

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 10:35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon our guests in the east gallery are students from Thornlea Secondary School in Thornhill; in the west gallery, from Athens High School, Athens, LaSalle Concert Tour Band and St. Ignace City schools from St. Ignace, Mich., and the Newfane Central High School from Newfane, N.Y. We will have in both galleries students from Rockcliff Senior Public School in Toronto, and later today, from Grant Sine Public School, Cobourg, Mount Carmel School, Leamington, and Ecole Secondaire Theriault, Timmins. This evening the Eglinton Progressive Conservative Association in Toronto will be with us.

I think this might be the appropriate time for Mr. Speaker to report with respect to television coverage. The hon. members will recall that Mr. Speaker was asked to look into this matter along with the House leader the other day. The hon. members will note the lights are back again, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) will go on TV at 3 o'clock today for an hour's coverage. Next week the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) will also be on TV on Tuesday.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the hon. members the publication which has been placed on their desks. The new publication, "Northern Ontario Canoe Routes," has been produced in recognition of the increasing interest in this recreational activity and to provide basic information to the many persons seeking for new and more challenging canoe areas.

The development of the system of canoe routes across Ontario is one of the programmes designed to meet the goals and objectives of The Department of Lands and Forests in providing opportunities for a wide variety of healthful outdoor recreational experiences for the people of Ontario.

This free booklet contains information on 125 separate routes, totalling approximately 11,000 miles.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The minister has not got Highway 10 in there.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Members will note from the contents and fold-out map that these routes are well distributed across northern Ontario and offer the canoeist a wide variety of landscape, challenge and degree of remoteness from civilization. Portage improvements and documenting of the routes is being completed by our field staff and detailed route descriptions are available from the district foresters in the areas concerned.

The increasing public use of these routes will be of direct benefit to the economy of a number of our northern communities in the provision of guides, goods and services.

The second publication, Mr. Speaker, is a newly revised edition of the "Ontario Provincial Parks" brochure which includes a colour code to allow the visitor to quickly select the kind of park which will best meet his particular interests.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to announce today the release of the publication "Ontario Mining—The Early Years," copies of which have been placed on the desks of all the members. This particular booklet was produced by the information section of The Department of Mines and Northern Affairs.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I thought McClelland and Stewart published it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is very good. It is a good publication. I hope the hon. members will read it right through.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I already have.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This profusely illustrated 48-page booklet outlines the people, the places and the events that were part of Ontario's colourful mining industry. Within its pages are stories and actual photographs—

Mr. Nixon: There are pictures in it!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): That is the ex-minister on the front cover.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —of the areas, the great camps and the pioneers responsible for the discovery and the development of this province's mineral industry, and also, in considerable part, of her northland.

Mr. Nixon: Is that a picture of the former Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs on the front?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes it is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This publication is available, free of charge, from the publications office of the department in the Whitney Block. I think—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Which minister? The former minister or the present minister?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the book will speak for itself, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of personal privilege. I want to make Hansard aware—I refer to last Thursday, April 22, in the Speech from the Throne—that Mr. R. F. Ruston is the member for Essex-Kent and not Essex South. I am sure that I would not want to replace our good member for Essex South, just so that the record will be straight.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Justice: Does the government intend to make a statement on Ontario's position with regard to possible changes in the federal Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act whose jurisdiction will run out tomorrow?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I had the occasion two weeks ago to make a public address, generally giving the overall view of the government. It is my understanding that there will be a statement made very, very shortly, perhaps even within a matter of minutes, on this general subject.

Mr. Nixon: Oh?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: But not by me.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY RIOTS

Mr. Nixon: Another question, Mr. Speaker, of the same minister then, if the government is going to make a statement on that matter: Can the minister explain and describe to the House the role played by the Ontario Provincial Police in the investigation of the Kingston Penitentiary riots and the aftermath—particularly the charges associated with some of the prisoners?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, the Kingston Penitentiary, as I think my hon. friend is aware, is located within the geographical police administration boundary—if I can put it in that awkward way—of the Kingston municipal police forces. Obviously, two murders have taken place within Kingston Penitentiary.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): It is a little late.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: We are assisting the Kingston municipal police forces in the best way that we can. We have an inspector taking part in the investigation relating to those two crimes, or alleged crimes. In respect of certain ancillary matters arising from the riot at Kingston, regarding alleged beatings at Millhaven, this is completely within the jurisdiction of the Ontario Provincial Police.

It is not within the jurisdiction of any municipal police forces, and I was rather concerned initially when some of these allegations were brought to my attention that there might be some conflict of jurisdiction respecting the federal service and our own Ontario Provincial Police. I am now informed that it does not matter whether these alleged crimes took place in a federal institution or not, this—

Mr. Nixon: Does that include the murders as well as the beatings?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. As far as the murders are concerned, and as far as we are concerned, the proper police force is carrying out an investigation there, that is the Kingston police. We have a homicide inspector helping them to take the proper course of action.

As far as the Millhaven beatings are concerned, we are investigating this in the same manner that we would in respect of any other alleged crime. We have a team of investigators right now who are on the spot. We have interviewed some of our own force in respect of this matter and a very full investigation is taking place.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: There is more than one murder charge that could be laid? There is more than one murder that took place?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: My understanding is that there have been two deaths, I had better put it that way. Whether these are murders or not, I do not know, but there are certainly two deaths.

Mr. Speaker: If the Leader of the Opposition and the members would allow us to revert to statements by the ministry, the Prime Minister has one which might perhaps be the subject of question. I do not know what it is. Then we will resume the question period.

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is really in reply, as well, to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, on Monday I believe.

Mr. Speaker, as you and the members of this House are aware, The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act of the Parliament of Canada expires at midnight tomorrow. This Act was passed by Parliament last October in response to a very difficult situation which erupted in the Province of Quebec and was given a limited span of life. In the judgement of the government of Canada and Parliament, it will either be extended beyond the end of April or allowed to expire.

While the government of Ontario has not been directly consulted on the advisability of continuing The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, I should like to express to this House our views on this matter inasmuch as it was raised with me in a question posed by the Leader of the Opposition on Monday of this week.

First of all, I want to emphasize that this government fully supports, and is prepared to take necessary action to preserve to the fullest possible extent the freedom of all individuals. This government is most emphatically opposed to the institution of authoritarian control. Yet, at the same time it is the responsibility of this government—as it is for other provincial governments and the government of Canada—to take whatever action is necessary to preserve law, order and security within our areas of responsibility.

Last October, when Jasper Cross and the hon. Pierre Laporte were kidnapped by the FLQ, the governments of Quebec and Canada concluded that circumstances were such that the use of special powers was necessary to preserve the integrity of our country, the safety of individuals and their families, and to control the illegal operations of the FLQ. On the basis of the somewhat fragmentary information available to the government of Ontario, it was considered at that time that The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act was both useful and necessary.

It must be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that this Act is a federal statute. The primary responsibility for enforcement is vested in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The police agencies in Ontario have co-operated fully with the federal authorities, although the Act's application to conditions prevailing in Ontario appeared to be restricted and of limited need.

Now, as the date of expiry approaches, I want to inform the House that, in the view of this government, The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act has probably fulfilled its function insofar as Ontario is concerned. I would not wish, however, to imply that Ontario would object to either an extension of the period of applicability of The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, or its modification to provide specific application to other provinces. This is a matter I leave entirely to the wisdom and judgement of the federal government, to be dealt with in whatever form it deems most appropriate in the circumstances. But as far as our province is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we do not believe it is any longer necessary.

Mr. J. Renwick: Did it ever have any application in Ontario?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Yes, what did it ever have?

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period is now resumed. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I wonder, before my leader gets on to a new question, if I could ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No, there are no questions in the—

Mr. Singer: No, no, supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: On the original question?

Mr. Singer: Yes, on the original question.

Mr. Speaker: Before the statements?

Mr. Singer: Before the statements, yes, that is the one. Insofar as the two deaths that the Attorney General referred to, my reading of the newspapers led me to conclude there had been only one. Has there been a second one that has not been given any publicity and if so, when did that take place?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry; the only information I have in respect of that—because as I indicated, the investigation is directly under the control of the Kingston municipal police force—was that there has been a subsequent death. I believe there was one prisoner who was claimed to be critically injured and I thought I had read in the press over the weekend—and only that is the basis of my knowledge—that that particular prisoner had died. I had thought there were two deaths, but I may be wrong.

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT

Mr. Nixon: A question of the Premier in connection with his statement.

Can he say that The Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act ever had any application in this province and if so, what was it? Secondly, does he feel that the running out of the jurisdiction of this Act should lead the government of Canada in with consultation among the provinces, to consider some other statute less rigorous than The War Measures Act that could be available in case of need under the circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the federal government or say what their intentions may be.

With respect to the first question—and I will seek out further information—I believe there may have been only two persons picked up as it related to the actual application of this Act by the RCMP.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mistaken identity.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker does the Prime Minister think the Act really had any relevant application to Ontario at any point?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if memory serves me correctly, the then Attorney General made several statements wherein he stated that in his view it did not have application here in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Right. Therefore, the Premier's statement several months later is a reaffirmation of the position several months ago—which leads me to the supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier of Ontario not feel that he has the right to put his government's view for Canada as well as for Ontario as to the appropriateness of the extension of this kind of legislation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all have personal points of view. I speak as the head of this government as it relates to this province and I have expressed that point of view.

Mr. Lewis: By way of one last supplementary, does the Premier think, either in his personal point of view or as head of the government, that this Act should be extended beyond tomorrow midnight?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I thought the statement was quite clear, that as it relates to this province we do not believe it should be.

Mr. J. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question, on what basis does the Prime Minister make the statement that the primary responsibility within the Province of Ontario for the enforcement of that Act rested with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think, Mr. Speaker, if the member for Riverdale were to check section 2 of The Criminal Code he would find that this in fact is the case.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): That is why he asked the former Attorney General to sit down beside him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I used to know The Criminal Code too.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

CIVIL SERVICE ARBITRATION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: Can he state the policy of the government with respect to arbitrations handed down on behalf of the negotiations between the government and the Civil Service Association or any group within the Civil Service Association? Is it the policy since the budgetary statement on Monday of this week to reject all arbitrations that would exceed five per cent?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there has been no set policy as it relates to that. I think the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) made this abundantly clear in his answer to certain questions yesterday and I really do not think they need repeating here again this afternoon.

Mr. Nixon: As a supplementary, would the Premier make it clear how in fact we can accept an average of five per cent unless we hold in abeyance all of the negotiations and arbitrations until the very end of the year before settlement is brought forward?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this too was explained yesterday. It is quite obvious—and the Treasurer, I think, pointed this out—that this was an average, a guideline which the government was hoping to attain, and of course there would be certain situations with exceptions to that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, of the settlements that were made in 1970 which extend to the end of 1972, and which exceed the five per cent wage guideline, will those agreements still be honoured?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, any agreement this government makes will be honoured.

Mr. Pilkey: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, the former Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton)—I will get to the question in one second—the former Treasurer in enunciating a statement on May 6, 1970, concluded by saying: "This is an encouraging confirmation that true collective bargaining can and does take place in the public service of Ontario." My question, Mr. Speaker, is, has the government policy changed in view of the five per cent wage ceiling announced in the recent budget?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker: (a) it is not a ceiling; (b) the policy has not changed.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Not a ceiling?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a supplementary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: Is that not awfully confused?

Mr. Singer: That is worse than the Minister of Trade and Development on housing.

An hon. member: The Premier is baffling again—"Baffling Bill Davis."

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. Lewis: Another section of the budget hits the canvas.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary of the Premier.

Mr. Singer: With the help of McKeough and Grossman you really have nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order! An hon. member of the opposition is endeavouring to place a supplementary question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: May I ask the Premier, by way of supplementary, if there is any thought of extending this supposed guideline or ceiling—whichever word the Premier prefers—to other sections of the Ontario economy, or is he going to restrict it only to civil servants?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I could be very facetious and say that certainly it will extend to no contemplated raise to members of this Legislature, but I will not. But of course we do not have the capacity to do this as it relates to areas where we do not have direct control.

Mr. T. P. Reid: By way of further supplementary, does the Premier not feel that it is discriminatory to one part of the economy—and that is the public service—to restrict them to five per cent guidelines and let the rest of the economy supposedly go as high as it wants, or can get?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it was made abundantly clear both in the statement and the questions answered by the Treasurer yesterday, that we are talking about averages; nor is it inconsistent.

An hon. member: We did not sit yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, I take it that the Premier has therefore rejected the categorical statement in the press release accompanying the budget that the budget calls for a five per cent ceiling on average salary increases?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have read the budget two or three times since it was introduced to this House—

Mr. Stokes: It is a pity he did not read it before.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recommend to the hon. member for Scarborough West that he do the same, and I think he will find that it includes the statement that this is a guideline, a ceiling, an average.

Mr. Lewis: Guidelines?

By way of supplementary, I take it then that the Premier is not at all concerned that Judge Anderson has said he will pay no attention whatsoever to the so-called guideline or ceiling?

Mr. Singer: Off with his head.

Mr. Lewis: Or will he survive to sit?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on what the judge of the court has said. He has every right to say what he wants to say. I am not going to stop him.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

LOCATION OF NEW AIRPORT IN SOUTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier if he is preparing any statement having to do with the location, or the provincial decision on the location, of the international airport which is to be built in this area of southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the government is such at this moment that we are seeking further information from Ottawa as it relates to the subject. I have communicated with the Prime Minister of Canada—I believe the letter is going out today; and I believe the Minister of Transportation and Communications either has or is in the process—to get some determination as to what extent the federal government will be involved in the payments of any infrastructure transportation facilities, or what have you, to any possible airport site.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Are news reports correct that indicate that a variety of possible locations have been put before the government of Ontario for their consideration, if not their decision?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that one could phrase it that it was put before the government for its consideration. The government of this province has had discussions with federal officials relating to certain areas where we have concern and interest. We have provided a great deal of information, and I think it is fair to state there has been a substantial degree of communication in this area.

As I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, one of the very real concerns we have as a government relates to the economics and the financing of the new airport site as it relates to the means of access to and from, the questions of servicing and what have you, which we feel should be answered prior to any further discussions as to geographic location.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Can the Prime Minister indicate when a decision might be arrived at in this important matter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot.

Mr. J. Renwick: By way of supplementary question of the Prime Minister, did the government make any recommendation to the government of Canada as to the order of priority of suggested sites within the Province of Ontario, bearing in mind its concern for the economic impact of the location of that site?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that we really established any priorities. We made the information available to the extent we could—our own plans as related to the Toronto-centred region and other considerations. But as I stated, in my view at least a basic concern at this moment relates to the economic influences as they in turn relate to the geographic location.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further supplementary question, does the Prime Minister not consider it important that the government of the Province of Ontario, having regard to the studies in the field of economics of the Province of Ontario, should make available to the government of Canada its precise recommendation as to the order of priorities with respect to the location of that airport?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course our priority will relate, to a certain extent at least, to the federal policy with respect to compensation or contribution in connection with services.

Mr. J. Renwick: A final supplementary question: Does the Prime Minister not think that the government is likely to find itself in the position where it is faced with the fait accompli without these matters having been worked out, if the government does not take a more effective stand in making known to the government of Canada the order of priorities as to the suggested location of the airport?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker. I am optimistic that the federal government will recognize that what we are now asking is very relevant, very necessary, and that we will be consulted before it comes to some final determination.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce has a supplementary?

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Prime Minister mean to say that despite the millions of dollars we have spent in studies at MTARTS, that all these transportation studies do not come into play now? Does the government not know the answer to these questions now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the member for Grey-Bruce, this is just what I said. We have made these studies available.

It gets down now to a question if it is to go to site "A", this means a four-lane highway to site "A." Does it mean water and sewage? What is the cost of this? Who pays for it? How does it compare with site "B" or "C"?

I think it is a very logical position for this government to take. This is the information we are now seeking.

Mr. Sargent: The government is seeking a new study now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am seeking to determine who is going to pay for it, which I thought would be of interest to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oshawa has a supplementary.

Mr. Pilkey: A supplementary to the Prime Minister: The federal government has been alleged to have submitted four sites to the Ontario government. Has the government selected any one of the four sites in responding to the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do apologize if I have not made myself clear.

We have not selected a site. The site is selected by the federal government, quite obviously. The federal government has asked us for certain points of view.

As I have explained, I hope, to the members of the House, before we can express these points of view we must find out from the federal government what the economics of any such decision will be. I think there were some 76 proposed sites in the initial stages. It is now very substantially reduced from that.

Mr. Pilkey: Yes, as I understand it the Ontario government—

Mr. Speaker: Does the member wish to place a supplementary question?

Mr. Pilkey: Yes. As I understand it the—

Mr. Speaker: No; the member may place a supplementary question, not his understanding of.

Mr. Pilkey: A supplementary question: If, as I understand it, the federal government is attempting to get an agreement on one of the four proposed sites, has the Ontario government agreed to any one of these sites on the basis of the federal government's request to the Ontario government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, obviously if we had agreed to a proposed site we would not even be discussing this now.

The answer is that we have not agreed to a proposed site.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Etobicoke, a supplementary.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question of the Prime Minister: Does the Prime Minister anticipate a thawing of relations and then arrival at an agreement prior to the next provincial election or is it possible that there may be some holding-back on the part of this government until after an election has been held?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think we have made it very obvious in the past few days that there is no holding-back as far as this government in this province is concerned.

We do not, as the member's own leader has observed, relate matters of Throne Speech, budget and policy decision to elections. We want to do business in the ordinary sense of the word and we think we are doing it very logically at this precise moment.

Mr. Singer: That is a sharp one!

Mr. Braithwaite: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Does the Prime Minister then indicate that there is no holding-back as to the possibility of the next election being held in the immediate future?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the member is very anxious to find out when it is to be. I am really not in a position to tell him today.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

CONFERENCE ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: A considerable time having elapsed since the Throne Speech, can he inform the House of his plans for the major conference on foreign control which he hopes to convene—when and under what circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if memory serves me correctly, we are talking about foreign investment, not foreign control.

The plans are moving along very well and I would hope by the early part of the week I shall have a statement to make so the member for Scarborough West will be fully informed as to how much progress we have made.

Mr. Lewis: That is fine. Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member will not be the opening speaker. No offence.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I will be glad to wind up.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): The hon. member will.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: Will the leader of the New Democratic Party be invited to participate in that conference?

Mr. T. P. Reid: No, Laxer will be teaching then.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is my thought, at this moment at least, to have observers from all political parties there to see what goes on. A definition of participation at this moment I really cannot determine.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, does not the Prime Minister recognize that the leader of the New Democratic Party is one of the best-informed persons in the Province of Ontario, if not in Canada, on the question which is the subject matter of that conference? Would he not believe that the success of the conference would be determined to a large extent by whether or not the leader of the New Democratic Party participated, other than as an observer in that conference?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Riverdale wishes to go to the hon. member of Scarborough West's nominating convention to make a speech endorsing his leader in that capacity, he may do so. I would only say to him I am quite aware of the member for Scarborough West's capacity in many directions—a capacity I will not define in this House. I think I will leave it there.

Mr. Stokes: I think the Prime Minister had better.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Can we submit a list of speakers?

ODC DIRECTOR'S INTERESTS

Mr. Lewis: Somewhat apprehensively, Mr. Speaker, I will move to my next question.

Could I put a question to the Minister of Economics and Development? When will the Minister of Economics and Development have for the House a statement on the Ontario Development Corporation and the question of possible conflict of interest on the board of the ODC?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I presume—

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry—Trade and Development.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well I did not know. I did not want to take over any of the duties of my colleague.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): I do not want any of his either!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well of course standing here watching the fellows over there is like seeing a Punch and Judy show. The statement will be forthcoming shortly, Mr. Speaker.

TORONTO-CENTRED REGION

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the provincial Treasurer: What has happened to all the various briefs and proposals put forward which may not, in fact, coincide with the principles of the Toronto-centred region that the government has now endorsed in advance of hearing all the submissions or appraising all the submissions?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are in the process of being sorted out and studied. There are a number of conflicts, large and small, with the original concept, on some the resolution is relatively easy, on others the resolution is not so easy. I would hope that within perhaps the next two months we would be in a position to detail the changes which have been made, which would give answers to a number of those briefs.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary: On at least one specific, I take it from the categorical assertion in the budget statement that Century City is now ruled out as a development within the Toronto-centred region.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would not draw that conclusion.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, how is it that Century City, in the middle of land otherwise designated within the Toronto-centred region, can be permitted when the budget statement says:

We intend to apply the main elements of the Toronto-centred region concept in deciding on proposals submitted. This reaffirmation of provincial intent should help to resolve a number of outstanding conflicts.

How are the two possibly compatible?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well I think if the hon. member goes back a little bit further than that he will find we have accepted the principle of it. In accepting the principle, there will be deviations from the original concept. I am not indicating to the member at this moment in time whether Century City should be such a deviation or not. As I have said, there are conflicts, some of which can be resolved easily and some of which are more difficult to resolve—but the resolution of them in my view will not change the overall conceptual nature of the plan that we have accepted.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I could ask the provincial Treasurer how he relates the pledges that were made both by himself and by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) that no final decision would be made until there was a long period of discussion with local municipalities, and his statement in the budget indicating that this is now virtually finalized?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is a long way from being virtually finalized.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a further supplementary? Will there be opportunities for open meetings with municipalities and a full opportunity of discussing any modifications of this plan?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The former Treasurer and myself and our officials are meeting daily with people in an attempt to sort out some of these problems.

Mr. Lewis: With right-wing deviations or left?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Down the middle!

Mr. Pitman: A further supplementary: Will there be an opportunity for open discussions—

Mr. Speaker: This is becoming repetitious.

Mr. Pitman:—between the officials of his department and these local officials?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: A number of meetings have already been held under the auspices of the department and the regional development councils and I anticipate there may well be more. Those meetings were fully open to the public.

An hon. member: There had better be more!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the provincial Treasurer: Do I take it from his budget that he is going to the federal-provincial conference in June to ask, on behalf of this government, for fiscal equivalence in cost-sharing programmes; that that will be the request of the government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, not necessarily at this conference. This conference is called to discuss certain matters in relation to the constitution, I think it is important however—and this was the point we attempted to make, and in my view did make, in the budget—that where these matters—the pensions, if I can put it that way, between Canada and some of the provinces which began some four or five years ago—where they concern matters of money related to responsibilities, those questions have not yet been settled.

We have come to the conclusion that depending on what ultimately may result from the white paper proposals in terms of legislation, this government at this time feels that it would have been better, and presumably on the basis of our present knowledge will be better, to opt out of certain shared-cost programmes, as has, for example, the Province of Quebec. I have indicated this to both the Minister of Finance for Canada and the Secretary of State. I would gather from the press clippings arising from certain remarks of the Prime Minister of Canada that neither of those gentlemen conveyed my remarks to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. MacNaughton):

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Supplementary to the—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question from the hon. member for Windsor West?

Mr. Singer: My question is a new one.

Mr. Peacock: A supplementary question of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: Has the Treasurer, since his budget, accepted the position of the government of Canada that Ontario cannot opt out until the expiration of the tax sharing agreement?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think that is correct with most of the agreements, the tax sharing agreements. We cannot opt out of anything tomorrow. They are matters of agreement, some of them for five years; some of them can be terminated with a period of notice given in advance by both parties and agreed to by both parties. We have simply indicated, as I have said, to the Minister of Finance and to the Secretary of State—and indicated formally in our budget on Monday—that as these matters come up for renegotiation, at this moment in time it would appear that we would be better to opt out of these agreements as they are renegotiated.

Mr. Peacock: What is the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The dates vary. For example, the post-secondary agreement has about another year and a half to run. On the other hand, we already have to talk about renegotiations; there have been meetings already. There are meetings going on in both health fields—hospitalization and medical care. Even though that agreement has another three years to run, the federal government initiated certain discussion.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: does the Treasurer then have an opting out formula which he has submitted, to which this House might have referral? Can he indicate to us what he expects—

Mr. Sargent: He would not tell the member anyway.

Mr. Lewis:—the fiscal equivalents in these medical plans to be? Does he know the dollar sum we are talking about?

Mr. Sargent: What a dreamer!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I cannot indicate those. There are existing opting out fiscal equivalents—

Mr. Lewis: They elapsed in 1968.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—but they are being paid presently to another province; if we start from that base, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia, with a supplementary.

Mr. Bullbrook: The leader of the New Democratic Party has somewhat asked the question. May I ask, by a supplementary question to the Treasurer, can the people of Ontario properly presume, since he wishes to change the policy and opt out of these agreements, that the government perpetrated a disservice to them in entering the agreements in the first place?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not think so. The wisdom of the moment is that we will be better to opt out. The wisdom of four or five years ago perhaps was something different.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has a new question?

INCOME TAX ASSISTANCE

Mr. Singer: Yes, I have a new question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Transport.

Does the Minister of Transport think it is reasonable and fair that a lady named Bea Clark, who was apparently the issuer of licences in the town of Georgetown, should run a display advertisement in the Georgetown Herald on April 15, saying "Let me do your income tax return" and sign it Bea Clark, motor vehicles office?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know that I can see anything terribly wrong with that. I suppose she wanted to direct the attention of possible income tax clients to her place of business.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not share my concern that one who apparently acts for the government and who wants to be helpful in preparing income tax returns is conveying the implication that a government employee preparing income tax returns can be of greater help than other people?

An hon. member: Is the member suggesting she has an in with the Liberals at Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is applicable in these circumstances. She is not, in fact, an employee of the government; she is an agent of the government.

Mr. Singer: Is this one of the ladies for whom patronage is part of our way of life?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Take the halo off.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

HAMILTON BOARD OF EDUCATION PROSECUTION OF FATHER

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Does the minister think it proper and fair that the Hamilton Board of Education should have pursued the father of a child who is not in attendance at school and who is almost 16 years of age, to the point where he has been placed in jail, taking into consideration the statement of the principal of the school that there was no purpose in his returning to school?

Hon. R. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, this is asking the minister to comment on the action taken by a board. The board has the authority under The Schools Administration Act to take the action that it did. I have no opinion one way or the other with respect to it. That is the law.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary? The hon. member for Waterloo North. I am sorry, did the hon. member for Wentworth have a supplementary?

Mr. Deans: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the minister if he does not feel, as the administrator of the Act, that he has the right to at least counsel with the Hamilton Board of Education to determine whether they should take into consideration the views of their employees who have the ultimate responsibilities for the education of those children before they follow a parent into court and have him committed to jail for 10 days?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may want to get the facts a bit straight. I do not know that it was the Hamilton Board of Education that brought the application for the man to be incarcerated.

The law is quite clear that there is a compulsory school attending age of 16 in this province. The way to change the law is through legislation, not by breaking it.

Mr. Lewis: Right!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Has the member ever made an amendment in the House to it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North had a supplementary.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): By way of supplementary, would the minister consider—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Does the member want to reduce the age?

Mr. Good:—amending the Act so that it would revert to where it was in 1968, so that the juvenile court officers across the province, who are very reluctant to enforce this Act, and the attendance officers, who also find it impossible to enforce, would not find themselves in such a precarious position where they have an Act which cannot and should not be enforced?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, aside from all the editorial comment in that question and the opinions there expressed, this government has no intention of lowering the compulsory school attending age in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary? The hon. member for Peterborough has a supplementary.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if the Minister of Education would consider seeking methods within that Act for allowing counselling to be done by various people within a board—a principal, guidance counsellor or directors of education—to decide whether alternatives to being in a school might not be more appropriate for persons between the ages of 14 and 16, particularly when they are failing and school means humiliation rather than victory, whether there might not be something that the minister could do in that regard?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very positive contribution. I think the hon. member will know that at one time there was a provision in The Schools Administration Act—

Mr. Pitman: Just a work permit.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—there were three different reasons for which a student between the ages of 14 and 16 could be excused from the provisions of this Act. They were removed by this Legislature and the compulsory age of 16 was re-enforced without the exceptions.

On the point that the member raised as to the alternative that should be found in lieu of actual attendance at school, I would be glad to take the hon. member's question under advisement.

It is interesting to note that the father in question comes from another jurisdiction where the compulsory age is only 15, and it may be that he was under some mistaken idea that that was sufficient.

Mr. Deans: No, he was not.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is interesting to note that in Great Britain, from which country he comes, there is a great deal of agitation to change their legislation and raise it to 16 or 17, if not 18. So that in many jurisdictions this whole question of the compulsory aspect of school attendance is a very interesting one.

There are some other countries which have no compulsory age at all and feel that this, in itself, has some built-in incentives. We have had a very interesting dialogue on this question and I find the proposition of the hon. member a very interesting one in that light.

Mr. Pitman: If I might ask one further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister would ask the school boards if, before any further efforts to bring parents into court under this Act take place, they would refer it to the minister in every case for consideration by his department and by his officials?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would say no. I do not want to interfere with the local operation of boards. Each situation must have some special circumstances.

Mr. Pitman: That is the very reason.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would suggest that prosecutions under this section are so rare that there must be exceptional circumstances in this case and that each case would have to be treated that way. I do not wish to interfere with the local operation of the board and the enforcement of the law.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): What is that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: But on the other hand, I am quite prepared, as we all should be, to always consider the import of the law and any changes that should be made in the law. This is where it should be done and not by the wilful breaking of it by someone who feels that he can take the law into his own hands.

Mr. Pitman: Well, bring in an amendment.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The member should bring in an amendment.

Mr. Pitman: Okay we will. In a few months we will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington South.

PETS IN ONTARIO HOUSING

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Would the minister clarify the position of the tenants of Ontario Housing in Guelph in relation to a letter they have received from Ontario Housing Corporation to rid their properties of pets by June 30 or take this as notice to vacate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question or else I would not have been able to deal with it at all, because I had not read this morning's paper. I was able to get a copy of the clipping and a copy of the letter that was sent out.

I should advise the hon. member that the letter itself was sent out by I guess one would call it the housing corporation—the housing authority at Guelph that manages the housing development in question for the Ontario Housing Corporation. However, I have seen the letter and I am not too happy with the manner in which it was written. There no doubt are some instances in which pets that are in OHC premises are destroying premises, and I think in those instances of course the housing authority of Guelph or any other housing authority is duty bound to make sure this does not happen. However, it appears to me there is a policy which is applied generally across all of OHC developments, and it is with respect to this particular policy that I am going to have the whole matter reviewed to come up with something that appears to me not quite as all-embracing as to cover everyone regardless of whether pets are a nuisance or not.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

REGIONAL AIR CARRIER SERVICE

Mr. Stokes: Thank you. I have a question of the Minister of Highways and Transport. Will the minister assure the people of Geraldton and Chapleau that he has not completely—

Mr. Singer: Forgotten.

Mr. Stokes: —put a moratorium on the airstrips in that area? And can the minister assure the House he will institute a regional carrier to operate in areas that are under-serviced at the present time in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely say there has been no decision that has been made that would injure the prospects of Geraldton and the other one—Chapleau—from being provided with services with respect to their requirements in the areas that the hon. member mentioned.

With respect to regional air carrier services, I would have to say that decision is not as clear-cut as it might be at this point in time. It is well understood, I believe, or should be, that Air Canada proposes to pull out of its regional air carrier services by 1973.

Certainly every effort is being made presently to ensure that the communities that will not be serviced by Air Canada will be serviced by regional carriers. There is going to be a good deal of consultation and deliberation in this field. I can safely say that we are very anxious that by that point in time there will be Ontario-based regional carriers to service these communities.

Some of them are now being serviced by out-of-province carriers. We would like to hope that by that time we can have an Ontario-based carrier or carriers to service these communities.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary: Can I assume from the minister's answer that he will be going forward with the "highways in the sky" programme instituted by his predecessor?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that programme will not stop. It is not altogether related to the other matters which he proposed—that is in terms of regional air carrier services—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): It is just like a song from Johnny Cash.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I would say that becomes what you might characterize as a third level service. We are not talking about the same thing. When we say regional services we are talking about those areas that are about to be abandoned by Air Canada. We should distinguish between that level and the third carrier level that is already in the process of being studied, in demonstration terms if you wish.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? If not, the member for York Centre—

Mr. Pitman: I would like to ask a further supplementary on that.

I wonder if the minister could indicate whether by the time Air Canada gets out of the regional carrier business, he will have a total grid for air services for eastern Ontario and northern Ontario and southern Ontario, due to the fact that it is not only those communities served by Air Canada that are involved in the erosion of air service in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I think in my previous answer the hon. member could have assumed that was correct because, as I mentioned before, there is a distinct difference between what is termed as regional carriers, which service is now being provided by Air Canada, and a third level of service that will, if you like, pick up those areas that are not presently being served. That is all in the mill now. It is all being pursued. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Pitman: When does the hon. minister expect to have that available? When will we know?

Mr. Sargent: Nineteen hundred and ninety on the path the government is going on now—1990.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any great reason for pessimism, but we are starting from scratch at the point in time when Air Canada said they were pulling out of the regional services—

Mr. Pitman: We are scratching pretty hard.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We had to start from that premise. The third-level carrier system that we are working on now, and which will be made manifest at least in study terms by a demonstration project to start in September—

Mr. Pitman: This September?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton:—this September. We have asked several Ontario-based carriers to respond to a request for evaluation of certain criteria at this level. Some of these reports are in, some of them will follow—and when that information is in and studied it is our intention to set up an actual demonstration project. Rather than employ consultants and take time and read a lot of paper we are going to undertake an actual demonstration project. That is as far as I can convey any information to the hon. member at this time, but it is being very vigorously pursued.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Yes, may I ask a supplementary? May I ask the minister when that demonstration project will get under way?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I thought, Mr. Speaker, that I mentioned we are trying to get it under way by September, hopefully by September.

Mr. Gaunt: That is a fairly firm date.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is our projected date, anyway.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

USE OF STUDDERED TIRES

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): a question of the Minister of Transport: Would the minister consider changing the basis of the ban on studded tires to that of vehicles licensed in Ontario, to avoid any possible embarrassment to drivers of vehicles coming from other jurisdictions? At the same time this would alleviate the burden of studs in the province without embarrassing people.

Mr. Stokes: No.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, that question was asked of me a few days ago and I made the observation then—and I think it is as valid today—that I do not know why we should place the automobile drivers of Ontario in one position and offer a different position to out-of-jurisdiction automobile drivers. I do not think it would be acceptable and I do not think it would be fair.

Mr. Sargent: What a stupid answer that is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not nice.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might very briefly correct a statement I made earlier? I find I made an error in relying on the news media report over the weekend that there had been the death of a second prisoner resulting from the Kingston riot. Apparently there is just the one death.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. J. Yaremko presented the 1969 annual report of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation, the 1969 annual report of the Ontario Telephone Commission, the 1969-1970 annual report of the Ontario Mental Health Foundation, the annual report of the Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario 1969-1970, the 1970 annual report of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson, from the standing private bills committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr17, An Act respecting Kedar Mines Limited.

Bill Pr22, An Act respecting Timothy Investments Limited.

Your committee recommends the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting The Thunder Bay Foundation.

Your committee recommends that fees, less the actual cost of training, be remitted on Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the Thunder Bay Foundation.

Mr. Speaker: In order that we may carry on the work of the House in accordance with previous agreements, I think the House would agree with me that we should now move to orders of the day, and at a later time we can come back to unfinished business in the previous orders.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the budget statement of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) on Monday of this week confirms the rapid escalation in the costs of operating this provincial government and its programmes. Setting 1967, Centennial Year, just four years ago, as a base, when our net general expenditure was $1.79 billion, it is predicted that this year Ontario will spend $4.26 billion. This is an increase of 133 per cent in our general expenditures in four years, averaging 33 per cent each year.

This uncontrolled rate of growth can be compared with the growth rate of the gross provincial product, that is the ability of this province to develop goods and services, estimated for this year at 8.9 per cent—a rate which, I bring to your attention, has never exceeded 10 per cent during these last four years.

This is the real delineation of the fiscal nightmare that has become a reality in this most prosperous province. We face the largest deficit in our history—$415 million—without adequate justification that provincial policy or initiative can control the spending machine set in motion or that the government has even identified the control mechanisms.

Even this year, when a special effort to control costs has been announced, government spending is increasing at the rate of 10.7 per cent. The government's efforts at cost-cutting have been pathetic and ineffectual.

Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to your attention eight specific items that bear out that contention.

First, centralized purchasing, announced two years ago, degenerated into a fiasco six months ago with the termination of the services of the senior administrative staff. Predicted savings of $10 million were never realized.

Second, the amalgamation of hospital insurance and medical insurance, announced September, 1970, was postponed at the time of that announcement until July, 1972. We are continuing with the duplication, the expensive efforts in sending out these premium notices four times a year for both of these programmes.

Third, efforts to reorganize the cabinet by the new Premier (Mr. Davis) are ludicrous as he unloads four of the old ministers and replaces them with seven new ones, ballooning the cabinet to 24 members, by far the largest in our history.

Next, the province has proceeded with a building programme exerting high inflationary pressure, which has included in the last three years the $64-million Queen's Park office complex, new buildings for The Departments of Agriculture, Financial and Commercial Affairs, the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, and others.

I have been criticized for calling the Ontario Institute a $60-million expenditure. I have been told by the former Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), and others, that it will in fact cost only $17 million but that we are purchasing it under an elaborate lease-back programme. In fact, we pay only $2 million a year for 30 years, and it appears that before our responsibilities are discharged it will in fact be a $60 million commitment, but as the former Minister of Education has said this includes the cost of janitorial services.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about attempts by the government to cut costs and I am talking about the elaborate building programme that has been going on for the last three or four years.

Ontario Place, which with moneys estimated in this budget will require a total of $26,483,000, is simply the cherry on the top.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): How much?

Mr. Nixon: The hon. minister says "How much?" I repeat for him, $26,483,000. This is the total of the sums that have been voted by the Legislature and which we are asked to vote this year to set Ontario Place in operation during these few months this summer. We know that it will be opening in a few weeks.

I think it is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the tender for the construction of this beautiful building—and it certainly is a beautiful building on stilts, built out on Lake Ontario in front of the exhibition—that the tender was let in August 1969, the peak of the inflationary period.

I am talking about the approach the government has toward cost-cutting—toward the responsible use of the more than $4 billion they extract from the community in taxes. They undertook just a few months ago an elaborate advertising programme on the theme "Is there any place you'd rather be?", designed to politically brainwash the people of Ontario while using their own money.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Is there any place the hon. member would rather be?

Mr. Nixon: We remember those ads, the colour television commercials, the full-page ads in all the dailies and weeklies, talking about Ontario: "Is there any place you'd rather be?" Very similar to the same programme under the responsibility of the then Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) that was inaugurated before the last election.

Now fortunately the former Premier (Mr. Robarts), who does not happen to be in his place this afternoon, realized that this was political dynamite. The programme failed. We now find the minister responsible has taken a new position in the back row of the Legislature and it is well known that he has a new position with a well known Toronto firm of hamburger stands.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): I can get 'em for you wholesale!

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the sixth item: The government persists in its expensive patronage commitments to its friends and its supporters, the most recent example being the automobile licence issuing offices used for the advantage of local Conservative supporters and costing an extra $3 million this year.

A case in point: The drivers' licence office in Kitchener is located at 701 Belmont Avenue West. The Department of Transport driver examination centre is at 449 Belmont Avenue West. Here is efficiency on the Tory style. These two offices are within half a mile of each other and still they cannot combine this licence issuing responsibility, which must be retained by the minister to dispense as only he sees fit.

There may be some excuse for part-time licence agents in isolated areas, but frankly I do not really accept even those excuses. After all there are OPP offices, highway garages, highways offices, and surely some other type of government office in every centre in Ontario. The only exception perhaps would be the county of Brant where I regret to inform you, Mr. Speaker, there are very few government offices of any description. However, if there are no offices of this type, the licences can be and should be mailed to those very few who would otherwise be inconvenienced.

This is patronage and it has no place of value where the work can be better and more practically done elsewhere. The former Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) explains that such patronage is part of our way of life. Now it costs an extra $3 million to finance only that programme. We as Liberals reject such a philosophy and we know that the people do to.

I want to continue with my review of the government's attempt to cut costs. The next one was the review of education costs announced by the Premier on two separate occasions.

I think you know, Mr. Speaker, that on the examination of this year's budget the amount we are asked to vote as members of the Legislature in support of our education programmes this year alone is $1.78 billion. We should understand that this does not include any of the funds which will be raised on the basis of local assessment and which it is the responsibility of local school boards to expend. This year alone, $200 million extra is being allocated under the direction of the new Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) as he puts his estimates before us.

My point is this, that the review of education costs by the standing committee on human resources has been emasculated by the Premier's refusal to provide support for independent research. Instead he gives the same responsibility for review to another inquiry, not responsible to the Legislature, conducted largely under the direction of Dr. J. R. McCarthy, Deputy Minister of Education until, I guess tomorrow night at midnight when he ends his term of office as deputy minister. He is well known as the author and director in the implementation of the county school board system.

Knowing Dr. McCarthy's ability and personal integrity as I do, the Premier may get more than he expects, but he expects a white-wash justification of his own years as Minister of Education, at the same time refusing an impartial investigation to be conducted in the public interests by the standing committee on human resources made up of members of this Legislature.

My next point: A review of hydro development and costs has also been announced by the new Premier. It will be directed by J. R. Dillon, formerly of the engineering faculty of University of Western Ontario. But he, in addition to his professional qualifications, is a former president of the London North Progressive Conservative Association. Now this does not disqualify him, but the Premier cannot expect a believably objective review of these two areas from the men he has selected to direct them. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he will receive at best recommendations tainted with the subjectivity of the reviewing authority, and at worst another political whitewash of the two great spending engines in our provincial system—education and Hydro.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): With no representation from the north.

Mr. Nixon: Obviously, we in the opposition support the establishment of any kind of a review because it has been put off for far too long. As a matter of fact, it was not—I believe about 1957 was the last time that a review of this type was established. Surely it is time that we had an objective understanding by those from the community to look at these costs. I am pointing out, Mr. Speaker, the flaw, not in the concept but in the implementation, the administration of the review under the direction of the new Premier.

The other regret I have is that there has not been a substantial review or an undertaking to review the cost of our medical and hospital insurance projects in this province. We believe that much more can be done with the scarce funds that we are asked to apply to the training of more doctors in the province and the funds that should go toward the establishment and strengthening of group practices in this province, particularly in those areas that are not well served by nearby urban centres.

These specific items—eight of them, Mr. Speaker—that I have drawn to your attention, head an endless list of facts proving that the present government will not undertake cost-cutting programmes that will contribute to the overall control of our runaway government expenditures.

I could, of course, go on and talk about the appointment of former ministers to positions on a variety of government boards and commissions, to their additional emolument. We are aware of this. We are simply here to say, Mr. Speaker, that after 28 years in office the government obviously cannot root itself out of these commitments to policies and people—commitments entered into over this period of time, more than a quarter of a century; commitments that are not authored by the new Premier so much as his predecessors, going right back to George Drew and probably beyond.

There is, of course, a remedy. It is the remedy that is available to anyone who believes in democracy; and that is to turf the administration out and replace them with men and women with new ideas, new policies; and that is the responsibility that is upon us, as Liberals, when we face an election this very year.

Now Mr. Speaker, there are several specific announcements in the budget that I want to deal with.

The first is the five per cent tax credit given to corporations installing new machinery. This money has been a political football for three years and more. The government imposed a sales tax of precisely five per cent on production machinery in the first place. The following year—that would be two years ago—the tax was removed and then reimposed the year after.

The recently announced tax credit is designed, I suppose, to trickle down to the working man in better employment prospects. The $125 million assigned for this item will help industry, will help the corporations and thus, I suppose, to that extent improve the provincial economy. But it will not put much meat on the table of the working man, whether he is in the factory or on the farm. I simply want to quote, from today's Toronto Daily Star, an item headed, "Tax Credits Will Mean Few Jobs." I quote as follows:

Two leading bank economists said yesterday they expect the $125-million investment credit programme provided for Ontario business in the latest provincial budget will have only "minor effect" in creating new jobs.

One described the move as "mainly political." Forest Rogers, chief economist of the Bank of Nova Scotia, said:

"It is hard to view it as anything but part of a game of politics in taking a different line than the federal government by encouraging business and making as much political mileage as possible out of it."

It has already been stated and admitted by the Treasurer himself that he cannot account for any new jobs that can be directly related to this programme; that in fact 90 per cent of the installation of new equipment would have taken place whether or not this programme was brought in.

It sounds a lot like the methods Herbert Hoover used back in 1931 to bring the United States out of the Depression: Give money to corporations and after they have had their say with it, enough will trickle down to end depression. Well it did not work for Herbert Hoover and I would predict to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is going to be equally ineffectual in solving the problems that beset the Province of Ontario.

We feel that the money would better have been used to remove at least a part of the sales tax on building materials, and in this way direct employment would be fostered as well as an improvement in the continually unfortunate housing situation in this province.

The only budgetary impact on the working man from the budget is the higher price of beer which we are told by the Treasurer will net about $8 million extra for governments and the brewers at the expense of the beer drinker.

We approve of the equalization of beer costs, but surely the imagination of the Treasurer might very well have reduced the northern cost to the level that is enjoyed, I suppose, by the beer drinkers across southern Ontario without simply escalating it as a further $8 million income source.

If he wanted to undertake some further improvement for those people who make their living and raise their families in northern Ontario, then surely he should do something about the equalization of the price of gasoline in the northern communities. I do not believe there is any reason for a continuation of this inequality.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party supports the inclusion of nursing home care under hospital insurance. We regret, of course, the postponement of the programme until April, 1972. As a matter of fact, it will not be a charge on this budget of any significance whatsoever, if at all, and therefore it is clearly brought forward merely as an election promise—which is all right; they are promising that they will do this a year from now if they are returned to office.

Well the $3.50-per-day deterrent for nursing home care will confiscate $105 out of the $135 per month that is received by the old-age pensioners in nursing homes, even though their hospital insurance premiums are fully paid up.

I want to be fair. The Treasurer had not made it clear whether or not these people will be left with a larger amount of those pension funds in their own hands and for their personal expenditure. But failing a further clarification, which must obviously come from the government, this $3.50 a day, while it might readily be payable by many people using the nursing home services, would be a very severe detriment to the usable parts of the programme under the federal and provincial combination in the provision of these pensions. I believe that this particular aspect must be set right before it is implemented a year from now.

Another matter: the Treasurer's announcement of a five per cent wage ceiling on civil servants asking for dislocations and strife in dealing with the public service. He knows it. It was substantially ill-advised.

I have referred to it as a ceiling in my remarks, even though the Premier in answer to questions a few moments ago said it is not a ceiling, that it is simply going to be an average and a guideline at that. But, Mr. Speaker, we should be aware of what kind of an imposition this will be on large numbers of people presently employed in the public service of the province.

As a part of the budget, we were informed that 69,000 people presently work for the government of Ontario. While a limit in growth has been set, still it indicates that working for the government, or the business of government, is growing more rapidly than any other enterprise in this province.

I was interested also to note that the largest downgrading in staff was going to be in The Department of Revenue. This department was supposed to be the example par excellence of how an administration could be run economically and in the best interests of the public. We felt that there should be no separate Department of Revenue. It was not necessary to have a separate minister with that responsibility, with the pay and perquisites that go with him—the car and all the rest.

At one time the minister said that he was going to use only a Chev as his ministerial automobile. I think he lived up to that, but oh boy what a Chev!

But it is interesting, you know, that now that the member for London South (Mr. White), has been relieved of his responsibility as Minister for Revenue, already 26 members of that department are slated to move out. So obviously even in the short few months that he was running what was supposed to be the best administered department in the government there was a lot of padding as far as personnel was concerned.

Hon. J. White (Minister of University Affairs): That is the result of my work.

An hon. member: Empire-building!

Mr. Nixon: But I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should be aware—

Hon. Mr. White: The member had better read that again.

Mr. Nixon: —that there are 70,000 people working for the government. Some are well paid indeed but at the other end of the scale —there are the janitors who are presently paid $4,350 per year. They are paid on an hourly basis, but if they work the hours prescribed by the regulations of The Department of Labour and The Department of Public Works, they get $4,350 a year.

These janitors are presently having their wage scale arbitrated before the arbitration board established by Act of this Legislature and administered by the government opposite. If the five per cent ceiling dictated by the Treasurer on Monday of this week is imposed, they will be granted a raise of $217 per year, giving them an elevation to a yearly salary of $4,577 per year.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is ample evidence in this case? I am prepared to say that there are others in the public service well paid indeed, and I see a number of them sitting under the galleries here this afternoon, I see them over there; but we are thinking of these large numbers of people who certainly will not be well served by the ceilings that have been imposed by the government opposite.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: With compulsory arbitration being the law of the province for these particular government employees, surely the government must abide by that arbitration without interference? The arbitrators agreed to by both sides must consider all factors in wage negotiations. Surely an arbitrary limit set by the government will make a farce of that particular system?

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: If we are going to continue with compulsory arbitration with no right to a legal strike, it must be clear that the government must and will abide by the arbitration awards without trying to influence the arbitrators in such a way as attempted by the Treasurer earlier this week.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we have become accustomed since 1968 to veiled threats and some not so veiled by the present Treasurer and his predecessor. Threats to establish a separate provincial income tax in Ontario. On March 4, 1969, the then Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), stated in the budget papers as follows:

The Ontario government intends to establish its own personal income tax system within the next two years. This move to independent income tax is necessary to preserve the province's fiscal integrity and to achieve meaningful tax reform in Ontario.

Since that time we have had a series of proposals from the present government all aimed at establishing the principles upon which the tax base for a separate provincial income tax might be established, including a renewed threat in the current budget. You will find it on page 8, second paragraph, Mr. Speaker, where the Treasurer in his pronouncements said:

If we are thwarted by the new federal tax legislation, the Ontario government is prepared to proceed independently.

Now this has been a course of substantial concern to politicians, admittedly because it would be a huge political issue. But the taxpayers feel that our levels of taxation are at the breaking point now and that we should not be considering this additional levy.

Such a course of action, the introduction of a second income tax in Ontario, double taxation, at least on that base, would be disastrous. Ontario taxpayers would have two different returns to fill out and would have to send them to two different governments. Administration of the scheme would be costly, perhaps as much as $5 million. Yet another group of tax experts will have to be hired to administer the tax.

The Treasurer has said, when I criticized him on this point previously, that of course it could be worked out in conjunction with the government of Canada. But I simply draw to your attention again what his predecessor said in the budget of March, 1969:

Ontario intends to establish its own personal income tax system. The move to independent income tax is necessary.

It sounds like a completely independent programme that is in the minds of the government and the Treasurer. We recall that in 1962 the then Premier, Mr. Robarts, parallel with the then Prime Minister of Canada, John Diefenbaker, established elaborate researches into the tax system of Canada and of Ontario.

The Carter report, which came down federally in 1967, has been translated into the white paper which has been discussed so much across Canada and probably no place more than in this Legislature in the last few weeks since we have had a new Treasurer, who is prepared to thrash through all that straw again.

We should not forget that during that same period researches into the tax system of Ontario were being undertaken by the Smith committee, which also reported in 1967. That committee on taxation studied the Ontario tax system exhaustively and in 1967 recommended against a separate provincial income tax in Ontario on the grounds that it would be needlessly costly and complex.

It recommended a continuation of the existing tax collection agreement with the federal government. What we do urgently require is closer consultation between the federal and provincial governments on tax reform and to this end I have proposed that the federal government include, along with its forthcoming proposals on tax reform—and they are expected within the next few weeks according to press reports—legislation setting out specific requirements and machinery for meaningful consultation with the provincial governments in detail on any proposed changes to the income tax or corporation income tax base.

It is difficult to have the kind of consultation which will mean anything when the attitude of the government of Ontario is the attitude of political confrontation, as it has been for the last few months, reaching new heights in the Speech from the Throne. We as Liberals believe that rather than creating a second tax bureaucracy at Queen's Park we ought to be thinking of doing away with part of the one we now have.

It is important to recall that the Smith committee recommended that we negotiate a collection agreement with the federal government for the corporate income tax, along the lines of the one we now have for the personal income tax. We should and must retain a general tax policy unit at the provincial level, but surely we need only one corporate tax collection and administration staff. Maintaining staffs both in Ottawa and in Ontario for this purpose is a waste of taxpayers' money. We should have one income tax system, both personal and corporate in Canada, with close and continuous consultation between the federal and provincial governments to determine its base and rate structure.

The budget continues in this particular vein—it continues the provincial programme of succession duties. This too is a costly, confusing duplication with federal estate tax machinery. We already share the federal estate tax to the extent of 20 per cent; provincial succession duties should be abolished and replaced with a federal-provincial agreement negotiated to raise the same amount of revenue.

Now that phrase should surely appeal to the Treasurer and to his predecessor, because we agree that tax reforms in themselves should not inflate the revenues from the tax base. If a government, either federal or provincial, does require additional revenues, it should be prepared to take the tough political decision to raise these rates if it considers this necessary. And by way of reform alone, we should simply be striving for equity and fairness for all, rather than increasing the take from the tax base.

The Treasurer has reiterated that position on many occasions, and from my reading I know that the Minister of Finance for Canada agrees with him. Since the opposition agrees—and we will hear from the NDP next week on some of these proposals—I would think that there is total agreement and that we could undertake this negotiation so that our share of the federal estate tax, if we get out of provincial succession duties entirely—which we recommend—would be accomplished without any loss of revenue as far as we are concerned.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): No, no, no! We will take a different position on that.

Mr. Nixon: Now Mr. Speaker, one of the most powerful checks on those who would subvert our democratic system is the need to raise the funds through taxes to pay for programmes to meet the needs of the community. This valuable requirement is weakened when governments use funds collected at other levels to pay for their own programmes.

I am simply stating the other side of the position put forward a moment ago when I say that our future, in the efficiency and equity of a national and provincial tax base, has to be one of co-operation. Modern government is not so simple that we can build walls between administrations and raise all of the taxes needed for our own purposes within our own taxing ambit. Fiscal transfers from federal to provincial governments, and from the province to the municipal governments, will always be with us, and if anything become more complex and sophisticated than they have in the past. But this government always emphasizes its contributions to assist municipalities even though these payments are made with so many strings attached that the decisive power is transferred from the municipalities to the province.

As a matter of fact, when I look at the tax bill that is rendered to me by the corporation of the township of South Dumfries, there is by law a section right on the tax bill which indicates quite clearly the provisions made by the government of Ontario to assist in keeping local taxes down.

I have no objection to that, because I think it is important in the democratic process that the people who receive the assistance from public funds know which level of government collects the taxes in the first place, because of course it is easy to introduce programmes, expensive and otherwise, if in fact the money to pay for them does not have to be levied by the same level of government. What this government does not recognize adequately, and what is therefore often ignored by the taxpayer, is the importance of federal payments in support of our own provincial programmes.

Our tax sharing agreement with Ottawa will net Ontario $1,078,000,000 from income and estate tax collections sent to Ottawa by the taxpayers and then sent back to the Ontario government. There is no objection to this. Our position, as Liberals, is that we must cooperate more and more on shared responsibilities in levying these taxes. But it must be understood by those people who see the deductions month by month, and who write out a sometimes substantial cheque just about this time of year and then send it away to Ottawa, that in fact the Premier has evidently been writing out some substantial cheques.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Not substantial, but cheques.

Mr. Nixon: I see, yes. From this collection we have our largest individual source of provincial revenue, this year estimated to be more than a billion dollars, which comes from Ottawa as is our right, by agreement to pay our provincial costs.

In addition to that we have a long list of shared-cost programmes which have been mentioned, in education, health, welfare, and other areas which are payable to the province, and these amount in this budgetary year to $450 million. I think the interesting thing to note is that while the Treasurer has announced that we are going to opt out of many of these shared cost programmes—and I am going to have something specific to say about that in a moment—these programmes are open-ended.

For example, the government of Canada, by agreement, pays half the cost of post-secondary education, which as you know includes half the cost of grade 13, but they have no control over the size of that programme at all. This is completely controlled by the government of Ontario, and specifically by the Minister of University Affairs, and so there is no federal control at all. It is an open-ended programme in which the government of Canada simply agrees to pay half, but all of the control and the administration is here.

Frankly, that has got to be a good deal. To opt out of that programme surely does not seem to be in the best interest of Ontario, because we have full control and we get to spend 50-cent dollars.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is Ottawa that—

Mr. Nixon: All right. Well, Mr. Speaker, the same is true of their commitment to health insurance, to welfare under the Canada Assistance Plan—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not quite now, not quite!

Mr. Nixon: All right, but in education it is wholly "quite."

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All right, but let us not include health insurance in that, which is half of the national average.

Mr. Nixon: All right, that is fine, but there is no control at the federal level other than to pay half the costs, and this has been a good deal for us, particularly in meeting education costs.

Mr. Speaker, in assessing what is transferred from Ottawa to us by tax collection agreement and by shared-cost programmes, the grand total is more than $1.77 billion. It is collected by the federal government but spent directly by the government of Ontario for provincial programmes. Now this means that 41 per cent of our 1971 budget of $4.26 billion is met either from fiscal transfers or by the provincial share available under the tax collection agreement.

This is the sort of thing that is never brought forward by the government, even though they are prepared to insist by law that their assistance to the municipality appears on the tax bills.

Now tax reform in Ontario is of substantial concern to us all. I was interested in what the Treasurer had to say about tax reform at the national level, because obviously we are all taxpayers in Canada as well as in Ontario, but surely our responsibility is to deal with provincial reforms as well, not simply to discuss the matter exclusively affecting Ottawa?

Our reform has consisted to date of irresponsible threats and a series of ad hoc, politically motivated handouts which have been called tax reform. The Treasurer a few days ago put a bill on this. He has now got it up to about $413 million—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Four hundred and sixty-one million dollars.

Mr. Nixon:—Four hundred and sixty-one million dollars, in tax reform, and in that he includes the takeover of the cost of the administration of justice back in 1967 as one of the cornerstones of tax reform. But surely tax reform has been ignored by this government opposite, and particularly in this budget there is nothing on it. There is nothing in it that deals with reform on the tax base of the province.

I want to tell you my personal case. Last September, in a move which was not a part of the budget a year ago, the former government decided to make payments to farmers to assist them in meeting their tax commitments and responsibilities. I am a farmer; I have 260 acres in Brant county which has been in the family for a long, long time. My assistance for tax payment amounted to $238. I am grateful, I suppose, as I should be. It was not quite enough to change my political stance, but let me say something more about it because—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member would have done himself a great service if he had.

Mr. Nixon: Let me just tell you a little bit about it, because I am concerned as a taxpayer that these cheques arrived in four separate envelopes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Has it got his picture on it?

Mr. Nixon: All right, each cheque had a picture of the Parliament Buildings in Toronto; each one was signed by Charles MacNaughton, Treasurer of Ontario; each had an enclosure from the hon. Darcy McKeough—who now sits almost directly across from me, and who was then minister of Municipal Affairs—explaining that this provincial programme was to assist farmers. Another note was included from the hon. Mr. Stewart, the estimable Minister of Agriculture and Food, explaining that it was designed to assist the farm economy.

I received it just after Christmas. There was a little bit of a foul-up there, because the government's other tax reform programme was made up of cheques for $50—no variation, they were all the same. That went to all of the pensioners in the province in receipt of guaranteed income supplement. Very popular, a nice Christmas present indeed; and believe me farmers and pensioners and others have not been dealt with fairly by this province or even the government of Canada because this is where real reforms are needed. It is not handouts that are looked for. The government degraded these people by this sort of so-called tax reform.

It is typical of this government that instead of attacking the root of the problem by relieving the property tax of the impossible burden of financing, now 45 per cent of the cost of education in the province, and by doing something as well about the highest combined Medicare and hospitalization premiums in the country, it has simply hired more civil servants to administer this complex programme of grants and rebates, a costly and inefficient excuse for genuine tax reform.

What they might have done was to do something in this budget for the low income people of this province. If the government was going to be consistent and say, "Here is some money for farmers. Here is some money for old age pensioners," they might very well have made out another few hundred thousand cheques for low income people in this province to give them a tax credit and assist them.

This would have been the consistent approach if, in fact, the government opposite had any consistency. Instead of that they took the $125 million, gave it to the corporations and said, "Now you fellows let this trickle down to where it will do the most good." You know where they think it will do the most good? It is not going to be in the pockets of the working people of this province.

Our second priority for reform must recognize that municipalities are under increasingly severe fiscal pressure. The property tax is simply not an adequate base to finance the many onerous expenditures for which municipal governments are now responsible. The minister opposite can say that he has undertaken to increase certain grants payable to regional governments. He is going to increase certain unconditional grants while recognizing that this is a very advantageous way to get the strings of control to lead directly to his former office in 801 Bay Street, the ministry of Municipal Affairs; to get the strings of control out of the municipalities.

But he has moved only a tiny bit in this direction. Instead of that, under his leadership—that is, the Treasurer's leadership when he was Minister of Municipal Affairs—there had been a series of regional governments imposed around this province which have been nothing but trouble.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Nixon: The costs in the Niagara region have escalated. St. Catharines feels that it has not been fairly nor properly dealt with in its petitioning to get out of regional government. The Premier has refused to see those people from St. Catharines saying—

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a point of order. I have not refused to see them.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier has not refused to see them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I have not.

Mr. Nixon: Has the Premier seen them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, but I have not refused.

An hon. member: The Prime Minister is not available.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): It takes a long time, does it not?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has not refused to see them but he has not seen them even though they have requested what they choose to call an audience.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): When the Stanley Cup playoffs are over, the Premier will see them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not seen any of the games for the last week.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly, there will be other occasions, if the Premier will permit me, to discuss the problems of regional government because this is a substantial issue—particularly the funding of local government—an issue which must concern taxpayers at all levels or the provincial government must take over 80 per cent of the costs of education from the municipalities—

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Nixon: —and finance it through the broader tax base of the province on a phased four-year programme.

This has been our position consistently since I became leader of the party in 1967. Believe me, it is eminently defensible now as it was then. As we approach the increasing tax problems and try to find the solutions for these tax problems, this appears to be the substantial cornerstone of the kind of reform that is needed. But there is one catch to it.

In order that the province does not lose to the federal government the amounts of property tax which, under present legislation, are deductible by farmers and corporations from the personal and corporate income taxes respectively, we require an agreement with the federal government to transfer the windfall increase in tax revenues back to the province.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: Now maybe the Treasurer sitting over there could not negotiate that agreement, but I will tell him, we could.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Davis: What agreement is that?

Mr. Nixon: I think it is interesting that the Premier turned to the Treasurer and said, "What agreement is that?"

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Premier wanted to know who the hon. member was.

Mr. Nixon: I see. The Premier knows who I am. I am the leader of the Liberal Party in the province and I am about to be Premier of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, specifically, when I talked about municipal reform I said that was our second priority. Our first priority must be to renounce the mindless political confrontation adopted by the government of Ontario in their dealings with the government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Grossmon: That is a good phrase.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: Page 9 of the budget statement makes a clear statement containing a clear threat that Ontario will block substantial advances in the constitutional review unless tax arrangements are changed. I have it here and I can read it.

Until there is substantial progress in tax sharing, and unless the province achieves better financial arrangements, I can see major obstacles in the way of any substantial advance in the other aspects of the constitutional review.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Shame, shame!

Mr. Nixon: I think that is a substantially serious statement of a blackmail threat that is the most ugly and divisive move in a federal-provincial war that was escalated since 1968 and now assumes irresponsible proportions.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: The government has gradually moved into a policy—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That new speech writer is not bad.

Mr. Nixon: This is very serious. The government has moved into a policy attitude which seriously undermines national unity. The vendetta against the federal government began in the Robarts-MacNaughton days, but the former Premier's recognition of Ontario's role as a national leader kept the attitude in check. Now this moderate approach has disappeared. It has gone. The new Premier has not the personal status to control the natural tendencies of his Treasurer to go to irresponsible extremes.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

An hon. member: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member just wishes that he had somebody as talented.

Mr. Nixon: The same lack of control was demonstrated by the Minister of Agriculture and Food earlier this session. He insisted on the fast passage of a law giving Ontario the power to seize and destroy farm products entering Ontario from other parts of Canada. Mind you, not coming in from Italy or coming from a banana republic in South America—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Which ones?

Mr. Nixon: —but from the other provinces of Canada, such as Quebec and Manitoba.

Aside from the fact that the Minister of Agriculture and Food knew that federal control legislation is before Parliament and that similar provincial legislation is presently being contested before the Supreme Court of Canada, he also knew that other provinces will be forced to retaliate to the ill-advised moves taken under the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture and Food and agreed to by the Premier, who seems to agree with all of his ministers without any direction from him.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: And important in this connection, Mr. Speaker, is that both the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture and Food forget that Ontario has a $2.6 billion trade surplus. Not with the world but simply with the other provinces of Canada. In the long run this protectionist attitude will not be in the best interests of our farmers or any other part of our economy.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: What I suppose is even worse, the policy balkanizes Canadian provinces with the old Conservative approach to tariff protection. Not to defend the boundaries of Canada but to defend the boundaries of Ontario.

I had an interesting evening last night. I was up in Victoria-Haliburton at a nomination convention.

An hon. member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nixon: I see the member over there looking at me.

Mr. Sopha: That is one we get.

Mr. Nixon: I could not help but think of the days when Mr. Frost, the former Premier, had to deal with the governments of Canada. He dealt with Mr. St. Laurent and which was probably much more difficult, former Prime Minister Diefenbaker. I always felt that while he had the ability to deal rigorously and in a businesslike fashion with the government of Canada, he did it as a government to a government. While under certain circumstances he might have been able to put his arm around John Diefenbaker and say, "Listen, John, maybe we can work something out," essentially Ontario's tradition has been to deal as government to government, not as political party to political party.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: Even the former Premier, who is absent this afternoon but would occupy seat No. 1 if he was here, was quite prepared to make speeches in which he was substantially critical of federal policy, but there was never an occasion at a federal-provincial conference—and I attended them as an observer, almost all of them that were open—in which he could not, almost palpably, exert the special responsibility that Ontario must exert as the keel, the balance wheel of Canada, in dealing with this government—

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: —of Canada and the sister provinces. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is what we have lost in the change of administration. The new Premier may be able to exert that influence when he goes to the federal-provincial conference in Victoria in June—

An hon. member: Leave that up to us.

Mr. Nixon: —but not if he is undercut by the Treasurer and the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: There was a time when, I suppose I would have some compunction about praising the former Premier. There were many things that he did that we felt were not in the best interests of this province. But what he could do was deal, from a position of strength and leadership and not from a position of political confrontation with his sister government.

We know that Ontario has one-third of Canada's population and one-half of Canada's wealth. The Conservatives are now prepared to reject the responsibility that this wealth and power must carry with it. They retreat to the discredited political confrontations of the 1930s which will be as politically disastrous for them as it was for the administration of Mr. Hepburn and the Liberals back in those days.

I adjure the premier officer to think about that, because I know he is a politician—if not par excellence, at least learning. This is a matter that must much concern him in his capacity as leader of the government before it concerns him in his capacity as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

In referring again specifically to the budget, it contained more than one diatribe against Ottawa. The budget speech descended to the picayune in comparing, for example, the number of summer students hired by the federal government with the number hired by Queen's Park. This foolishness I submit must come to an end.

We must get down to serious discussion with the federal government on vitally important questions—the continuation and the improvement of the tax sharing agreements, and particularly the kind of agreement that we must extract from the government of Canada on our share of the capital gains tax revenue.

The NDP, sitting to my left, have been talking about a separate capital gains tax. I am sure we will hear their views in more particular from the leader when he speaks next week. But this is another area where one capital gains tax is needed across Canada, but we as a province must bargain for our share, and these bargaining sessions should be undertaken. If they have not already been undertaken, they should be undertaken immediately.

We have got to stop indulging in this area of mutual recrimination, which has characterized the last three years but never more so than the attitude of the government during the last few weeks. The central theme of the budget speech is that the federal government has centralized power over the last few years.

I am not prepared to argue that. It may be so or it may not, but I think we have got to remember that the people of this Province of Ontario are residents here but they are citizens of Canada, and as citizens of Canada they have the right under our constitutions to vote for or vote against, to accept or reject, the policies of our federal party—the Liberals, the Conservatives and the NDP.

In the last election, they happened to have accepted the policies of the federal Liberal Party. And it is through that means that remedy can be found. The Parliament of Canada is quite established with responsibilities to support government policies or reject them. It seems strange that this government here has established itself as the main opposition to the policies of the government of Canada. It may be the feeling that the opposition is not being conducted appropriately in the House of Commons but, of course, that is their problem.

My position, obviously, is that we are not worrying about the centralizing aspects of the government of Canada when we are talking about the provincial budget. It is true that this government, however, is guilty of centralizing policies, if any government ever was. It has systematically centralized decision-making powers to Queen's Park in the last 28 years. We need only take the example of assessment, which was the responsibility of the present Treasurer in his former capacity.

For no demonstrative reason, and in the face of a recommendation of the Smith committee to the contrary, the provincial government took over the responsibility of assessment, a responsibility which should be, and will be, returned to the regional and county level within provincial guidelines.

The costs of centralized assessment are estimated in the present budget at $22 million for this year alone—far above the former county assessment costs. Further centralizing and planning, imposition of regional government and county school boards, have added to government complexity and costs and a true indication of who is the centralizing administration. It is the administration here in the province at Queen's Park.

I have made some reference to shared-cost programmes. I believe that we will always have shared-cost programmes. I would support the government, if it wanted to extract itself from these commitments with proper fiscal equivalents in those programmes which are essentially not open-ended. We can discuss this on other occasions, I know, but surely it is irresponsible, as the Treasurer did on Monday, to reject further shared-cost programmes. If national unity means anything, if Confederation means anything, then it is the responsibility of the government of Canada to give leadership in this, always with the kind of consultation that is needed, if these programmes can be accepted in a realistic base by the provinces taking part.

Mr. Speaker, there have been election rumours. We know that the life of this House ends automatically in November 1972—still a long time from now. If the government, the Conservative Party, wants to make a confrontation with the government of Canada the issue, then so be it.

But our position, of course, is that we must deal with provincial issues, the issues associated with the quality of education, the environment, economical development and jobs, local autonomy and a new partnership with the municipalities, the strengthening control of our business, our labour and our cultural endeavours.

I feel that it is time for new people and new ideas controlling the government of this province. It is, obviously, time for a change and we are going to the people to accomplish that change.

I was interested, just in the moment or two at my disposal, to see that at least the government has one strong supporter in the editors of the Globe and Mail—"Canada's national newspaper," it says at the top. I will read an excerpt from an editorial, dated Wednesday, April 28.

Ottawa's drive, both to fight inflation and end regional economic disparities, hits at the three most productive provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. It appears intended to produce economic equity across the country, not by helping all the provinces to become rich, but by punishing Ontario . . . into poverty.

I think of that poverty when I think of $27 million spent for Ontario Place, when I think of a $33 million Centennial Centre, a $60 million new building for the Institute for Studies in Education; and even the caviar that was served at the pollution conference just a few months ago. Bad poverty! Poverty in the eyes of the Globe and Mail and in the eyes of the government!

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) that the Treasurer's motion be amended by adding the following words:

This House regrets the failure of the government:

To eliminate wasteful expenditures of taxpayers' resources in lavish government structures, in excessive and uncontrolled provincial departmental bureaucracies and by having created and by continuing to encourage unnecessary and costly aspects of regional government and county school board hierarchies.

We regret the failure of the government to implement meaningful tax reform, which would relieve the burden on lower and middle-income groups, including farmers;

Their failure to establish realistic programmes to improve the environment, to increase housing and to stimulate northern development;

Their failure to develop a simple method of stimulating employment by reform of the Ontario Development Corporation and reduction of sales tax on production machinery and building materials, rather than the proposed costly cumbersome procedure, which fails to encourage Canadian manufacturers and for which there is no evidence that future net gains in employment will result;

Their failure to propose a programme of co-operation with the government of Canada and other provinces to achieve the goal of strengthening national unity, national tax reform and the modernizing of our constitution, rather than embarking upon a course of fiscal separation from the other provinces and the federal government.

Finally, we regret their failure to be bound by arbitration in connection with civil service salary negotiation and the arbitrary fixing of a maximum rate of increase in advance of any such negotiation.

Mr. Sopha: What we are going to put on that door is "Premier Nixon."

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer, the Treasurer's motion be amended by adding the following words:

That this House regrets the failure of the government:

To eliminate wasteful expenditures of taxpayers' resources in lavish government structures, in excessive and uncontrolled provincial departmental bureaucracies, and by having created and by continuing to encourage unnecessary and costly aspects of regional government and county school board hierarchies;

To implement meaningful tax reform which would relieve the burden on lower and middle-class income groups including farmers;

To establish realistic programmes to improve the environment;

To increase housing and to stimulate northern development;

To develop a simple method of stimulating employment by reform of the Ontario Development Corporation and reduction of sales tax on production machinery and building materials, rather than the proposed costly, cumbersome procedure which fails to encourage Canadian manufacturers, and for which there is no evidence that future net gains in employment will result;

To propose a programme of co-operation with the governments of Canada and other provinces to achieve the goal of strengthening national unity, national tax reform and modernizing of our constitution, rather than embarking upon a source of fiscal separation from the other provinces and the federal government;

To be bound by arbitration in connection with civil service salary negotiations and the arbitrary fixing of a maximum rate of increase in advance of any such negotiations.

An hon. member: The government would vote for that itself.

Mr. Lewis moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before calling the next order of business, I am sure the House would be interested in two rather significant events that have taken place.

Mr. Turner has apparently announced that The Public Order Act will be allowed to expire at midnight tomorrow.

I am sure the next statement will be greeted with the same enthusiasm across the House. I understand that Mr. Eric Kierans has resigned from the cabinet of the Prime Minister of Canada with one of the significant reasons being a disagreement with respect to economic policy including full employment.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why did the Premier bring that up?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): That is what he will be like.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) should rise in his place and thank me for restraining myself and not announcing it on CBC when he was performing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Before we left the orders of the day which we are following to allow the budget debate to continue, we were at the order of business of presenting reports and I think perhaps we should go back and continue from there and finish the business of the House today in the normal ordinary manner.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Meen, from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

The Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake;
The City of London;
The City of Sault Ste. Marie;
Triangle Swine Enterprises Limited;
The City of Guelph;
The City of Barrie;
The Borough of Etobicoke;
The City of Windsor;

To incorporate the Association of Natural Resources Technicians of Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Why do they not fix the PA system?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in response to numerous requests from all sides of the House, I am pleased to table this report on the disposition of public land for cottage purposes.

In it you will find interesting information for Ontario, other Canadian provinces and the United States. For example, there is an analysis of sales of Crown cottage lots in Ontario over a 20-year period. It shows that sales to non-residents have been fairly constant annually at about 16 per cent of total across the province. In certain parts, however, such as Algoma, Rainy River and Kenora, the proportion has been much higher. Methods of land disposition for other Canadian and American governmental agencies are also presented.

Public lands in Ontario were first sold for cottages about 1880. Cottages are important centres of recreation for many citizens. It is our belief, Mr. Speaker, that some of our vast area of recreational land should continue to be committed to this use. And it will be our resolve to devise a fair and equitable system of disposition to accommodate this use.

Mr. Sargent: It is a good job they bought the printing plant.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw the attention of the members of the House to significant days within the lives of countries with whom many of our people have close ties.

Today, celebrating their National Day are Israel and Japan. Tomorrow, the Netherlands observes its national day by celebrating the birthday of Her Majesty Queen Juliana, of great affection to the people of Canada in a personal way.

On Sunday, those of Polish descent in Canada and the western world will be celebrating one of the very significant days in the history of the Polish people, Constitution Day, May 3.

It is appropriate at this time that I remind the hon. members of the House of the press conference and reception which is being held at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning to which they will all have received invitations giving the details of a new reception service being inaugurated by our department at Toronto International Airport.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is the minister serving coffee?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview) Caviar?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We are not only serving coffee, we are serving Capuccino, which is Italian, with French croissants and Ukrainian babka.

Mr. Nixon: Ukrainian vodka?

Mr. Singer: At 9 o'clock in the morning?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Ukrainian babka. Whether a Calgary eye-opener will be served has yet to be decided.

There will be multilingual reception counsellors, some rather striking multilingual information kits and, of course, the multilingual breakfast to which I referred.

Mr. Singer: Multilingual breakfast?

Mr. Nixon: Sounds delightful.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Multi-ethnic breakfast.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Would you revert to introduction of bills, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker has an important engagement; the member was not here—no one was here with the bill, the bill can wait until tomorrow morning.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I wish to table the answers to the following questions standing on the order paper—questions 4, 5 and 10 (see appendix).

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 20th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD

Mr. Chairman: The Department of Agriculture and Food; vote 102, item 3, crop insurance. The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

On vote 102, item 3:

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks with regard to crop insurance. It is a little discouraging to look over the crop insurance commission report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1970. We are disappointed in that it has not gained more momentum in the Province of Ontario in the agricultural arts than it has to date, and probably one reason that it has not is the failure of the Province of Ontario to assume an equal share with the government of Canada in assisting it.

The acreage that corn covers in the Province of Ontario is very minor. I have some figures showing that 14,000 acres were covered in 1969 for corn and in 1970 went up to 33,000 acres, which is a sizable increase on the previous year—over 100 per cent—but I think the corn acreage in Ontario, if I recall correctly, figures out at about four per cent of the total acreage; it may even be less than that.

I noticed that in the county of Kent alone the corn acreage is 200,000 and we insured 33,000 acres; so there is some reluctance on the part of the farmers to accept this. One reason, I assume, is that farmers, being rather an independent group, can probably gamble provided they are growing more than one type of crop.

Soybean acreage was 19,000 in 1969, and that was the year, of course, when we had the heavy rainfalls in southwestern Ontario, especially Essex and Kent counties, where most of the soybeans are grown in the province. Insurance was taken out on that year, of course; the main reasons were that they could not get them planted and the late date for getting your contract in. So there were 19,000 acres insured. Of course, the loss ratio is very high for that year, and yet in 1970 we only had 13,000 acres insured; so in fact there were 6,000 fewer acres in soybeans insured in 1970 than there were in 1969. This again shows the reluctance of the agriculture people in Ontario to accept it and we are wondering just why they are not accepting it.

It would appear to me that the government of Ontario should share the responsibility of part of the premiums. Looking over the premiums, I noticed the annual premiums collected from insured persons were $373,000 and the government of Canada paid in $133,000. If the government of Ontario had paid an equal amount of $133,000, we could have lowered the premiums by about 30 per cent.

I think that we are going to have to take a real look at crop insurance to see if we cannot make it more palatable to people in the farming industry if we are going to continue with it. I do not think it seems too logical to continue with something that is only insuring three or four per cent of the total acreage; so it would appear to me that steps are going to have to be taken to make it look a little better.

The cost of the administration of this is very high, and here again I say that if we are going to pay the administration costs of this, as we have in this last report that I have, which shows that administration expenses shared equally by the government of Canada and the Province of Ontario were $424,000, our total income from premiums with unearned premium reserves came to $507,000, and in the same year we paid out $878,000 in claims and the cost of administration was 50 per cent of that, $424,000. It would seem to me that probably we could have three times as many acres insured and still probably operate for about the same rate—maybe a considerably higher acreage than that. There must be some steps taken by the government to encourage people to take this, I would think. If, in fact, after a period or four or five years it does not pick up any more than it does now, one would almost think that we will have to find a different method of crop insurance or crop catastrophe.

Maybe we will have to go into a crop catastrophe fund—that would be an alternative—but the crop insurance principle is good. We would think that it should be continued but it must have more participation by this government to get it rolling. The cost of administration is really serious, I think, considering the amount of acreage we insure. I was noticing one or two items on advertising and publicity.

Apparently, there is a lot of money spent on that—$46,000; rental of office space $34,000. That seems rather high, although I do not know how many employees they have. I see salaries are $179,000. There are some areas there that look very high and one wonders, as a layman looking over this report and having had some experience in claims and other types of insurance, I know that we could never have operated that way. We would have been bankrupt so I guess governments never go bankrupt, they just raise taxes.

I would think a minor influx of money into this programme may be the stimulus to get it off the ground. I would hope that—we mentioned this, I think, last year and maybe two years ago—the province should accept this responsibility and we still feel very strongly that it should. Then we will have another look at it after it makes up its mind to that.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I just want to underscore one point that my colleague has made. It seems to me that we are now coming to the crunch in crop insurance. As far as I am concerned, there are a number of items which can be dealt with and can be improved by way of some adjustment in the crop insurance plan.

It seems to me, however, that the main problem at the moment is enrolment. If we could get more farmers to enrol in the plan and to participate in the plan by way of insuring some form of their crop production, I think we are on the road to some improvement in the plan. But when we have such a small percentage of the farmers in the Province of Ontario taking part in the crop insurance plan, I think we have got some real problems.

Of course, it is an insurance principle that the more people you have enrolled, the lower your costs. It seems to me that we have now reached the point where we are going to have an infusion of provincial money into the fund, specifically by way of matching the federal government's contributions on premiums costs, to get the farmers into the plan. Then, I feel, once we get them in, they will see the benefit of the crop insurance programme generally and will continue to enroll year after year. But until we get them in, farmers will remain by and large outside the plan because they are, for some reason or other, suspicious of it or they do not think it offers them any real benefits. It seems to me that that is a clear cut priority insofar as The Department of Agriculture is concerned in its relationship to the crop insurance programme in this province.

I think we just have to do it. We have been talking about it for a number of years. I can recall talking about it the past several years, as my other colleagues have done. I think we have got to the point now where we are going to have to do it, for no other reason than just a simple experimental programme to see if we can get more farmers into the programme.

I am very interested in hearing what the minister has to say. I know he will say "That is an expenditure of public money that I am not prepared to spend at this time, because I am not sure what the benefits will be." But I am saying to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that I think it is worth a try because nothing else seems to work. I think that if we were to try that, at least we would know if the farmers would indeed enroll.

Mr. Chairman: Anyone else on crop insurance? The hon. minister.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks that have been made by my hon. friends. Naturally, we are all disappointed that there are not more people participating in the programme. However, I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Essex-Kent, he quoted from, I believe, the 1968-1969 report. Is that not the one he quoted from?

Mr. Ruston: The fourth annual report ending March 31—that would be the 1969 crop year.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That year we had about 3,100 people participating in the programme. Last year we had 4,200 people participating in the programme, which is about a 33½ per cent increase, is it not?

Mr. Ruston: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is a substantial increase anyway—well over 30 per cent—and it looks, with the interest that is coming along this year, as though there will be an increase of another 30 per cent this year so that is moving along. I think we would be satisfied with a 30 per cent advance in most programmes on an annual basis. There is broader coverage this year, certainly the bare ground coverage has been made available—many changes have been made in the plan, some as a result of matters that have been brought to our attention in a debate that was held on crop insurance when we were in committee stage downstairs—I think we had a half-day debate on that.

It was a good debate. There were many things brought to light there and we have had, through the crop insurance commission, a good many meetings with various production groups, such as commodity production boards. I think the crop insurance commission has attempted to integrate into its plans and amendments to its plans some of those ideas that I think are more in keeping with what those producers want. Certainly, this will be reflected in greater participation. We have well over 40 per cent of some crops—tomatoes for instance; well over 40 per cent I believe of, what is it, peas and what else? Sweet corn, is it? Yes, it will be well over 40 per cent as well this year, so these are rather high-risk crops and they are moving along.

The inclusion of forage corn, or at least a plan for forage corn, will attract and has attracted more interest than when we just had straight forage coverage. For some reason or other, farmers have never been interested and apparently are still not interested in applying for crop insurance on a forage crop such as hay or pasture and this kind of thing, even though we had those disastrous years, like 1965, throughout eastern Ontario.

The bare ground coverage is a fact and it is being offered this year. We have finally got the amendment through the federal government and we have amended our plan as well. It is now a fact and being offered across the province, I believe, at 30 cents an acre on all of the crop land insured for bare ground coverage. That is a major step forward and I look for better things to come as it comes along.

Vote 102, item 3, agreed to.

On item 4, extension:

Mr. Chairman: Anything on that activity? The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): This is one of the big areas, of course, in the department, the extension branch. It has over $4 million and a lot of it, of course, is taken up in salaries and each year we seem to continue—we add to the already large force of civil servants in this particular department.

I am concerned that there is not a greater effort being made for the younger person in the agricultural fields. I have thought that from time to time a programme initiated by the extension department through the various agricultural offices, somewhat comparable to the junior ranger programme, and carried out for a period during the summer months would be one of the ways by which we could do something for the younger people, not only in the farm communities but also in our urban areas close to the builtup areas.

As you possibly know, Pollution Probe has done a fair amount of work in organizing people in various cities to do work throughout that particular area. In the city of Woodstock, I know of a group of people—it was initiated by one of the schools—a group of students, and they went out on Saturdays and have cleaned up a lot of streams around that particular area. It is really amazing what these children come back and tell you. In fact, one of my daughters happens to be the secretary of it and they tell me about what they have picked up out of the streams and around them. They tell us that they could be engaged in this type of work almost endlessly to try to help in this particular area.

I really think that we could do something along this particular line, initiated by the department and by the particular agriculture office. In this way they would be teaching the youth of the area something to do. I feel that they would be doing a service to the area whereby the youth feel that they would be part of the community, part of Ontario and part of Canada.

At the moment we seem to be getting money to build institutions to put the children in at 16 and 17 to try to get them off drugs. I feel if we had some type of programme like that we could get a little more money out of some of these other programmes and not build these great big institutions with walls around them, and get them out in the country, we would be much further ahead.

Only this last weekend I had it brought to my attention that a 13-year-old girl had to be sent to one of the institutions and they just could not contain her. These are the type of people that we could help in a programme like this.

Maybe there should also be an initiative from the department to restore what we used to term the old Arbour Day. I would think that maybe we could have an Arbour Week so to speak, so we could do a tree planting job throughout every county in the province, and initiate a programme for the younger people that would not be just a one-year effort. I would like to see it on a permanent basis.

You would not need expensive buildings, because these youngsters would like to camp out or they would like to have some type of community effort. I can tell you, I think it would be something that would be a step in the right direction.

I have often thought that the extension branch—while they do a very good job in 4-H work and they have extended it out into other areas, other than the livestock fields—are not quite as competitive as they should be. I noticed, in the United States—and I do not want to be using them as an example—that they do have what they term regional shows for these 4-H children. They seem to take great pride in competing with outside areas and they seem to mingle better. They have one of their great rallies in Chicago every year where they have many thousands. I think this is a wonderful effort, that these people are recognized in this respect.

I think too often we in Ontario fail to give the 4-H movement the proper recognition after they have completed their course. I think too often we present them with some type of a little award and they go back into obscurity and they do not seem to carry out that particular intent that we had hoped they would. Maybe the minister might comment on those two areas.

Mr. K. C. Bolton (Middlesex South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer a few comments too in this section on extension. I think there is hardly any aspect of this department's work that is more important. We are constantly reminded that farmers are leaving the farm at a very rapid rate—I am told 3,000 a year. Whatever can be done to encourage the farmer to feel that he is a useful member of the community is of great value.

I commend the department on the work of the extension branch. I am very impressed with the personnel whom I have met in Middlesex county and the quality of the programme that is offered. I find that the 4-H clubs present the young people of the community with a great chance to develop their native skills and also to develop a better understanding of the rural community and have a greater sense of relationship with it. I hope that whatever else is done, nothing will ever be done to reduce the impact of the extension work that is being done.

I would like to make reference to one or two of the financial items. I am a little concerned about the amount set aside for farm safety, which appears to be only $10,000. Any of us who have ever worked around a farm know the great hazards that exist around the machinery, around the barns, and so on. I wonder if the farm safety campaign is a vigorous one? I speak out of ignorance. I do not know enough of the programme. It seems to me that if $10,000 represents the total investment in this very important area then it needs to be looked into. That is all I want to say in this particular area at the moment.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I would like to comment very briefly on this particular item, Mr. Chairman. I think that I too would join with the other members on this side of the House in the suggestion that this aspect of the work of The Department of Agriculture and Food is perhaps the most important.

I have had a number of occasions to have dinner and to meet with young people and with those who are representing the extension department of The Department of Agriculture and Food in the Peterborough area. I have also been invited to and have had an opportunity to participate in some of the summer courses that have been given and in the conferences that have been held.

What I would like to know is if the minister could give me any statistics on the number of young people who are involved in the 4-H programme, or a related programme, as related to the number of young people that there are on farms? What is the proportion of young people that he thinks he is reaching through the extension programme?

The second thing I would like to ask him is this: We know that many of these young people will not work on the farms for the rest of their lives; we know that they will work in a very different kind of farming for the rest of their lives, and what I am wondering is to what extent is his department engaged in some kind of research to provide a kind of a bridge between the rural and the urban environment?

Nearly all of these young people, of course, are going into large schools, usually in urban centres, if they are brought in from the country. To some extent this is, I suppose, a degree of influence in terms of urbanization. I realize that many of them are taking courses—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Is the hon. member the farm critic here?

Mr. Pitman:—I have a good many farmers in my area and I am very proud of them, and if the hon. member does not mind I would like to speak just for a moment on this—

Mr. Sargent: I am very touched.

Mr. Pitman: The hon. member may be very touched, but I think that it is one of the more important aspects of activity in the Peterborough area, if I might say so. I would like to ask one or two questions about this. To what extent are the minister's courses related to developing, in a sense, the bridge between the rural and the urban society, helping these young people to condition themselves—

Mr. Sargent: Prima donnas here.

Mr. Pitman:—to a different society in the future?

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on extension?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he could briefly outline this $211,000 that we are spending on developing agriculture in the north. When he is answering back he could answer that question.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, before he replies in regard to this extension branch, if I understand it the minister has a specialist from this branch go out and speak to groups of farmers and individual farmers. I understand there were about 150 meetings last year. I must say in regard to farm management, do these specialists—I regret to say I have never attended one of these meetings—inform the farmers about the outlook for different crops, advise them what to grow, and advise what livestock to go into? Is that the kind of management programme they discuss with the farmer?

Because we find today overproduction in so many lines, I did often wonder if these specialists in this extension branch give advice, or advise them to the best of their knowledge about what livestock and what is the outlook and what is the future with regard to agriculture.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of questions that have been asked of me.

First of all, I think the member for Oxford mentioned youth participation in conservation projects. Certainly, that is reinforcing and indeed endorsing the position that our government has already taken this year in what is known as the SWEEP programme, where under the Minister of Energy and Resources Management over 1,000 students will be engaged to do just what he is suggesting—working with the local conservation authorities across the province of Ontario.

As well, there will be about 4,000 urban young people—I think my hon. friend from Peterborough will be interested in this—in the ages from 13 to 15 years of age, coming out from the cities across Ontario, spending time with rural farm families, getting to know what happens on the farm, getting acquainted with farm life and having a break away from the urban community.

Mr. Pitman: Good.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It can only lead to a better understanding and relationship.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a question? Is this part of a government programme, that is, are these young people going out for an educational purpose, or are they going out actually to participate in the work of the farm?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, no, it is purely an educational programme. A rural-urban relationship programme will be carried out through a joint effort of our extension branch working with a special youth committee of The Department of Education.

Mr. Pitman: I do not want to interrupt the minister, but I wonder if I could ask just another question?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Pitman: I have always been very impressed by the efforts the department has been using to develop the idea of the farm as being a vacationland. Some very good pamphlets were put out to encourage the use of farming, relating farming to the tourist industry.

I was wondering if there had been any thought, particularly in some areas where agriculture is not very productive, of using the farm unit as a place where one might well take young people from inner city areas, where it might become, in a sense, a part of our whole development of trying to get kids out of the cities into the country and developing some kind of essential recreation; whether anyone thought of using agriculture, and the base of agriculture, with the air and soil and, in many cases, near rivers and lakes, whether there had been any thought of actually tying that in as one of the ways we might make the agricultural industry related to a very different kind of development in our society?

Mr. Innes: Exactly what I asked.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think the hon. member has a point there, but I have to remind him that somebody has to be in charge of that kind of a farm. They just cannot be taken out there and given nothing to do. Now I think it is better to spread those 4,000 young people who will be coming out at any one time across the various farm families, where they can live with families and enjoy themselves with relationships with their rural counterparts.

Mr. Pitman: I could not agree more.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have, as well, a good deal of interest being displayed by the corn companies in southwestern Ontario. We understand that between 4,500 and 6,000 students will be employed and there will be a corn detasseling programme in that part of the province. I would think that that would provide a good deal of employment and, I think, a certain amount of enjoyment to a good many otherwise unemployed rural youths this year.

With regard to farm safety, I am pleased to hear by hon. friend from Middlesex South's voice has recovered a wee bit and he is able to ask some questions today regarding farm safety. While our programme here accounts for $10,000, this $10,000 is available to the county branches of the farm safety council.

Our total grant to the farm safety council is something like $25,000, of which $10,000 is going to the local branches and the rest of it going to the council itself.

Then I believe there is also a contribution made to the farm safety council by the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board, having to do with its safety conscious programme as it applies to farm accidents.

With regard to the rural-urban relationships, my hon. friend from Peterborough raised this point, and I think we discussed this. I think he understands that we are very much interested in it. The member for York North has referred to the northern Ontario grants, and I have those grants here. I think it might be interesting if I were to send him a copy of that, because I can tell you it would take up a few pages of Hansard if I were to enunciate all of the grants that are available to northern Ontario.

They include special grants for lime subsidy to northern Ontario. These are special grants that are administered by the local county agricultural committees—I should say district agricultural committees in the north—where a group of farmers appointed from among themselves, with the local agricultural representative acting as secretary, determine how the grants that we make available to northern Ontario are to be spent in their particular district. For instance, you might have a district in Manitoulin, or we might have a district in Rainy River that would want to spend its money in a different manner than the district in Cochrane East or Cochrane north, or whatever it may be. So there are some differences. But we feel that that is the local decision of the local farmers. Now that amounts—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Administrated—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I beg your pardon?

Mr. W. Hodgson: Administered by the local people?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is right. The local people make the decisions as to how they want to spend the money. If they want to spend it on fencing or on lime or on land clearing or on wells or something like that, that is their business. But we simply say that you cannot spend it on new land clearing, but if you own a farm on which you need to clear some more land, then if you want to spend the money, that is your local committee's determination so to do.

We think it has worked out extremely well, because it is really taking the straitjacket approach away from it, and giving them some flexibility that perhaps they did not have in previous years.

My hon. friend from Kent asked for information advice to farm meetings. This, I think, is one of the great advantages and the strengths of our extension branch. I would like to read to you the attendance at group meetings:

Farm business management, 19,850 people; livestock management, 44,000 people; soils and crops management, 23,000 people; other extension branch meetings attendance, 87,000 people. Those are phenomenal figures across this province of ours.

Individual consultations on the farm or in the office—

Mr. Sargent: You are sounding like the former Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall).

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —livestock management, 14,000 consultations; individuals, soils and crops management, 15,000; financial management, 13,000; press releases from county offices on farm management, 2,700; radio broadcasts, 1,500; television programmes 87.

Then we have that continuing programme of our extension branch people on radio and television, putting these shows on almost on a weekly basis. This to me is the real strength of—

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister listen?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister listen in there too.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes I do; I must confess I do. I listen to that advice. I listen to that because I can use that advice on my own farm. No one knows how valuable that is any more than I do. So really our farm management programme, to me, is simply an outstanding programme.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Right!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think we have to recognize these men are reinforced in what they are doing; that is, they are guided in what they have to say on a year-to-year basis by interpreting the federal-provincial outlook conferences that are held. Now here is the opportunity for us to learn what they are saying.

Mr. Spence: We have surpluses in different segments of agricultural society.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have what?

Mr. Spence: We have surpluses—such as overproduction in pork.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sure, that is right.

Mr. Spence: Has this extension branch advised the farmer not to overproduce pork or not to overproduce eggs?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, indeed. They interpret those things, you see from—

Mr. Sargent: Control production.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —the federal-provincial outlook conference—we had been told, and we could see that there was going to be a surplus of pork. Now we have interpreted that too to the local farmer, whether he wants to believe it or not.

But what is a farmer to do? If he has pork production facilities, if he has got high silos for high moisture corn—this kind of thing—if he has geared his whole production to that, is he going to stop overnight because somebody in the west has got the idea he is going to jump into hogs when he cannot sell grain? He will jump out again just as fast next year if he can sell the grain. I think you have to recognize that some of our farmers are going to continue production.

That really is the job that the extension branch is trying to do and I think it is doing a right good job at it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister has dealt with the overall participation of large groups of people of the farming community across Ontario over the year in mass meetings. That is good. I think misery loves company.

But the point that I am concerned with, along with the member for Peterborough, is that I have a lot of farmers in my area. I am not too smart on the farm operation—in fact, I am not too smart period—but the thing is that we have a lot of farms going out of production, progressively, week after week. The manufacturing capacity of these plants in gone forever unless Mr. Crown gets into the act, through the ARDA programme, to make these mass operations. I think it is coming to that.

But I am wondering if we could not, somewhere along the line, in the terms of reference of the extension branch—for which we are paying $2 million in the first section of the vote here—if there are not across Ontario hundreds or thousands of successful retired farmers who know a lot of the answers, who have made all the mistakes there are to make in agriculture.

Could they not be retained by the minister's department to take a group of farmers and supervise them insofar—as my friend from Kent says—insofar as the many hundreds of decisions they must make in the operation of a farm and getting into things like controlled production?

I do not know the many facets in that, but today we met with the federal people. We had Gordon Hill and Jim Jacklin and the boys. We have in the federation people who are dedicated and concerned, but they can only do certain things in the overall picture. Then we have the pros in the minister's group who are knowledgeable people, and we are lucky to have them.

But I would like to ask, going along with what my friend from Kent says, if we could not take this mass meeting programme the minister is talking about and break it down into individual operations to make these farms viable operations that can be successful. Because no matter what the minister does, unless we have these people making money at the local level, then farming, the small family farm, is going to be a thing of the past.

So in extension, has any thought ever been given to retaining 1,000 successful men and giving them areas to supervise, to do a concentrated job on these people?

Mr. Innes: Do not give them any more men. They have too many now.

Mr. Sargent: Maybe they would do it. Not for pay but for the love of agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend from Oxford county says: "Do not do that. It is costing too much to run the extension branch now."

Mr. Innes: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have got too many men now; that is what he said, so perhaps we should take his advice into consideration.

Mr. Sargent: If he said that, I will buy it. It is right.

Mr. Innes: I do not say it. The people out in the country say it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: But my hon. friend from Grey South has introduced—

Mr. Sargent: Bruce! That is a dirty word, Grey South.

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): It is not. It is a darn good riding.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Grey-Bruce, sorry—an idea that may have a good deal of merit. I would suggest however—

Mr. Sargent: The minister must not con me. Come on. You see when a minister gets the best from us he is nice, he suggests that it is a good idea. The minister wants to get off the hook as fast as he can. Everybody has a good idea, but will the minister do something about it though?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There is not a reason in the world why not, but I am talking about this year's estimates and it is not in this year's estimates. I cannot say whether I can put it into next year's estimates until I get some approval for the budget.

Mr. Sargent: The Treasurer will put it in.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: But the Treasurer is not here, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to speak for him.

Let me say that we will take that idea under consideration. There is really nothing in the world to hinder a group of farmers employing the services of some of those highly regarded retired farmers around the country—

Mr. Sargent: Oh! There the minister goes, passing the buck again.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —to do the job themselves. I think they might appreciate it better if they were to initiate the idea than if we were to do it.

Mr. Sargent: Would the minister loan them $1 million to do it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend from Peterborough asked me a question a moment ago about the relationship between 4-H members and the total rural youth of our community. I cannot give him that exact breakdown, but, if I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention this in this debate because I think it is very important.

As far as the 4-H participation in agricultural clubs is concerned, we have just under 9,000 rural young people participating in agricultural clubs. We have something like just under 17,000 participating in homemaking clubs in this province. That is a pretty sizable number of young people.

Mr. Pitman: Is that up or down over the last 10 years?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, it is holding about even. The girls' homemaking clubs are increasing, I believe. I think the agricultural clubs are about even, are they not?

Mr. Pitman: In spite of the drop in farm population?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, that is right. Now, there are some clubs, particularly the girls' homemaking clubs, that are involving girls from the smaller towns and cities and villages of Ontario. They are involved in these clubs as well, so that there is that on-going relationship. Of course, those clubs take girls in a certain age bracket; they take part for about three years. It is just a revolving number of young people.

So, the impact of the 4-H club movement on rural Ontario is simply phenomenal. There is no other way to describe it.

While the member is quite right—a number of these young people will never stay on the farms—the idea of the acceptance of responsibility in 4-H club work is something that will stay with them wherever they go. To me that is the crux of the whole thing and that is why we think it is a very important programme.

Mr. Chairman: Will item 4 carry?

The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: While the minister and I are in agreement on that point, I just want to follow up on this business of the farm management meetings and what the minister's management specialists are doing.

Specifically, I want to refer to a speech given by Dick Heard at the soil and crop meeting this past February, I believe it was, here in Toronto. It was at the time that we had the terrific snowstorm in any case. I think that was February. He said that a farmer could make an extra 30 cents a hog if he got his credit through the bank, rather than through the feed company.

That type of thing makes good sense to me. I think this is the kind of thing that these farm management specialists should be doing. I congratulate both Mr. Heard and the department, because many farmers just do not take time to sit down with a pencil and figure these things out. They read a farm paper once in a while. They do not even do that when they are busy in the summertime.

It seems to me that this is good stuff. It is practical. It can be put to immediate use by the farmer involved. He went on to say that many of the feed mills charge 1.5 per cent per month for outstanding accounts, which amounts to, I think, some 60 cents on $20 worth of feed. Or, to put it another way, he said that a farmer could be in pocket something in the neighbourhood of $300 per year if he were shipping 1,000 hogs a year.

I want to ask the minister, in view of what I have said about it, and it is of very real value to a farmer, what the department does by way of followup. Is this the kind of information that is given out at the management schools and in his broadcasts and so on? And specifically, did this information get out over the air waves and at these various meetings?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, indeed it is. It is discussed at those meetings and it is also published through our information service. There is a booklet just off the press now updating these figures, which is available to anyone who wants it.

It is difficult though, and I am not sure why, to persuade farmers to go to the bank and work out a credit arrangement with the local bank. A feed company salesman comes in and says: "Look, you do not have to do that. We will provide this for you. You know, all you have to do is sign here and you do not need to worry about it at all. We will provide the feed and when you sell the hogs, it is all taken care of."

And this is the incredible part. How do you stop that kind of thing? How do you save people from themselves? This is a question that I do not know how to answer. The member is perfectly right and Dick Heard is perfectly right. The extension branch staff is doing everything it can to assist farmers to make those management decisions.

Credit to me is just like another tractor. It is just another vehicle or another implement that you use on the farm. No one thinks of going out and buying a tractor—he should not think of it, anyway—that is too big for his needs, thus losing money on the value of the tractor. Why would he go out and spend money for credit that he should not be spending? These are the things that I wish I knew—

Mr. Innes: Lower depreciation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —the answer to, but I really do not know. But the point is well taken and all we can do is keep hammering away at that point every place we can.

Mr. Gaunt: I think bank managers overawe farmers, Mr. Chairman. I think the bank manager is successful in trying to convince the farmer that he knows more about farming than the farmer himself, and I think in that respect—

Interjection by an hon. member

Mr. Gaunt: —he overawes him. Perhaps some of these farmers will get up on their hind legs and start making their views felt.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on extension?

Vote 102, item 4 agreed to.

On item 5, home economics:

Mr. Gaunt: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: I notice that in the vote for agricultural production there is a reduction in the total amount of the estimates this year for 1971-1972, as compared to the 1970-1971 estimates. I hope that reduction of some $4 million did not involve the home economics branch in view of the personnel who happened to head up that department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, no; no such thing as that.

Mr. Gaunt: Just as a matter of interest, where does the cut come or where do—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There are not as many automobiles being purchased for that particular branch this year.

Mr. Gaunt: Oh, so they do not need more automobiles?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, sure they do, but rather than deal them as regularly, as we have been doing, we are trying to get a little more mileage out of them so we have decreased the purchasing for this year. I think it amounts to about $4,000.

Mr. Gaunt: I see. They are not going to trade them in?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Perhaps not as often.

Vote 102, item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, livestock service:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a little bit about this. Throughout the Province of Ontario we have quite a sizable number of institutions that have quite large herds on them, and for some years I have complained that we have not got the proper mileage in our research efforts in these particular herds.

I would like to ask the minister how many head of livestock are currently on the research institutions throughout the province? This would include the farms of Correctional Services too, which I hope are being utilized, and if they are not I would be very disappointed because I have heard rumours that they are not being utilized to the extent that they should be.

Another problem which concerns me is that in this particular research programme we do have in the province three large artificial insemination units, which by reason of their interest in their particular area have accumulated around them very fine animals which have gone through test procedures and are very creditable to their particular area. But we do have another faction, so to speak, at the university carrying on a programme almost similar to what we in our particular organization are trying to do.

At the moment they have a few sires that they feel we should have in our units throughout the province and they would like to dispose of them. But we, in our three large artificial insemination units—which are the backbone of the livestock industry in the Province of Ontario and you have to believe it, in the dairy and beef operations—have in the neighbourhood, I suppose, of maybe 500 or 600 bulls on a type of test programme.

We would like to ask the department to co-operate with us and help utilize these bulls and to prove them. We feel we have personnel who are capable of picking out these bulls as such, and we feel if they have 500 to pick from surely the scientists at Guelph can pick out a number out of that 500 which would suit them? But they apparently feel the breeders who have been successful in their own operations are not capable of doing this.

This is of concern to every AI organization in the Province of Ontario and they, directly or indirectly, represent every livestock breeder. They are either directly or indirectly a member of one of the three co-operatives. This is one of the problems which concerns me, and it concerns me very much, because at the moment it is most essential that we have more animals proved that we can recommend to our breeders.

Each year we are told by the University of Guelph and the research institute that we should be stepping up our potential numbers—and I agree 100 per cent—yet they are the people who in some respects are hampering us when they could be helping us. I say this is not right and we would like to co-operate with them. I hope the minister will comment on this.

Now I want to mention a little bit about the—pardon me, Mr. Chairman. Does DHIA come under this too?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Innes: Well, of course, along the same line it gets into the sire programme and I want to talk a little bit about DHIA and the ROP. ROP, of course, is the federal programme and DHIA is the provincial programme.

I want to compliment the minister for incorporating some central testing labs for milk in the Province of Ontario and to tell him I think they are doing an excellent job. But the operators do tell me they have ample room to test almost double or triple their capacity, and I would like to hope that his extension people and the people who are—we go back to the specialists again, because I think they could be doing a little bit more along this particular line to encourage farmers and agriculturalists to be on a programme whereby they can make more money by utilizing the proper techniques that are currently available to them.

I am of the opinion that while this programme has been reasonably successful, the percentages now currently on test are not very much different from last year in spite of all the extra enthusiasm that we have put into it—not only the department but the various organizations. This is what I would like to ask him, because I do feel in all fairness that this is one of the areas where the farmer could increase his revenue as an individual farmer if he would take more interest in these particular programmes.

Britain, of course, has a compulsory system—it is carried out by their marketing board and has proved quite successful—but we in the Province of Ontario at the moment are a little dubious about the compulsory aspect of it. On the long run I really think this would be the best thing, but it would be very hard to incorporate into a programme, I agree. If there is some other method the extension people could utilize and try to incorporate this, I think they would be well advised to do so.

I wanted to speak a little bit about the bull index system. This relates again to the need for an overall programme in the Beef Improvement Association. It is estimated that this year in the Province of Ontario 250 bulls will be tested and that in the province more than 4,000 new breeding bulls are needed each year. Dr. Jim Wilton of the department of animal science at the University of Guelph has asked specifically that this one resource the department could help should be stepped up in a progressive nature, if at all possible. Some other programmes are being carried out in various other provinces, but I do feel that we need a standard programme in this province and that we should continually try to upgrade this not only in the beef but in the dairy.

So I would invite the minister to comment on these two particular aspects of something I feel is very important to the average livestock man particularly throughout the province, because if he is keeping livestock when they should be keeping him, he is going to lose money—and I kid you not.

Mr. Chairman: Does anyone wish to discuss the matter further? The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister about a different subject—to do with the promotion of breeding cattle exports. Maybe he would like to answer the hon. member first.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The points raised by the hon. member for Oxford are of great interest. The research facilities involving livestock will, I think more appropriately come under the vote for research and agricultural education when that comes along. We do not have those figures here as to the total number of livestock involved. I assume we can get them; they are maybe in the book later on. I am not sure, but we will have a look at it.

With regard to artificial insemination, my deputy advises me that he has just received a letter requesting a meeting with representatives of the artificial insemination units and with myself and with him, so I assume that the points that the hon. member for Oxford has raised will likely be the basis for discussion, at least part of it anyway, since I know he is very much involved in those AI units.

We will certainly take a look at these things. I was not aware that there was any real problem.

With regard to some of the other institutions, particularly reform institutions, there was an extensive beef breeding programme that went on I believe at the Burwash farm, and I think I have heard—has it been closed out? No? But some of the beef bulls that were on that farm were offered to the artificial insemination units, and some dairy bulls as well. I know that our department took some of those bulls from the Burwash farm and are using them on our farm at the New Liskeard agricultural college. However, we will take a look at that.

With regard to DHIA, it is interesting to note that during 1970 there were 1,312 herds with over 46,000 cows enrolled in the supervised plan, and 1,885 herds with 51,735 cows in the owner-sampler plan. During 1970 we were happy to be able to accommodate practically every farmer who wanted to get on to the cow testing programme.

I think it is interesting as well, Mr. Chairman, to look back over the records of DHIA participation, or at least milk recording, in the Province of Ontario. In 1968, 18.2 per cent of the cows in Ontario were on test. In 1969 it was 21.1 per cent, and then in 1970, even with the decrease in the total number of cows in Ontario, we still have 20.7 per cent on test.

When you relate this testing programme to the number of herds on test, we have 29 per cent of the dairy herds of Ontario on test. This to me is a fairly significant figure—the highest of any province in Canada except British Columbia where, of course, most of the dairy herd are producers of fluid milk and I think it is fair to say that they have been in the vanguard of milk recording programmes throughout.

We intend—and I would like to make this announcement, Mr. Chairman—to appoint a DHIA advisory committee which will be comprised of producer representatives, as well as perhaps a few from the civil service in an advisory capacity. We feel that we want to do everything to bring about some of the desirable objectives to which my hon. friend from Oxford referred. We all seek those objectives.

We would like to see greater participation in milk recording programmes and we think one way to bring it about is to perhaps have a co-ordination of thought among producers who would be members of this advisory committee. We then want as well to nominate a few ourselves.

I think that committee can be of immeasurable help to our livestock commissioner and to the department in trying to strengthen the work of milk recording in this province.

Mr. Innes: Could I ask the minister a question? Could he tell me the number of owner-samplers that are included? What is the percentage of owner-samplers?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The owner samplers: 1,885 herds—

Mr. Innes: What percentage?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —with 51,735 cows. That is larger than the number of cows on the supervised plan—5.7 per cent in comparison with the 5.1 per cent under the supervised plan and 9.8 per cent under ROP.

Mr. Innes: One of the areas that concerns me very much is that we do not use the owner sampler plan, we do not recognize it as an official testing programme. And one of the problems that has been brought to my attention is that in the inspection of these particular herds, where we have the inspectors going out and collecting the samples at the various farms, they invariably get a route that they like and they get some of these friendly people and they seem to keep them on the owner sampler almost indefinitely.

Mr. Ruston: They ask him to dinner?

Mr. Innes: Maybe they ask him to a dinner or two, I don't know. But anyway, this has been brought to my attention. If we are going to grade this up, they should try to encourage the owner sampler people to get up to the DHI status so that we can utilize their figures in our computations of our indexing of bulls. This is one of our real problems. I suppose, maybe indirectly, I am sort of responsible for that owner sampler because I brought it up here many, many years ago. It was sort of a stopgap to get them into the DHI end of it, but really it has not—

Mr. Gaunt: All the good ideas come from over here.

Mr. Innes: —stepped up the way I had hoped it would.

An hon. member: Because the member was away for a while.

Mr. Innes: I think that this could be looked into to try and encourage these people. I really think a lot of people are losing a lot of money in the resale value of their cattle by not just going that extra mile, so to speak, and not knowing the value of their cattle.

I want to ask the minister one more question, and this is in regard to the Correctional Services department and where the cattle are at the moment. I understand that they are not being utilized to the capacity that they really should be and I would hope that if this does happen to be the case the department would set up a programme for Correctional Services, whereby the two departments could operate in an area that would give us proper research of beef cattle that they do have on those particular farms.

I understand that some of the farms are not even recording the bulls that are being used, and this is rather disgraceful if this is true, and I am not going to say that it is—it is just what is told to me. If this is the case, I think it is rather disgraceful.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I appreciate the hon. member's advice, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Item 6. The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, there are two points I wanted to ask. First of all, does this programme on livestock services this year change the emphasis and assistance given breeders in the Timiskaming area, New Liskeard? I have had complaints in the past that the programme in that area was overly directed toward the beef, whereas there is a very large and increasing dairy production in that area. The dairy farmers in that area have indicated to me that they have been endeavouring for some time to get a lot more assistance from the department with regard to the dairy herds in that area. I would appreciate the minister's comments on what the programme forecast for the coming year includes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is this for the Timiskaming district?

Mr. Deacon: Yes, for the Timiskaming district. The fact is that within the New Liskeard area particularly there is quite an increase in dairy production. They feel that the department should be increasing its services to the dairy farmers in that area.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I must confess that this is all news to me. If they have relayed it to you, they certainly have not relayed it to us. I must confess, too, that as far as I am concerned, we have nothing to say about how they spend the local grant in the area. That is the determination of the local people involved.

I attended a Holstein-Friesian twilight meeting in the New Liskeard district last summer. I met a host of Holstein breeders there and I was greatly impressed with the quality of the livestock I saw on that particular farm and the interest and enthusiasm of the breeders who were at that meeting. I never heard a person say that we were not doing enough to help them in whatever project they wanted. If they wanted to spend more of their local grant, as I advised my friend from York North, they can make that determination themselves.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could indicate if there is any dairy programme going on at the New Liskeard farm?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, there is not. It is entirely beef on that farm.

Mr. Deacon: Would there be any consideration to introducing a dairy programme there in the light of the increasing dairy production in the area?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Chairman. I will have to say no because I think we have to recognize that we already have dairy programmes going on at other agricultural institutions, particularly Kemptville College. We have a dairy research programme going on at the Ridgetown College as well, and a very extensive dairy research programme going on at Elora.

I do not think that you can fragment these programmes and provide duplication in the New Liskeard area. It is purely and simply a matter of production of milk there, to supply a local market. It seems to me that with the increasing demand there is for beef feeder cattle in this country, and with the facilities of pasture and relatively inexpensive land in northern Ontario, we should be concentrating on beef cattle production up there. That is why we have so directed our programme, and I really do not intend to change it right at the moment.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there are different climatic conditions in northern Ontario—drastically different—and the fact that the market increase is apparently sufficient to warrant increasing production, would this not be a good reason?

I would think this would be a good reason for the minister to consider maybe shifting a dairy programme from one of the southern stations to the station at New Liskeard so that we would have better evidence, perhaps of what we would need in the future development of fluid milk production in a northern climate. I would think that New Liskeard would be an excellent place to test such a programme.

The next point I want to find out from the minister is the extent to which the livestock services include encouragement of export markets. We have witnessed in the past strong export sales in the Holstein breed particularly. Has any of this been due to support of this programme toward export sales? I would appreciate knowing to what extent we have co-operated in encouraging the export sales of cattle.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am sure my hon. friend would realize, if he would speak to his friend from Oxford county, that the Holstein people run their own show, and they run a good show. I know of no group of breeders of any kind of livestock in the world today, certainly in Ontario and Canada, that can compare with the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada—

Mr. Innes: They are always there to collect a grant, though.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —in running their own business and developing export markets. I pay great tribute to what they have been able to do over the past.

The beef people have been involved to some degree in expanding export markets. We have helped along that line with food council efforts, working through the livestock commissioner as well. We have made a grant to the Ontario Beef Breeds Association for the expansion of export sales and trade missions to countries where we hope they may be able to expand sales.

We were pleased, as well, to have the opportunity of showing some Ontario cattle to a delegation from Russia this past winter. They came here, looked at our herds and, I believe, were favourably impressed, and I hope will end up purchasing some cattle. I understand that some offers have been made. I do not know whether or not they have been accepted, but it is encouraging to know that this is a breakthrough as far as we are concerned in being able to sell some cattle to Russia. Previously, they seemed to rush off to western Canada.

We have some extremely good beef herds here in Ontario, and we are delighted to know that they are exhibiting some interest here as well. We want to work with the OBBA and our livestock commissioner is attempting to be of service through the food council grants to that group of livestock breeders.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear about that encouragement of beef exports. The particular market I would bring to the minister's attention is the Japanese market as an export possibility for our beef breeds.

The rapid increase in incomes of the Japanese people is increasing the demand for beef there substantially. They have made tremendous progress in the last decade in the improvement of their dairy herds. Their dairy herds are coming well up to some of our North American herds in their productivity, but the beef herds are well behind. In view of the fact that they forecast a substantial increase in beef consumption, it is a market we should carefully study.

The Americans have looked at this market and they have done a rather unique and rather interesting job of developing an interest on the part of the Japanese beef farmers in American beef animals. They have sent a man over to Japan. They have not had Japanese delegations coming to the States, but they have sent a practical beef farmer over to Japan and helped him to establish an experimental farm, so to speak.

There the Japanese can see American animals on test. They can see the improvement of crossbreeding with the Japanese breeds. The Japanese farmers are far more impressed by the practical farm operation that has been developed there than by any visits which delegations from Japan have made over here. I therefore suggest to the minister that perhaps he encourage the development of a programme by the beef breeders whereby they establish, in co-operation with the province, a sample operation in Japan. If they have it operated by a man with practical experience and background, and I think we will find that through that outlet a tremendous market for our beef animals can be developed.

I suggest that in any country where the per capita income is rising very quickly we will have a natural outlet for our best beef animals. In view of the fact we have a good beef improvement programme hereon which to base such a programme, I would ask the minister to look into this possibility.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I appreciate that suggestion, Mr. Chairman. We have already been in touch with the federal government who have made some trial shipments of chilled beef to Japan already. We have a trade mission planned for beef breeders to Japan, or at least through the OBBA and our food council, for later this summer to explore the possibilities of introducing some of Ontario's beef breeding cattle to the Japanese people.

I do not know what the possibilities are. I think they are perhaps more limited as far as beef breeding animals are concerned than they have been for dairy animals.

I recall my predecessor as the member of the Legislature for Middlesex North, the late Tom Patrick. Many, many years ago, long before he was in this Legislature, he took the first shipment of Holstein cattle over to Japan. If memory serves me right, that was the case.

That was a long time ago and we know that the Japanese have bought a great many high quality Holstein cattle here in Canada in the last few years particularly. But here again, it is for the production of milk.

We hear rumours—and I do not know how sound or valid they are—that there may be an opportunity to send feeder cattle to Japan, that is feeder calves for feeder cattle purposes. That to me looks a little peculiar. I would think it would be easier to transport the beef than it would be to transport the live cattle and then feed them out after they get there because the Japanese do not have a surplus of grain. But these are areas which we are exploring, and we hope to be able to capitalize on every opportunity we can to develop trade with our Japanese friends.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the Japanese beef breeders that one of my sons visited last year—when he judged a couple of shows over there—expressed a very keen interest in this American project where an actual farm operation was set up. It was not just somebody coming over to try to interest them in buying something, but showing them what could be done, particularly crossing with their native Japanese breeds. I think that in view of the tremendous population of 100 million people and that when they start to increase their beef consumption at the rate that is projected—it is actually increasing very rapidly now—we should think in terms of not just shipping beef to them but actually helping them improve their own production. That is certainly a good way to help our own purebred breeders over here.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would be delighted to add a word of comment here. I understand the Japanese have been here and already have purchased some high-quality purebred beef cattle to take back to Japan. As the hon. member knows, there is an on-going project of Japanese farm people coming to Ontario every year to spend a year on our farms and then going back to Japan. All of these things will add to the importance of what my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. Deacon: I think the minister will find that the number of cattle being exported from the United States to Japan is many times greater than here.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further in livestock services?

Mr. Innes: Yes, I would like to ask the minister about his reply to the bull-testing programme. Is it going to be stepped up, or what is the possibility?

Mr. Sargent: Mark this down in case he gives the expected date.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: During 1970, 400 breeders tested 1,676 bulls and this was an increase of nearly 400 over the previous year.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce on livestock services.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend will permit me—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon:—one brief comment and question. Is the minister aware of the practice in some of the finer restaurants in Ontario of importing their beef products, steaks and roasts from the United States? Is he aware of some special processes of butchering, cutting and ageing and preparing for restaurant services that is not available in Canada?

I have felt that we should be able to produce the best there is and I have been surprised to be told by chefs at some of our best restaurants—some of the good ones not too far from the Parliament Buildings—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot afford to get to those.

Mr. Nixon: Of course, the hon. minister would never get to them. He would just go to Murray's.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I never get to them. I cannot afford to go to them.

Mr. Nixon: —that the best beef cuts are imported. It seems ridiculous to me, but I must admit they have some great steaks.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, it is a possibility. I must confess that I do not know. I do know that there is a process in the United States being employed by some of the packing houses of pre-packaging beef and ageing it in a particular way to send cuts out to the restaurant and hotel trade. It may be that some of these have found their way into the Canadian market. I do not know.

There is a movement both ways across the international border of various types of commodities, and it is possible that some of those beef cuts are coming in. I do not know.

Mr. Sargent: The best beef cuts in are Grey and Bruce.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make a few comments with respect to a research project that was carried out at the Lacombe research station in Alberta having to do with the testing of bulls as a finished product and comparing them with the steer on the rails.

The information that I have has indicated that this has been a very successful experiment. Interestingly enough, the research station there found that bulls were superior to steers in a number of ways. First of all, in the lean content—

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member said “a number of ways,” I can think of one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gaunt: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if you want any clarification on that last part of the statement I would be prepared to give it, but I am talking exclusively about “on the rail”—and the lean content averaged approximately—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Did my hon. friend say clarification or demonstration?

Mr. Gaunt: I said “clarification.”

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you.

Mr. Gaunt: There was 30 per cent more lean on the bulls than there was on the steers; there was 10 per cent more rib eye area in the bulls as compared to the steers; and there was three per cent greater in the per cent deboned, defatted product—whatever that means—and I am not sure what it means.

In any case I was not aware of this until I was talking to a farmer in my particular part of the country, and he was telling me that as far as he was concerned he was not going to put in any more steers, he was going to put in bulls because they seem to be superior.

There are some obvious problems with that type of operation, but obviously he felt that he could make more money by doing this type of thing. The research station found out, according to their studies that in economic terms the chance of 0.2 inches in the average rib fat is worth approximately $1.50 per hundredweight—cold carcass weight—at the current beef prices.

When that is translated into 100 bulls as compared to 100 steers that is a substantial increase in one's income.

An hon. member: That is a lot of bull.

Mr. Gaunt: It certainly means quite a lot to a farmer if he were operating on that sort of scale. I am wondering, in view of this, if the department has undertaken similar studies at any of its research stations? Has the minister got anything of a comparable nature in the bull-steer fight to indicate that this would be a good course to pursue for our commercial farmers across the province?

Of course, if everyone wants to buy bulls instead of steers perhaps the advantage will be somewhat limited, but I am just wondering if in fact the department has been doing anything along this line.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the department has not been doing anything in this respect as far as research is concerned, but the theory which my hon. friend has advanced has been confirmed by studies that have been conducted under—well I should not say under supervision but certainly with the full knowledge of the meat section of the Ontario Agricultural College, University of Guelph.

There are a good many people who substantiate what the member has related about projects going on in his own area. I visited a farm in my own township the other day where there were 1,200 steers. There are 250 bulls in one feed lot and the steers from the same ranch are in another feed lot, and believe me they are doing pretty well. I think the farmer is more than pleased with the feed conversion. If he is just as happy when they are on the rail as he is now he is going to be interested in buying more bull calves next fall.

Mr. Gaunt: According to my friend he has indicated that the processing plants are very interested in this. They are working with him and they are prepared to give him a premium based on their knowledge and experience in this regard.

It seems to me it might be a good project to undertake either at the University of Guelph or one of the other research stations across the province. I think it would be advantageous for us to have some first-hand experience by way of feed consumption and feed conversion when one compares the one against the other. I would like the minister to consider that. I think this would be a good approach.

One other thing I wanted to talk about—here again I am using my own experience of farmers in my own area. In this case it is only one farmer. There is one farmer in my area who is importing Limousin cattle from France. This breed of cattle is quite exclusive. I believe he told me concerning the latest heifer that he got over from France, that he considers that if he were to resell that animal in this country, he could demand at least $20,000 for it.

That is a pretty fee, but apparently these cattle have a number of desirable features, one of which is their very rapid rate of gain for meat purposes. Is the department keeping up to date with this type of thing and does it have precise figures as to what these animals will do—the performance of them in tests and this kind of information?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: As you know, the research institute of our department works very closely with the cattlemen's services in agricultural research work as well, and this research is being done on the various imported breeds. Now, there are many others, Simmental—Charolais is one of the first and the CDA has worked very extensively in this field of determining the crossbreeding possibilities and potential of using these similar lines of cattle.

There is no doubt that they do offer some possibilities which I think are very much worth exploring. However, I do not think that we should just throw out all of the advantages that we have gained through the English breeds that have been developed to such a high quality in this country. Perhaps there is a place for cross-breeding here. But there are two sides to the story of using these imported breeds.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on livestock services?

Vote 102, item 6, agreed to.

On item 7, junior farmer loans:

Hon. G. Carton (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman.
